8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The Fair Havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.‡

9 ¶ Now, when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12 ¶ And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice,§ and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth‖ toward the south-west and north-west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

14 But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.*

15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda,† we had much work to come by the boat:‡

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps,§ undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands,‖ strake sail,* and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 ¶ But, after long abstinence, Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, [g] and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now [h] I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be [i] no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, [k] whose I am, and whom I serve, 24 Saying, [l] Fear not, Paul; [m] thou must be brought before Cesar: and, lo, [n] God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: [o] for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon [p] a certain island.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria,* about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms; and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors† out of the stern,‡ and wished for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship,

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, [q] Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.§

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And, while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.‖

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat; for this is [r] for your health:* [s] for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and [t] gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all [u] of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, [x] they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat† into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with ‡ Lasea.—A city on the south-east coast of Crete, not mentioned by any ancient geographer.—Ed.

§ Phenice receives a minute description, to distinguish it from Phenice, or Phenicia, on the continent.—Ed.

‖ Which lieth, &c.—Rather, "looking towards the south-east and north-west." In the absence of any special geographical description, it seems probable that the harbour was a bay with an island in front, affording two entrances, one from the south-east, and another from the north-west, and thus completely sheltered from every wind.—Ed.

* Euroclydon signifies "an eastern storm;" most probably what the ancients called Typhon, and the moderns, Levanter—a tempestuous whirlwind or hurricane, blowing in all directions from north-east to south-east.—Ed.

† Clauda is supposed to be an island on the south-west coast of Crete, now called Gaza.—Ed.

‡ The boat, among the ancient navigators was, generally, towed after the ship; for before the discovery of the mariner's compass, navigation being merely coasting, it was important to have the boat always ready for communicating with the shore. The storm being now high, they found great difficulty in getting their boat on board.—Ed.

§ Helps.—Most probably internal stays to support the sides of the vessel, and to resist, and give effect to the "undergirding," by cables passed under the keel and over the deck. See Horace, Book i. Ode 14. and Anson's Voyage, p. 24. 4to.—Ed.

‖ The quicksands.—Syrtis Major, or Gulf of Sidra, believing themselves to be near the coast of Africa.—Ed.

* The word translated "sail" is of uncertain signification, and has also been rendered "mast, or yard." Bloomfield holds it to have been the mast; and observes, that by the ancients masts were constructed with a kind of socket, so that they could be lowered at pleasure. And this construction is, no doubt, still common with European vessels prepared to pass under bridges, but is by no means probable in vessels intended for the open sea, and capable of carrying 276 souls (ver. 37). Neither is it likely that in such weather there would be any sail set; but if any, there would certainly be no more than would enable the vessel to steer, with a view to keeping off the coast, which the mariners believed to lie to leeward. The σκευος is, therefore, more probably the gigantic "yard," such as appears in some of the paintings of Pompeii, with the main sail brailed around it, or some close-reefed sail which the violence of the storm compelled the mariners to take in.—Ed.

The Roman practice, however, generally was, to cast the anchors from the prow. But this was a ship of Alexandria; and it is attested by Sir J. (7) During two years he continues, though a prisoner, preaching the gospel without hinderance: 30, 31.

AND when they were escaped, then they knew that the [a] island was called Melita.*

2 And the [b] barbarous† people [c] showed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 ¶ And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, [d] No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 [e] And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that [f] he was a god.

7 ¶ In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, [g] and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10 [h] Who also honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

11 ¶ And after three months we departed in a ship of [i] Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.*

12 And landing at Syracuse,† we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium:‡ and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli;§

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them [k] seven days: and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and The Three Taverns;‖ [l] whom when Paul saw,* he thanked God, and took courage.

16 And when we came to [m] Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: [n] but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though [o] I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans:

18 [p] Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, [q] I was constrained to appeal unto Cesar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you; because that for the [r] hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVII.—The passage of saints through this world is often extremely tempestuous. Yet frequently the Lord gives them repeated favours from whom they might have expected the hardest usage. Kindly he communes with, and comforts them when terrors prevail all around them. By them he sends his warnings of danger and messages of peace. And he not only preserves them, but others for their sakes, from raging seas and blood-thirsty men. God can exactly foretell what has no necessary dependence on second causes: and whatever be his means, whether winds, waves, or mariners, their influence is necessarily connected with the end which he has decreed and foretold. —Thrice happy are they who can speak of him as their Proprietor, Master, and Friend. Great confidence may they repose in his promise, and may expect safety and comfort from his hand. While they, who trust to their fancied wisdom rather than to his word, most surely plunge themselves into mischief and shame. We owe great thanks to him for our daily bread, as well as for our hopes or enjoyment of remarkable deliverances. Yet how tasteless is our necessary provision when all hope of life is taken away, and there is like to be no more occasion for it; and insignificant is all the wealth of this world, when a storm of raging elements may make us glad to part with it for our own preservation.—Sailors had need to live in union to Christ and fellowship with God, who alone can preserve them from the jaws of destruction. And it is proper that all should sympathize with them

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for [s]as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.

23 ¶ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom [t]he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 [u]And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, [x]Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers,

26 Saying, [y]Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive:

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that [z]the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and [a]had great reasoning among themselves.

that do business in great waters.—But thrice happy are those souls which are made to renounce the broken covenant of works, and their own self-righteousness and strength, that, through Jesus' merits and grace, they may, through much tribulation, get safe to the celestial country.

Reflections upon Chap. XXVIII.—Barbarous heathens often far exceed many professed Christians in their kind compassion to shipwrecked mariners. And richly are they here rewarded of God with the healing of their sick, and no doubt much instruction for the salvation of their souls. We must never hastily judge of the external dispensations of Providence, nor run from one extreme to another. There is great danger in thinking uncharitably of the distressed, or too honourably of the prosperous. And it is God's will, not idols or charms, that can render our attempts successful. If we sincerely aim at honouring God, he will procure sufficient honour, comfort, and kindness for us, go where we will. But awful is the enmity of carnal minds against Christ,—that his religion, notwithstanding all its purity, dignity, and benevolence, should be everywhere spoken against,—and that any should be loaded with chains on his account.—And for the honour of the gospel, and the advantage of souls, ministers should be careful to prevent, avert, or remove, whatever groundless prejudices can be conceived against them. But let them do what they will, the gospel will be to many a savour of death unto death. And dreadful indeed is the experience of this. But it is a great mercy if any are made to believe; and if ministers can be useful, even under persecuting restraints, and can devote their house, as well as their heart, lips, and hands, to the service of Jesus Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

The "Acts of the Apostles" possesses all the characteristics of other scriptural histories—brevity; impartiality; selection of what is valuable for instruction; neglect of what is merely curious; tenderness towards the persons of the wicked, but unflinching condemnation of their sins; a continuous reference of all events to God, with an overwhelming desire to promote his glory by the conversion of sinners. The whole book presents, not so much a history as a specimen, of the primitive church; but that specimen amply sufficient, not merely to attest the miraculous origin of Christianity, but also to exhibit those moral qualities—those graces of the Spirit—by which, as "outward and ordinary means," the gospel was originally propagated; and by which alone it can continue to be propagated, where miraculous powers are not bestowed—graces of the Spirit, more or less common to all true believers, and without which, even the eye of the prophet penetrating the depths of futurity, the tongue of inspiration expounding all mysteries, with the arm of faith miraculously removing mountains—are all "nothing," 1 Cor. 13. 2. Accordingly it will be seen that one of the first moral qualities—one of the first graces—of the primitive church was absolute dependence upon God, evidencing itself in an earnest desire for his Spirit, and in continued waiting upon his promise and providence in prayer, chap. 1. 4, 14, 24. & 2. 46. & 6. 4—6. & 9. 11. & 10. 9. & 12. 5. & 16. 16. A second distinguishing feature of the primitive church appears in the spirit of liberality of the rich towards the poor, and their personal indifference, as individuals, to the acquirement and accumulation of wealth, chap. 2. 44, 45. & 5. 4. & 8. 18—20. A third characteristic may be seen in the order and efficiency with which their temporal affairs were conducted, as manifested in that most difficult department, the comfortable support of the poor, chap. 6. 1—6. This part of primitive Christianity was, most probably, derived from the Mosaic institutions, in which provision for the widow, the fatherless, the poor, and even the stranger, occupied a conspicuous place. And, in this characteristic, had the modern imitated the primitive churches more, the interference of human law, on behalf of the poor, would have been quite unnecessary; and, although it is certain pauperism would not have been annihilated, there is little question that it would have been diminished; and the unexpensive machinery of the deaconship would have been amply sufficient for distinguishing between the really necessitous and the indolent impostor, and collection and outlay of the ample finance of benevolence. A fourth characteristic of the primitive church may be seen in the profound respect with which the apostles regarded, in things temporal, "the powers that be," and the faithfulness and courage with which, in things spiritual, they declared their determination to "obey God rather than man," chap. 4. 13—20. & 16. 37. & 25. 11. A fifth speciality in the primitive church is founded in the coexistence of a fixed and itinerant or superintendent ministry. The fixed ministry lay in the hands of the deacons managing the temporalities, and of the elders labouring in the spiritualities (chap. 6. 1—6. & 14. 23. & 20. 17, 28); the itinerant or superintendent in the hands of the apostles and their companions, as qualified and designated by the Holy Spirit, and prayerfully appointed by their brethren (chap. 11. 22, 23. & 13. 2, 3. & 15. 36—41. & 16. 4—13). Upon this characteristic there is immediately ingrafted a sixth—the primitive was essentially, if not totally, a missionary church—a church of missionaries. But there is a speciality in this characteristic not to be overlooked—the primitive church did not intend to become missionary—the very apostles did not at first understand either the nature, object, or extent of their original commission. And when the eyes of an apostle were opened, as it were, by light from heaven, the body of the church took offence, and he was necessitated to justify himself for obeying a heavenly vision, and preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, chap. 10. 9—16, 34, 35, 45. & 11. 1—3, 18. Christianity alone has been able to grapple with and overcome the prejudices of caste and colour. Christianity alone infuses a heaven-born ambition—an ambition that aims at universal conquest, and universal monarchy—a conquest of truth over error, of love over enmity, and a monarchy of which the meek and lowly Jesus is the sole King and Head. Among the many internal evidences of Christianity, the early eradication of national prejudices, and the cordial reconciliation and fellowship of the Jews with the Gentiles, presents one, in the form of a moral transformation, never to be accounted for by any power inferior to that of Him in whose hands are the hearts of all men, and who turneth them (at his pleasure) as the rivers of water in the valleys. The last characteristic of the primitive church specially demanding notice, is presented in the humility of its rulers, and the simplicity of its government. This is no place for any discussion of the comparative merits of mere forms of church government. But one fact every true Christian will admit—that whatever form approaches nearest to that historically depicted in the Acts of the Apostles, must be acknowledged as the true model, by all who seek and find their religion in the Bible, and the Bible alone. But to whatever conclusion Christians may come, concerning the original form of the church and its binding nature as a model to future times, one thing they will do well to observe—that no outward form can supply the lack of truth and charity (1 Cor. 13. 1—6); a world renounced and self-denied (Mat. 16. 24. Rom. 12. 1, 2); of Christ crucified before the eyes, and of Christ reigning in the heart (Gal. 3. 1. Col. 1. 27); that heart renewed by the indwelling Spirit of God, and thereby rendered an abiding place for the Father and the Son, (1 Cor. 3. 16. John 14. 23). Without these, ministers and churches are "nothing," with these, they either have all that they need, or, if anything be wanting, or anything superfluous, God will assuredly reveal it to them in his own time, Phil. 3. 15.

Before closing our remarks on the book of Acts, let us direct a moment's attention, not to the whole, but to a few peculiar features in the character of Paul. (1) One of the first features of his character, as exemplified in his actions, is that perfect and undivided energy with which he devoted himself to one object. As a Jewish persecutor he did nothing but persecute; as a Christian apostle he did nothing but journey, visit, pray, preach, and write. Even when by a necessity arising from the poverty of a persecuted church, he was compelled to labour for his daily bread, he still continued to "reason in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuade both the Jews and the Gentiles," chap. 18. 4. And when this interval was past, with what undivided purpose and energy he again devoted himself to his one work, the brief notices in the "Acts," and the cursory review in one of his epistles, will sufficiently demonstrate. Hear his own account, the truth of which was right well known to the churches:—"In journeyings often—in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches," 2 Cor. 11. 26. (2) Immediately connected with the foregoing trait of character, or rather intimately and inseparably blended with it, appears that endurance of fatigue which seems to imply an iron-like constitution of body, with that endurance of insults, injuries, and ingratitude which depends upon a crucified spirit. (3) It is unnecessary to record more than a passing remark upon the personal courage with which he was endowed, which, in prophetic view of "bonds and imprisonments," could easily reply to all the dissuasion of his friends, "none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself." (4) With similar brevity may be noted that remarkable decision by which he was distinguished. When even Peter vacillated, Paul remained unshaken; when Peter "was to be blamed," Paul "withstood him to the face." A truth once confirmed, he never doubts; a prejudice once uprooted, he never suffers to be replanted; a purpose once formed, no obstruction can induce him to relax his efforts for its accomplishment. He uniformly acts as one who has "set the Lord before him," and, therefore, whatever may betide him, can never be unduly moved. (5) The last characteristic we shall select from among many, may be discovered in that perfect readiness with which he meets the difficulties of every emergency in his laborious and eventful life. No doubt this, like every other quality noticed, was "the gift of God," in fulfilment of his gracious promise to his disciples of a "strength" sufficient for "their day." Still we are not the less, upon that account, to note or admire the gift; in fact, our admiration should only be the greater, when to the worth of the possessor is superadded the grace of the donor. Every remarkable incident of his life exemplifies the readiness of the apostle—take the examples of his use of the Greek tongue with Lysias (chap. 21. 37), his immediate transition to Hebrew, when he addresses the Jews, who, be it observed, did not generally speak the Hebrew, but who nevertheless honoured it above all languages. Note also the readiness with which he justly put forward his faith in the resurrection, whereby he roused the Pharisees against the Sadducees, while he engaged the Pharisees themselves to a more attentive consideration of the evidences of the resurrection of Jesus, chap. 23. 6. Mark again the readiness and graphic accuracy with which he distinguishes between Felix and Agrippa, seizing at a glance, the distinctive peculiarities of each, flattering neither, but conciliating both, chap. 24. 10. & 26. 2, 3. With similar readiness he appeals to Cesar (chap. 25. 11); for the time had now arrived when, had he willingly returned to Jerusalem, he had been guilty of his own death. But the most striking example of this wonderful readiness for all emergencies appears during his voyage to Rome, a readiness the more wonderful, that there appears no trace of his previous acquaintance with maritime affairs; nevertheless we find him (chap. 27. 9,) admonishing the captain of the ship, and officers of the imperial army of the future disasters of the voyage. When the cowardly sailors are about to become the first to desert their ship, we find him detaining them on board as the agents and securities of the general safety; and, when crew and passengers were alike exhausted with labour and fasting, we find him again by precept, example, and promise, cheering their drooping spirits; and when they had escaped from shipwreck, with the same characteristic readiness he "gathers a bundle of sticks, lays them on the fire," and, when bitten by a viper—the emblem of Satan's enmity when God's dear children escape from the moral storms he is permitted to raise—we find him, unmoved, cast the venomous creature back into the fire—the emblem of that judgment "prepared for the devil and his angels." Now in all these instances—and many others might easily be adduced—Paul certainly stands assimilated to the character of our Lord beyond any other apostle. Our Lord, it may be justly said, was never taken unawares or unprepared. He alone fully realized the words of the psalm (16. 8,) "I have set the LORD always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved:" and Paul, in an eminent degree realized his promise, (Mat. 10. 19), because, in an eminent degree, he was filled with his Spirit.—ED.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE ROMANS.

ROME was, and is, the chief city of Italy, and was long the mistress of the then known world. To the Christians there, though not converted by his ministrations, Paul, as the apostle of the Gentiles, about A.D. 60, wrote this epistle, in order to establish their minds in the leading principles of the gospel, and direct them to a suitable improvement of it. After an introduction, asserting his own apostolic mission, and commending their faith; chap. i. 1—17: he represents both Gentiles and Jews as being so sinful, that they could not possibly be justified before God by their own works; chap. i. 18:—ii, iii. 1—20: how God's free grace reigns, through Jesus Christ's righteousness, to the justification of the greatest sinners; iii. 21:—iv, v: what obligations to holiness in heart and life are laid upon believers, by the happy freedom and rich privileges which they enjoy in him; vi—viii: and while he traces up all new covenant blessings to the eternal and sovereign purpose of God as their true original, he points out how the just rejection of the Jews for their unbelief, and the gracious calling of the Gentiles by the gospel, without any regard to their foreseen good qualities or works, was exactly answerable thereto; ix—xi: and, finally, exhorts to a multitude of personal and relative duties, incumbent on these Romans as members of the commonwealth, and especially of the church; xii—xvi.

Letter-writing upon sacred subjects was an ancient practice among the prophets of the Lord. Thus Elijah not only wrote (2 Chr. xxi. 12—15) to warn Jehoram to flee from the wrath to come; but he appears to have written the letter before his translation to heaven, that it might come as with all the solemnity and sanction of one sending a message from the world of spirits. Thus, again, we find Jeremiah (ch. xxix) writing a letter to the captives in Babylon, exhorting them to quietness, to beware of false prophets, and promising their return after seventy years. Other portions of the prophecies seem also to have been written and sent as letters—such as several of the "burdens" of particular countries or cities, of which the chief use must have lain in their speedy communication to the parties addressed. See for example Is. xiii. 1. & xv. 1. & xvii. 1, &c., Jer. xxxvi. 1—10, 18, 32. & xliv. 1—14. Ezek. xxviii. 1, 2, &c. Thus also the prophecy of Haggai (chap. i. 1,) seems to have been a letter to Zerubbabel and Joshua; and Malachi, the last of the prophets, seems to have written his "burden," (chap. i. 1.) first as a general epistle to all Israel, and then as a special lesson of rebuke and instruction to the priests, chap. ii. 1.

Of the New Testament a large portion is composed of letters, some to individuals and some to communities. Among these the epistle to the Romans occupies a conspicuous place. By consent of all historic antiquity it is ascribed to Paul. It appears to have been the fifth of his apostolic letters, but is placed at the head of the collection, either because Rome was the imperial city, or because it is the longest and most comprehensive of his epistles, embracing the case both of Jews and Gentiles, and presenting the general doctrines of Christianity in a regular and systematic form.

This epistle has always attracted the peculiar attention of interpreters; "yet no considerable difference of interpretation (observes Haldane) has ever been given of its contents by those who have renounced their own wisdom, and have determined to follow implicitly the obvious meaning of the word of God." In the first chapter, after declaring his own rank and authority in the church, the apostle proceeds by directing attention to the Son of God, in his incarnation in time, and his Divine nature from eternity, as the great object of the gospel which he was commissioned to proclaim. Then, after an affectionate Christian salutation to the church, he proceeds to announce the doctrine he intends to inculcate and establish, viz., that the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;" and then presents the reason and the means, because "therein is the righteousness of God revealed;" and that unless such righteousness had been brought in and rendered available, all men must have perished, because "the wrath of God (has been) revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." Accordingly, in the first chapter, the apostle proceeds, by an appeal to facts, to establish the charge of "ungodliness and unrighteousness" against the Gentiles, who had outraged reason in rejecting the Creator, and adopting the creatures as their gods, while they violated even the fragments of the law written in their hearts, disregarded the admonitions of their own consciences, and took their pleasure in sin and sinners, though aware of the righteous judgment of a holy God against all the workers of iniquity. In the second chapter, the Jews, who would have lent a ready ear to the indictment and condemnation of the Gentiles, are themselves to be arraigned. But, before they could well be aware of what was to follow, like David before Nathan, they pronounce their own doom, by concurring in a sentence by which an indefinite character is pronounced "inexcusable" when he himself condemns another, and yet is guilty of the same crimes. The Jews are then proved guilty of violating the law delivered at Sinai, and instructed in the vanity of trusting to outward ceremonies and ordinances, while the heart is polluted with sin, and alienated from God. In the third chapter, the apostle proceeds to arraign both Jews and Gentiles under one common indictment, and draws from the Old Testament, and especially from the Psalms, that anatomy of the human heart, a fearful picture of their common depravity and guilt. Thus having proved, by an undeniable appeal to facts, that every man in his natural state lies under the just condemnation of God, because a rebel against him, whether as revealed in the visible creation, in the hearts and consciences of men, or in the positive ordinances and eternal principles of a written law, he arrives at the inevitable conclusion, that by obedience to the law no living man shall be justified; for that so far from justifying him, each form of this threefold revelation proves him to be a transgressor, and therefore worthy of condemnation.

The way is thus prepared for the grand display of the grace and mercy of God announced in the gospel. What the law could not do, not from any deficiency in itself, but owing to the depravity of man, God has fully accomplished. Man has no righteousness of his own, but God has provided a righteousness for him, a righteousness provided solely by grace and received solely by faith; it is placed to the account of the believer, without the smallest respect either to his previous or subsequent obedience. Yet so far from being contrary to the justice of God, this method of justification "freely by grace" illustrates his justice, and vindicates his former dealings with men. So far from making the law void, it establishes the law in all honour and authority. This way of salvation equally applies to all, both Jews and Gentiles, men of every nation and of every character; there is no difference here, for all, without exception, are sinners.

In the fourth chapter the apostle proceeds to obviate certain objections. First, that drawn from Abraham's alleged justification by works when he delivered up his son at the commandment of God (see Jam. 2. 21—24.) Now this he admits, with James, to be a justification before men, a thing capable of being shown outwardly by one to another (comp. Rom. 4. 2. with Jam. 2. 18.), but demonstrates to be no justification before God, because no present obedience, however conspicuous, can possibly obliterate past sin, and because this is a work to which grace alone is adequate. Secondly, he obviates the Jewish objection against the justification of the Gentiles, who, because "salvation was of (began with) the Jews" would have confined it to them, or to proselytes of circumcision. This the apostle obviates, by showing that the promise of God was made, the faith of Abraham professed, and the righteousness of God bestowed, before circumcision, when Abraham was still as a Gentile, and that circumcision was a mere seal of that righteousness received by faith, which he already had; that so, being of God, pronounced a "father of many nations," he might become the representative and fountain-head of all upon whom God, by his Spirit, should confer like precious faith in the Saviour. While thus obviating objections, the apostle casts much additional light upon his great topic, and in order to complete his view, describes in the fifth chapter the blessed effects connected with a state of justification, especially peace with God, access to the throne of grace, hope of glory, ability for all trials, deliverance from wrath, joy in God, eternal salvation and reign in glory through the Lord Jesus Christ. But now, as free grace in the justification of a sinner might be supposed to set aside the necessity of obedience to God, the apostle proceeds in the sixth and seventh chapters to prove, that so far from this being the case, his doctrine establishes the only sufficient grounds of a cheerful, loving, and holy obedience. This foundation is union with the Redeemer, through that faith by which the believer is justified. Whereas the law, instead of sanctifying, operates by its restraints to stimulate the corruptions of the human heart, and rouses them into action; while, at the same time, it condemns all who are under it. But, through their union with Christ, believers are delivered from the law; and being under grace, which produces love, they are enabled to bring forth fruit acceptable to God. The law, however, is holy, just and good, and is employed by the Spirit of God to discover the nature and extent of sin in the heart, and thereby to demonstrate the value of the remedy by which this disease is to be healed. As a general conclusion, the believer's entire freedom from condemnation, through union with his glorious Head, and his consequent sanctification, are both asserted in the eighth chapter,—effects, neither of which could ever have been accomplished by the law. The doctrine of God's sovereignty occupies the greater part of the ninth chapter; in the end of which, and throughout the tenth, the error of the Jews in seeking righteousness by the law, and refusing the righteousness which is by faith, is clearly exhibited. After which he propounds the freeness of salvation through the Redeemer, and the certainty that all who accept it shall be saved. And since faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, the necessity of preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles is inferred and asserted. In the eleventh chapter the doctrine of election is resumed, and affirmed to be wholly of grace. Upon which is founded a most consolatory view of the issue of the present dispensation, in the final ingathering of the Jews with the fulness of the Gentile nations. He then proceeds to vindicate the providence of God, both toward Jews and Gentiles; showing that God was acting upon a plan which would finally issue in the fullest manifestations of the divine attributes of wisdom, justice, and mercy. While, as it were, lost in the height and depth, and length and breadth of his subject, the apostle prostrates himself in humble adoration, and summons all to join him in ascribing the glory of salvation to God alone! As the natural result of correct views of God's providence and grace, the apostle, in the twelfth chapter, proceeds to inculcate the moral duties of the Christian life. These he founds on the mercies of God through Jesus Christ, and sums up in two points,—the body for a sacrifice, the spirit for renewal. And here it may be proper to observe that, as in the visible world, we infer that nothing short of divine wisdom and power could have produced the heavens, (Ps. 19. 1.) so, nothing short of divine inspiration could have produced the morality of the Scriptures. The whole array of philosophers can produce no such gem of morality as the twelfth chapter of this epistle. So many ideas in so few words are nowhere, unless in Scripture, again to be found. Paul was either the prince of all philosophers, or he was inspired. Philosophers will not acknowledge the first point; in denying it, however, they establish the second. He was inspired; and the superiority of his moral system to all that unassisted reason could produce, or human depravity tolerate, furnishes an internal evidence to the fact that infidelity, if it could reason, could neither gainsay nor resist. In the thirteenth chapter the apostle proceeds to inculcate the political relations and duties of Christians. They are subjects of a kingdom which is "not of this world," and lest they should conclude that they are, therefore, not also subject to the kingdoms which are "of this world," he inculcates obedience, in things lawful before God, to "the powers that be," without any distinction whatsoever as to mere forms of government. In the fourteenth, and to the thirteenth verse of the fifteenth chapter, he inculcates the duty of mutual forbearance among Christians, in relation to things indifferent; such as observance of days, with abstinence from, or use of, certain meats. These were subjects of keen and irritating discussion in the days of the apostle, though the questions concerning them may now, for a time, have gone to rest; but other things equally indifferent may arise, and have arisen to occupy their room, and the doctrine of forbearance inculcated by the apostle may still find ample room for its patient and charitable exercise. In the succeeding portion of the fifteenth chapter he offers up earnest prayer for the believers at Rome, recounts his apostolic labours, and declares his purpose and hope of visiting them in due time. And, in chapter sixteenth, he concludes with sundry personal notices, with salutary warnings against divisions, and earnest commendations to the grace of God.—Ed.]

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1. I, Paul, who was formerly a bitter enemy of Christianity, and a furious persecutor of its professors, being now graciously honoured to be an obedient and devoted servant of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of sinful men; converted by his wonderful grace; and by his immediate authority, since his exaltation to heaven, appointed one of his distinguished messengers for founding his gospel church, particularly among the Gentiles; and, in consequence of God's choice of me in his eternal purpose, separated and furnished by him;—and by my own voluntary act devoted to publish his intimations of his mind and will concerning the free, the rich, and eternal salvation of Jews and Gentiles through Christ: 2. (Which gracious tidings and offers of mercy and deliverance, though but lately published, in all the light, grace, and glory thereof, are no new contrivance of men, but are wholly of God, who, in former ages, gave manifold hints of them by his inspired prophets, and in his holy and sanctifying oracles; and promised that they should be more fully and plainly revealed in due time: 3. And which especially reveal, hold forth, and offer to men, Jesus Christ, his eternal and only begotten Son, and our only anointed Saviour, and Lord of our faith, worship, and obedience; who, with respect to his human nature or fleshly descent, is, according to the promises, sprung from David, the renowned favourite of God and king of Israel. 4. And as to his divine, absolutely spiritual, and infinitely holy nature, is determinately avowed, openly proclaimed, and convincingly demonstrated, to be the only begotten Son of God, by the resurrection of his dead body through his own power, and the power of the Holy Ghost, to a glorious state of immortality. 5. Through whose merits and intercession, and by whose free gift, I and others have been graciously enriched with special communications of divine favour, saving graces, and ministerial gifts, and honoured with an apostolic office, that, through our labours, multitudes of all nations, Gentiles as well as Jews, might be made obediently to give up their understandings, consciences, and wills, to the authority of God, in believing on and receiving his Son, and spiritually and holily obeying his commandments, that hereby all his perfections might be glorified to the highest in their eternal salvation. 6. Among which highly favoured multitude, ye, who dwell in the chief city of the Gentile world, have, by the grace and power of Christ, been called even to the knowledge, faith, and fellowship of the gospel.) 7. To you, therefore, as objects of my particular care, as the apostle of the Gentiles, and as manifested, 8 First, [f] I thank my God [g] through Jesus Christ for you all, [h] that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

9 For [i] God is my witness, whom [k] I serve [*] with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, [l] that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers;

10 Making request ([m] if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God) to come unto you.

11 For I long to see you, [n] that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

12 That is, [o] that I may be comforted together [†] with you, by [p] the mutual faith both of you and me.

13 Now, I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that [q] oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might [r] have some fruit [‡] among you also, [s] even as among other Gentiles.

14 [t] I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

16 For [u] I am not ashamed of the [x] gospel of Christ: for it is [y] the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to [z] the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

17 For therein is the righteousness of God revealed [a] from faith to faith: [*] as it is written, The just shall live by faith.

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who [b] hold [†] the truth in unrighteousness:

19 [c] Because that which may be known of God is manifest [‡] in them; for God hath showed it unto them.

20 [d] For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; [§] so that they are [e] without excuse:

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, [f] neither were thankful; [g] but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

22 [h] Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools,

23 [i] And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image [‖] made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.

24 [k] Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves:

by the effects of the gospel upon you, to be objects of God's special love, and not only reputed to be, but by your effectual calling rendered holy in your qualities, tempers, and conversation, I, in an earnest and affectionate manner, wish, and authoritatively declare, that the riches of divine grace shall abound, and be delightfully manifested, in your receiving freely and extensively all manner of peace, prosperity, and blessings, from God, as our covenant God and Father, as the original spring and designer of them; and from the Lord Jesus Christ, as the only Mediator, who purchased them by his blood, and conveys them by his Spirit. 8. As what I hear of the work of God among you is great matter of gladness to my soul, though a stranger to you, I cannot forbear offering up the most hearty praises and thanksgivings on your behalf to your and my gracious God, through Jesus Christ as our only Mediator, that your ready reception of the gospel, and your remarkable faith in Christ, manifested by the good fruits of it, notwithstanding the manifold temptations and great opposition you meet with, are spoken of with religious wonder and joy, and with high commendations, among all the churches in the Roman empire. 9. And I can solemnly appeal to that all-seeing and heart-searching God, whom I serve, not in mere outward appearance, or with bodily labours, but, as renewed by his grace, sincerely, affectionately, faithfully, and with full bent of my heart, in publishing, maintaining, recommending, and enforcing the glorious gospel of salvation, of which his Son is the subject and author;—that, in my stated and occasional addresses to him, in a particular manner, I plead that may ye be more and more abundantly filled with all the gifts and graces of his Spirit. 10. And I often entreat, that, if it be for his own glory and your spiritual advantage, he would by his providence remove all hinderances out of the way, and give me a safe and favourable opportunity of coming to, and personally conversing with, you; 11. That, by his blessing upon my instructions, some of you may be furnished with ministerial gifts, and all of you confirmed in the doctrines of the gospel and in your most holy faith, in opposition to all the temptations which you meet with from Satan, seducers, or persecutors; 12. That you and I may rejoice together in the love of God manifested toward us, and in affectionately expressing our mutual love to each other; and may be delightfully satisfied in comparing our spiritual experiences, which manifest the same faith wrought by God in both you and me.—13. Now, my dear brethren in Christ, think not these words are mere compliment, or only expressive of a present blaze of affection; for I have long and often seriously intended and endeavoured to visit you, in order that among you, as well as among other Gentiles, I might be useful in the conversion and edification of many souls; but I have been hitherto hindered by opposition, hardships, or necessary services in other places. 14. For, having freely received my apostolic office, and qualifications for it, I look on myself obliged, in point of duty and gratitude, to improve them, as the Lord shall enable me, for the spiritual advantage of my fellow-sinners of mankind, Jews or Gentiles, polite or rude, learned or unlearned, sagacious or stupid. 15. And gladly would I hazard my reputation, ease, or even my life, to preach to you at Rome the blessed tidings of salvation through Jesus Christ, in the face of all possible opposition, contempt, and danger, as I have already done at Antioch, Philippi, Thessalonica, Athens, and Corinth: 16. For however great men, or others, may contemn, and set themselves against, the gospel, on account of the debasement of its author and principal subject, and of the meanness of such as profess it; or of the artless dress or sublimity of its doctrines, and their contrariety to their own lusts and prejudices; and however they may reproach and ridicule me for espousing and publishing it, I account it my highest honour to avow, preach, and defend it as an illustrious scheme, in which the glory of all the divine perfections is brightly displayed; and which God, by an almighty application of it to men's hearts, renders effectual for their conversion and eternal salvation, be of what nation or rank they will. 17. For in it the transcendently excellent obedience and sufferings of the Son of God in our nature, which God appointed, provided, approves, accepts, and imputes to sinful men, for their full and irrevocable justification to eternal life, is clearly revealed, exhibited, and offered, on the ground of God's faithful testimony, to be received by a faith of his own operation, whether weak or strong, or among Jews or Gentiles. And thus, as the prophet Habakkuk hinted, men become righteous, and live for ever, not by their own good works, but by believing in and receiving Christ.—18. And indeed it is impossible for either Jews or Gentiles to obtain pardon or justification by any other method: for, to begin with the Gentiles, though God has not favoured them with his inspired oracles, he has, in the awful events of his providence, and by the inward convictions of their consciences, warned them that his just and holy nature determines him to punish all their iniquity, whether immediately against himself or against their fellow-creatures; especially as they wickedly and unrighteously stifle, confine, and suppress, whatever notions of right and wrong they have, and will not act according to them. 19, 20. For by the light of reason in their souls, and the works of creation and providence thereby discerned, God has given them such plain manifestations of his infinite perfections, absolute eternity, almighty power, supreme dominion, unbounded wisdom, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth, as renders their contempt of him, and rebellion against him, altogether inexcusable. 21, 22. For when they could not but have some discernment of his being and attributes, they neither conceived of him, nor worshipped him answerably thereto, nor were thankful for the knowledge which they had, or the benefits which they received, but indulged their own groundless and pernicious fancies concerning his nature, and the worship due to him, till, through the depravity of their wills and affections, their inconsiderate minds became infatuated with ignorance and error:—so that they, and especially their Greek philosophers, amidst the highest pretences to uncommon learning and wisdom, became really stupid and senseless in everything pertaining to God and his service. 23. And under the influence of this wilful blindness and depravity of their minds, they debased his honour, in ascribing godhead to the most mutable, perishing, and contemptible creatures, and in representing him by such creatures, as if he had been of the same corporeal and contemptible form. 24—27. To punish their thus setting up false objects of worship, and representing him in so unjust, false, and shameless a manner, and regarding and worshipping the basest of creatures more than himself, God, their infinitely glorious and blessed Creator, Preserver, and Governor, in his righteous judgment, withdrew his abused light and restraints, left them to themselves, and gave them up to their own vicious inclinations, which hurried them, both men and women, into such shocking, lustful, disgraceful, and unnatural abuse of their bodies, as cannot be thought of or mentioned without shame and horror. 28. And because, out of mere enmity against God, they refused to retain, cultivate, or improve, what just notions of him they had, or to search after the knowledge of, or fellowship with him, he, in righteous judgment, delivered them up as persons disapproved and rejected, to their own careless, undiscerning, and disaffected mind, till, under its darkening and malignant influence, they committed the most unnatural, injurious, dishonourable, and detestable enormities. 29. Inwardly filled with the most wicked and abominable inclinations, they abounded in every sinful practice: they abandoned themselves to every form of uncleanness, fornication, adultery, incest, and unnatural lust;—to a base and devilish malignity of temper, doing mischief for mischief's sake; to an eager and insatiable desire after earthly enjoyments,—and, together with an inclination to, and doing of, injuries out of mere malice, they no less abandoned themselves to an envious grudging and repining at the welfare or prosperity of others;—to an unjust, wilful, illegal, malicious, or wanton destroying of men's lives; to strifes, contentions, and quarrellings; to overreach, defraud, and impose on their neighbours by subtle contrivances and falsehoods;—to a habitual practice and custom of doing evil to all around them; and to defame others by sly and artful methods, or under pretences of pity and friendship; 30. Or openly to slander them behind their backs, or while they could not vindicate themselves.—They were also stated and open enemies to the authority, justice, holiness, laws, and government of God, as contrary to their beloved vices; and revilers of men, or outrageous, insolent, or vexatious in their words and deeds towards them. Puffed up with a conceit of their own attainments and enjoyments, they vainly pretended to more than they really had. Not contented with common methods of sinning, they industriously contrived new forms of wickedness: and behaved perversely, disrespectfully, and undutifully, to their parents, paying no regard to their authority, counsels, warnings, or commands. 31. Amidst all their skill in doing evil, they behaved like persons destitute of common sense, reason, or conscience, in everything religious or moral. They were so perfidious, that no promises, contracts, oaths, or engagements, to God or men, could hold them: they had quite defaced or extirpated the common sentiments of humanity towards their fellow-creatures, parents or children. If once offended, they could never be reconciled on the most reasonable terms. And instead of pitying and relieving the miserable, they delighted in cruelty and oppression. 32. And what exceedingly aggravates their complicated and atrocious wickedness, is, that though the light of nature, their own consciences, and the dictates of their philosophers, teach them that such vices expose them to the just vengeance of God, they not only continue and abound in the practice thereof, but even encourage, abet, and delight in such as dare to be as wicked as themselves.

Reflections upon Chap. I.—What a great, a full, a suitable Saviour is God in our nature! For the only begotten Son of God is clearly manifested in our promised, our risen Redeemer. And blessings of grace and glory proceed from him equally as from his Father. How ancient, how excellent is that gospel which exhibits him and his fulness to us sinful men! While he is its author and subject, its great design is to bring both Jews and Gentiles everywhere to faith in, and obedience to him. Therein his righteousness, as our Surety, is revealed and bestowed, and thereby men are powerfully and effectually saved. And marvellous is their honour, and great their happiness, who share its saving effects. It is delightful and edifying to hear of the remarkable grace and holiness of others, and for Christians to communicate their spiritual experiences one to another. Inexpressible is the honour to be divinely called, qualified, diligent, and successful, ministers of Christ. And indispensable is their obligation to a faithful, bold, and laborious preaching of the gospel. Nor ought any opposition or contempt from men to render them ashamed of their work. God's existence and perfections are manifestly marked in his works all around, and in us. And inexcusable then is our rebellion against him, or stifling the natural intimations which he has given us of himself. But, alas, what monsters men become when left to themselves, and abandoned to their own hearts' lusts! There is nothing too absurd for them to intend, or too idolatrous, brutish, unnatural, or shocking, for them to practise. And diabolical is their temper who can take pleasure in wickedness for itself.—Great is the mercy to have the wickedness of our heart restrained, and especially to have it subdued by God's grace. And surely it is impossible for men, to whom such wickedness is natural, to be justified by their own works, or by anything less than the infinitely valuable righteousness of Jesus Christ.

Chap. II.—Ver. 1. Since then God has given to all men knowledge sufficient to render them inexcusable if they abandon themselves to wickedness, ye Jews, and all who are disposed to censure others, must be still more inexcusable and incapable of being justified by your own works; for your censuring and condemning their faults is a practical condemnation of yourselves, who, notwithstanding your greater light, knowledge, and conviction, do the same things, or worse. 2. But from what we know of God's infinite holiness, equity, wisdom, and goodness, we are certain that all his threatenings, condemnations, or punishments, which he will execute upon such, be of what nation, character, or rank they will, are exactly right and just, and according to the declarations which he has made, and answerable to the true state of things and eternal rule of righteousness. 3. Dare then any one of you, who are endued with common sense and reason, and altogether dependent on, and accountable to, God for all your thoughts, words, and deeds, absurdly and injuriously imagine that you shall escape his just condemnation and vengeance, when ye are so forward and dogmatical in arraigning and condemning others for crimes in which ye indulge yourselves? 4. Or, are ye so sordidly ungrateful as to slight, abuse, or pervert, not only the common bounties of his providence, but even his distinguished favours, marvellous patience, and long-suffering, as encouragements to wickedness; never seriously considering, that the obligation, tendency, and design of his multiplied favours, is to overcome your obstinacy, and to make you, with grief and hatred of your sins, turn from them to God in Christ? 5. But according to the natural and wilfully contracted stubbornness

[a] This verse describes the principle of divine judgment: but to the character described, no one has ever attained, save "Jesus Christ the righteous." [§] The doers of the law—if such there be, they shall be justified—for thus saith the law, "he that doeth these things shall live." This again, as in ver. 7, describes a principle of judgment; but who is so self-ignorant as to claim the character!—Ed.

and insensibility of your perverse hearts, are, by your persistence in unbelief, and other wickedness, secretly preparing for yourselves the most fearful condemnation and punishment, to be inflicted in that great and terrible day of the last judgment. 6. For then God will impartially assign and distribute rewards and punishments to all mankind, Jews or Gentiles, small or great, not according to their fallible, mistaken, censorious, or self-flattering judgment, but according, and in proportion to, the good or evil nature or degree of every one's works; 7, 10. Bestowing immortal glory and honour, sweet harmony and delight, and perfection of blessedness in every form upon such, whether Jews or Gentiles, as, from a principle of faith in, and love to Christ, have patiently persevered in good works, and earnestly sought after these great blessings of the new covenant; 8, 9. And heaping the most dreadful and tormenting, but just, punishments upon such as contentiously quarrel with his doctrines, laws, and providential dispensations, and instead of believing and practising what he has revealed to them, give up themselves willingly to a course of unbelief, hatred of him, and other like conduct. 11. For in passing the final decision, and distributing rewards and punishments in the last judgment, he will exactly and impartially proceed according to his own unerring knowledge and righteous rule of judgment, regarding none for their outward circumstances, privileges, professions, or pretences, and disregarding none for that ignorance or wickedness of which they have sincerely repented. 12. The Gentiles, who have sinned merely against the light of nature, without having the benefit of revelation to instruct and reform them, shall be adjudged to more terrible punishments; but they who have contemned and rebelled against the clear light of revelation, and have refused Christ and his salvation, shall, in proportion to the heinous nature of their crimes, be condemned to the most fearful punishments. 16. In that great and awful day, in which God will exactly search out not only the open acts, professions, and pretences, but even the most secret thoughts, dispositions, principles, motives, and ends, of all mankind; and pass decisive, irreversible, and eternally-effective, sentences upon them, by Jesus Christ his Son, and our Mediator, as is plainly declared and testified in that gospel which I preach by his revelation and appointment. 13. Since then it is not men's having or hearing the revealed law, or their perfect fulfilment of all its demands, that can justify any on that occasion, the Jews, however they boast of their own righteousness, will need an infinitely better. 14, 15. And the Gentiles, though not privileged with the revealed oracles of God, manifest, by the small remains or semblances of morality in their practice, that the law of nature, with respect to some general notions of good and evil, truth and falsehood, right and wrong, remains written in their natural rationality, and their consciences accuse, check, and reproach, them when they act contrary thereto, and acquit or excuse them when they do well in any respect;—a sure token that they also must have a better righteousness than their own to justify them before God.——17—20. Ye Jews pride yourselves in being the descendants of Abraham, and the professed people of God, and in having his oracles and ordinances, as if these could justify you before him. Ye boast of your profession of the true God, and his peculiar covenant relation to your people, as if these could secure you from his wrath, and entitle you to all the blessings of time and eternity. Ye pretend to understand the revelations which God has given you, and to be expert in distinguishing truth from error, and right from wrong, and to be fully acquainted with, and firmly attached to, the most excellent points of religion, taught you by the law of Moses. In your attempts to convert the Gentiles to your religion, ye assume high-sounding titles, and presumptuously looking on them as poor, foolish, stupid, and ignorant wretches, ye pretend to be distinguished leaders, enlighteners, and masterly instructors, while ye have nothing but a merely apparent or notional knowledge of God and his laws, without any answerable practice. 21—24. Think therefore, for your conviction of the insufficiency of your own righteousness, how shamefully and inexcusably your practice contradicts your pretensions to knowledge and your instruction of others:—While, according to the law, ye declaim against fraud and dishonesty in the Gentiles, ye indulge yourselves therein:—While ye loudly inveigh against adultery in them, ye commit it yourselves:—While ye profess a high detestation of heathenish idolatry, which ye have especially done since your return from Babylon, ye indulge yourselves in sacrilegiously robbing God of his offerings, obedience, and worship; and pretend to fulfil his law by hypocritical and imperfect performances:—While ye boast of your knowledge of God's law, as your distinguished privilege, high honour, and infallible security for eternal life, ye dishonour his authority and holiness by your manifest and voluntary violations of his law.—For your notorious wickedness, committed in plain contradiction to your laws, professions, and privileges, brings a reproach on his perfections and government, word and ways, and tempts the very heathens to think or speak of him as if he allowed, encouraged, or connived at it, or could not hinder it among his own favourite people. 25—27. And with respect to circumcision, in which ye chiefly glory, and on which ye depend as your secu-

(1) The Jews' prerogative not lost through unbelief: 1—8. (2) Jews and Gentiles all under sin: 9—19. (3) No justification for either Jew or Gentile through deeds of law: 20. (4) Justification for Jew and Gentile through faith only: 21—30. (5) The law established through the doctrine of justification by faith: 31.

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

2 Much every way:* chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, let God be true,† but every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.‡

5 But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man§)

6 God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?‖

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded* through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we† be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.‡

9 What then? are we better than they?§ No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;

10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:

11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

* "For if the truth (faithfulness of God in his promise to Abraham and his seed) hath abounded (been extended to myriads of Gentiles,) through my lie (through the unfaithfulness and disobedience of the Jews); how am I (a Jew) judged as a sinner," seeing I have been the means of magnifying the grace of God?—Ed.

† The apostle here speaks in his own person, and in conjunction with the Christian church, whose doctrine of justification by faith was, and still is, equally slandered by Jews and Gentiles; and his words furnish an answer to the preceding objection of the Jew, by showing that they are the legitimate, but shocking consequence of his perverse reasoning in the preceding verse.—Ed.

§ Are we (the Jews) better than they?—Better than the Gentiles in virtue of our national and ecclesiastical privileges? (chap. 2. 17—20.) The most eminent commentators consider this a return to the question in the first verse; and Bloomfield considers it another objection. Is it not rather the conclusive appeal of the apostle himself, as if he had said, "Are we better than they," by a perfect improvement of our greater advantages?—Ed.

rity for eternal happiness, it will indeed effectually seal and confirm God's covenant with you, if your natures be truly renewed, and ye sincerely study holiness of life, proceeding from union to, and fellowship with, Christ; but if ye live in your sins, your circumcision will render you no more acceptable to God than if ye were heathens. And if Gentiles, being renewed in their hearts, sincerely observe the law, they will be as highly valued by God as if they had been Jews, and will rise up in judgment against and condemn you, who, depending on your having the letter of the divine law, and being outwardly circumcised, presume to violate the obligations of the moral law. 28, 29. For it is not natural descent from Abraham, nor external covenant relation to God, nor profession of his truths, that will make a true child of Abraham: nor, in God's reckoning, is that external circumcision available to any saving purpose, which is only a mark of distinction imprinted on the body. But he is a true Israelite, one of Abraham's spiritual and believing seed, and an heir according to the promise, who, whether he be Jew or Gentile, is regenerated and sanctified in his inward nature, tempers, and disposition, and turned to God through Christ; and that is true circumcision, highly acceptable, not to carnal men, but to an all-seeing God, which consists not in any external cutting of the flesh, but in the renewing of the mind by the Holy Ghost, and purifying of the heart by faith in Christ.

Reflections upon Chap. II.—It is base and criminal to condemn sin in others while we indulge it in ourselves: or to continue workers of iniquity under high professions of godliness. And desperate is their condition who harden themselves in sin from the mercies of God apprehended or experienced. Certain, and awfully exact, is the future judgment of men by Jesus Christ. And correspondent to their qualities and works shall be the eternal punishments or gracious rewards of men. All the means of illumination and grace which they have received will come into the account. And very unavailing is it, nay, dangerous, to have external privileges, extensive knowledge, and an orthodox profession, without real holiness in heart and life. None give a deeper stab to the cause and honour of God than they who sin against the light, and prove false to their profession.—What a rare, a hard, an inward work is real Christianity! Highly is it esteemed by God, who alone knows its worth, or can immediately discern its existence. And it is infinitely dangerous to rest in anything short of Jesus Christ and his righteousness, as the only ground of our salvation.

Chap. III.—Ver. 1, 2. Nevertheless, the Jewish descendants of Abraham, who have been marked as the peculiar people of God by circumcision, have thereby their distinguished advantages; chiefly that God, as eminently present with them, has given them various types, promises, and predictions of the Messiah, and salvation through him, and granted them his inspired oracles, for their spiritual instruction and ground of faith and hope. 3. And though many of them have not believed in Christ the promised Messiah, or the gospel revelation of him, their ungrateful infidelity cannot defeat God's faithful accomplishment of his promises to Abraham and his spiritual seed. 4. Nay, though all men should prove liars and deceivers, God will always appear just and faithful: and men's rebellion against his law, and presumptuous arraignment of his conduct, will, in the issue, tend to vindicate and clearly manifest his equity and faithfulness. 5, 6. But let not carnal Jews imagine, that he, the righteous Judge of the world, cannot justly punish their wickedness and unbelief in rejecting the promised Messiah, and his righteousness and salvation, since, by his overruling providence, he makes use of it as a foil to set off, enhance, and give opportunity for brighter displays of his glory. 7, 8. Let them not imagine that, if God make their unbelief, which is so contrary to his truth and to their own profession, a mean of the spread and success of the gospel, they, as some blasphemously charge us apostles and Christians with saying, may abandon themselves to their own lusts, and practise all manner of wickedness, that he may thereby take occasion to glorify his own faithfulness and infinite grace. Nothing can be more detestable, or more justly damnable, than such conduct. 9. But whatever peculiar privileges we Jews possess, we are no more able to justify ourselves before God by our own works than the worst of heathens; nay, our sins are the more aggravated, as being committed against greater light and mercies, means and obligations. And it has already been proved, by notorious facts, that both Jews and Gentiles are in themselves chargeable with, and condemned on account of, their sins before God. 10—12. And this the oracles of God, which were given to, and immediately respected us Jews, harmoniously attest, representing all men in general as depraved in their nature and practice, ignorant of themselves and of God, the method of salvation, and every other spiritual object: as careless of all knowledge of, and fellowship with, God, and neglecters of his worship and service; as apostates from God and his Christ, his law, and everything good; and as altogether vile and useless before God; unfit and unable of themselves to do anything truly and spiritually good. 13—15. Their heart being wholly defiled with sin, all their members are ready instruments of unrighteousness. Their mouths, wherewith they ought to glorify God and edify one another, they employ to vent the most offensive, loathsome, and injurious language, flattery, falsehood, deceit, malignant slander and reproach, or even hideous oaths and curses, and bitter provocations and revilings. Their feet, which should carry them to every good work, they employ in running about to perpetrate mischief and murder. 16—18. By these means they bring calamities and destruction, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, on themselves, and all they are connected with: they are utter strangers to the true method of peace with God or their own consciences, and of promoting solid tranquillity and friendship among men: they have no serious sense or holy reverence of God's perfections, or their own accountableness to him; no fear of offending him; no principle of real religion to direct their views, restrain them from evil, or influence them to good. 19. Now, whatever charges the law of God, manifested in the light of nature or revelation, lays the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become [a] guilty before God.

20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference:

23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:

25 Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.[†]

28 Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

[a] Or, subject to the judgment of God.

[†] By the law of faith,—literally, "by law of faith; not by a law requiring faith, as if the gospel were a law, or, as it has been called, a new law, a remedial, or mitigated law. For, if the gospel were, in any sense, a law, then faith would, in that sense, be a "deed of law." But "by deeds of law shall no flesh be justified." The meaning must therefore be sought in a form of speech common in the Scriptures—common in all language—the antanaclasis, or allusion to a preceding word. See for example, John 1. 10, & 4. 31, 32, where the word "world" in the one, and "meat" in the other, is changed from the literal sense in the first occurrence to the figurative in the second. So Paul calls "faith" a law, not because it literally is so, but because law was considered by the Jews as the ground of their salvation. But if salvation were by obedience to law, whatever that law might be, boasting could not be excluded. Boasting, however, is excluded, because Jews and Gentiles have alike been found under sin. Salvation by faith, then, is the only principle that can exclude boasting; for there can be no merit in believing a testimony and trusting to another. See Glossii Philol. Sac., Amstel. 1711, p. 925; and Carson on Figurative Language, p. 90.—Ed.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also;

30 Seeing it is one God which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law.

WHAT shall we then say that Abraham, our father [a] as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?

2 For [a] if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God.

against men, must be extended to all that are under that law, that every man be convinced in his own conscience that his works are not excusable, far less justifying, before God; and that he is chargeable with many crimes, and legally obnoxious to his righteous vengeance. 20. And if the law, by its holy and just commandments, thus charge all men with, and convince them of, sin in their dispositions, thoughts, words, and actions, it is clearly manifest that none of them, in their present state of degeneracy, can ever be justified at the awful tribunal of an all-seeing, heart-searching, just, and holy God. 21—23. Nevertheless, this deplorable state of mankind is not desperate; for in the gospel is now clearly manifested that divine righteousness, fulfilled by the Son of God in our nature, which the moral law neither provided nor exhibited, but which has been all along represented in the typical ceremonies, and the writings of the Old Testament prophets, as the designed ground of the justification of sinful men; even the righteousness of our divine Redeemer which he wrought as our Surety, consisting in his holiness of human nature, obedience of life, and satisfactory sufferings and death, in our stead; which, being freely offered in the gospel, is imputed to, and by faith received by, all believers, weak or strong, Jews or Gentiles,—all of them having lost his image, and being incapable of glorifying him, recommending themselves to his favour, or procuring any title to the enjoyment of him. 24—26. And all of them have their sins pardoned, their persons accepted, and are entitled to eternal life merely by the absolutely free and sovereign favour of God, without any desert of their own, but only on account of that infinitely valuable price of redemption which Jesus Christ in his own person paid in his obedience and sufferings, which is lodged in him as an inexhaustible fund of merit to be applied to them; and which God, from mere love to them, accepted as their ransom, places to their account by imputation, and enables them to receive through faith in his Son.——Him, in his eternal purpose and covenant of grace, he delightfully set apart as a fit Mediator between God and man, and has clearly manifested and exhibited in the types and predictions of the Old Testament, in his incarnation and public ministry, and in the declarations and offers of the gospel, as a propitiatory and reconciling sacrifice, on account of which every one that believes therein may have free access to God. Herein he demonstrates the glory of his own justice, and the perfection of that righteousness of Christ which he provided and accepted as a full and honourable satisfaction to it: and through this he was honoured in pardoning the Old Testament offences before the ransom was paid, as well as in now pardoning the Gentiles who had long continued in their sins, and in freely justifying every one, Jew or Gentile, who, however guilty in himself, by faith receives and depends on Jesus Christ as his only Saviour. 27, 28. And as this doctrine of justification by the free grace of God, through the imputed righteousness of Christ, leaves no room for any man to boast, as if he had either in whole or in part recommended himself to the divine favour, it ought to be openly avowed, for the honour of God and humiliation of men, as a thing most plain and evident—that whatever Jew or Gentile, greater or lesser sinner, is pardoned and accepted by God, obtains this privilege merely through the righteousness of Christ received by faith, without any dependence on his own good dispositions or works. 29, 30. And it is no less manifest, that now God is, in every saving respect, the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, and that he justifies men, whether circumcised or uncircumcised, upon the ground of the same righteousness of his Son, and by the same instrumentality of faith. 31. And no less manifest is it, that our believing renunciation of our own works in the matter of justification, and receiving the imputed righteousness of Christ as the only ground of our pardon and acceptance, are so far from invalidating or setting aside the moral law, that hereby we greatly confirm and approve its authority, regard it as a mean of conviction, present it with a complete magnifying fulfilment of all its demands as a covenant, and are effectually influenced and enabled to love, regard, and cheerfully obey it as a rule of life.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—It is an invaluable privilege to enjoy the word and ordinances of God; and yet very dangerous to rest in them. It is impossible to defeat the purposes or promises of God. The election shall obtain salvation, and the rest are blinded. It is very common for ministers, especially if faithful, to be virulently reproached. And just is their eternal damnation who abuse the doctrines of grace to encourage themselves in licentiousness. How universal and fearful is the depravity of mankind! It discovers itself in unnumbered forms of thoughts, words, and actions, in things dishonourable to God, and injurious to men. The divine law makes fearful work upon men's consciences when it charges all their sins home upon them. And it is absurd to expect happiness by that law which so deeply accuses us of crimes.—But how amazing is it that Jesus' righteousness, and salvation through it, should be prepared for, offered and given to, such monsters of guilt, Jews or Gentiles! And yet it is exactly suited to our need, fully manifested and attested in scripture; and highly and delightfully all the perfections of God, particularly his justice and mercy, are glorified in our redemption thereby. Yea, the reign of his grace, through Jesus' imputed righteousness received by faith, effectually humbles our pride, establishes God's relation to us, honours his law, and promotes our holiness of heart and life.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1—3. Nay, even our natural father Abraham, notwithstanding his circumcision and remarkable piety, had no ground to glory before God, as if his own works had contributed to his justification: for the scripture expressly declares, that he believed the promise of the Messiah as the price and mean of blessing to all nations: and that what he believed concerning him was graciously placed to his account, as if he had done and suffered what the Messiah would do and suffer in his stead. 4, 5. Now it is plain that, if a man fulfil the law himself, by his own personal good works, in order to justification, his acceptance with God and eternal happiness, cannot properly be free favour, but what he has a claim to as his due wages by the covenant of works; but if, conscious of his utter inability to yield any acceptable obedience to the law as a covenant, he renounces all his own works, as to their being any part of his justifying righteousness, and by faith receives what is freely given to him in the gospel promises by that gracious God who justifies sinners through the righteousness of his Son, it is certainly that which he receives by faith which must be accounted to him for righteousness. 6—8. Accordingly, the Holy Ghost, by David, has declared blessed, not the men who fulfil the law in their own persons, but the sinners to 7 Saying, [c] Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

9 [d] Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.[*]

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be [e] the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed[†] unto them also:

12 And the father of circumcision to them [f] who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13 [g] For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.[‡]

14 For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect.

15 [h] Because the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression.[§]

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all.

17 (As it is written, [i] I have made thee a father of many nations,) [k] before him whom he believed, even God, who [l] quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were:

18 [m] Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become [n] the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be.

19 And, being not [o] weak in faith, [p] he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sara's womb:

20 He [q] staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

21 And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, [r] he was able also to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.[*]

23 Now, it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 [s] But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, [t] if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

25 [u] Who was delivered for our offences,[†] and [x] was raised again for our justification.

† How can a sinner be made righteous? Paul answers, by imputed righteousness. The doctrine of imputation being fundamental in truth, and most essential to the assurance of understanding, (Col. 2. 2), faith, (Heb. 10. 22), and hope, (Heb. 6. 11.) may be established by the three following steps of evidence. (1) Some righteousness, whatever it may be, is imputed, (See ver. 6, 11). 2) There is no human righteousness of any kind, See chap. 3. 10). (3) The only righteousness revealed in the gospel is, the righteousness of God, (chap. 1. 17. & 4. 22, 23, 24.) therefore the conclusion is inevitable, that the believer is justified by the imputation of that righteousness.—Ed.

whom God, by imputing that righteousness of his Son which he wrought as our surety, has freely, fully, and irrevocably, forgiven all their sins, and whose persons he hath graciously accepted and entitled to eternal life. 9—12. It is no less manifest also, that this privilege of free justification through faith alone belongs as much to the uncircumcised Gentiles as to the circumcised Jews; for what Abraham believed on was accounted to him for righteousness, not after, but long before, he was circumcised: and many years afterwards he received circumcision, in order to mark the sinful corruption of his nature, distinguish him and his seed for the peculiar people of God, bind them to act answerably to this character, and to assure him of his being already a partaker of the imputed righteousness of the Messiah, and an heir of all the promised blessings of the new covenant: —all which was ordered, in the infinite wisdom of God, to render him a noble pattern of faith, an eminent example of free justification through it, and a distinguished mean of conveying spiritual benefits to all true believers in after ages, whether Gentiles or Jews. 13. For the promise, that he should be the renowned chief of the believing world, Jews and Gentiles; and in the Messiah, his promised seed, be the prime heir and possessor of the blessings of this world, and of that which is to come; was given to him and his spiritual seed, not through any law, natural or ceremonial, or his personal obedience to it, but through that righteousness of Christ which is received by faith. 14, 15. And indeed, if men could become heirs of such blessings by their own personal obedience to any law, natural or revealed, the doctrine of justification by faith, and the free promise of God must be entirely set aside;—but, in our present degenerate state, the law of nature and revelation condemns every man to punishment, irritates our sinful corruption to acts of wickedness, and awakens our consciences to expect the eternal vengeance of God, as the just reward of our transgressing his commands. 16, 17. It being therefore absolutely impossible that any man can be entitled to spiritual or eternal blessings by his obedience to the law, moral or ceremonial, God has wisely, as well as graciously, provided that they should be bestowed merely as his free favours, and received by faith, that so his promises might, notwithstanding all our unworthiness and sinfulness, be absolutely certain and infallibly accomplished to all the truly believing seed of Abraham, who is constituted the common pattern of faith and mean of blessing to us all, Jews or Gentiles, who believe after his example, before that almighty Object of his faith, who invigorates men's bodies, or raises them when dead, or even spiritually quickens men who are dead in trespasses and sins, and who, being determined to produce them, speaks of things that are not with as much distinctness and certainty as if they actually existed. 18—21. In view of which, notwithstanding all the difficulties and high improbabilities arising from the condition of his own and his wife's body, Abraham was firmly confident, without any discernible doubts or staggerings of unbelief, that God, who had promised to make him the father of many nations, would certainly exert his almighty power in performing it. 22. And his faith, thus going out towards the Messiah, and receiving and resting upon him and his righteousness, that which he received and rested upon was accounted to him as his justifying righteousness before God. 23—25. Now the inspired account of this matter is transmitted to us, not chiefly to honour Abraham, but to direct and encourage us to believe, that the very same righteousness, which was imputed to him for his justification, shall in like manner be imputed to us, if we truly and cordially trust in that same almighty and gracious God, who, that we might be blessed in him with all his spiritual blessings, hath raised from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ,—who was, by himself and his Father, delivered up to servile obedience, sufferings, and death, to make atonement for our sins, and purchase our salvation,—and was raised again to immortal life and glory, that he might be justified as our public Head and Representative, and that, in consequence hereof, we might be personally discharged from guilt and condemnation, accepted into God's favour, and entitled to eternal life through the imputation of his righteousness to us in the way of believing.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—The best of men can obtain nothing but eternal wrath by their own works. But justification through Jesus' imputed righteousness opens a door of hope to the most heinous transgressor who receives it by faith. This method at once delightfully secures the highest glory to God and happiness to every believer. And the death and resurrection of our Redeemer harmoniously concur to promote our full salvation and comfort. Here we have a sure foundation for the most unshaken faith in the promises of a faithful, almighty, and unchangeable God, notwithstanding all the obstructions and discouragements in ourselves or others which stand in the way of their fulfilment. And great is the mercy, that now righteousness, grace, and salvation, are extended to believing Gentiles equally as to Jews—as to Abraham;—and that whatever is recorded, concerning him or David, is granted to us to encourage our faith and hope. And it is very necessary, for our instruction and comfort, everywhere in scripture to observe accurately what relates to the justification of a sinner before God.

THEREFORE, being justified by faith,[a] we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but we glory in tribulations[†] also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience;[‡] and experience, hope:

5 And hope maketh not ashamed;[§] because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous[‖] man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man[*] some would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.[a]

11 And not only so,[†] but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.[‡]

12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:[§]

13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression,[‖] who is the figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many.

16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

17 For if [a] by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1. Therefore, being thus justified by faith, we are received into peace, favour, and friendship with God, and enjoy a pleasant serenity of soul towards him, through the righteousness, resurrection, and intercession of Christ. 2. By whom, as our Mediator, Peace-maker, and spiritual Husband, we, under the direction and influence of the Holy Ghost, have a free and open access into this excellent state of favour and acceptance with God, and into the actual enjoyment of all saving graces implanted in our heart;—in which we, with great honour, stand on the sure foundation of God's perfections and promises, and of Christ's person, offices, and work, remaining firmly thereon, and rejoice in the assured hope that God will quickly and exceedingly manifest the glory of his own perfections, counsels, and operations, in making us partakers of the glorious and immediate enjoyment of himself: 3. In the exercise of which hope we triumph over, and glory in all the distressing afflictions and persecutions which befall us in life, being persuaded, by the word and Spirit of God, and our own observation and experience, that they are all wisely ordered, overruled, and blessed by God, to beget in us a calm submission to his will, and patient bearing of whatever hardships he thinks fit to lay upon us. 4. And this patience produces much useful experience and proof of the truth of our graces under trials, and of the emptiness of worldly things, and the excellency of things spiritual and heavenly; and of God's wise, powerful, and gracious care over us, and of his seasonably helping and supporting us, and sanctifying his providential dispensations to us.—And this experience contributes to wean our affections from the things of this world, and raise them to things above, and to encourage our hopes of their eternal enjoyment. 5. And this well-grounded hope, we certainly know, will never shamefully disappoint us, as it rests on the free favour of God, abundantly manifested to our souls; and has an earnest of its fulfilment in that ardent love to God implanted in them by the Holy Ghost, whom he has given to abide constantly in us, as our counsellor, comforter, and sanctifier, and as a witness and pledge of his free and constant love to us. 6. For when we were in the most sinful and miserable condition, utterly incapable of appeasing the wrath of God, or recovering ourselves from ruin and danger, nay, profanely unmindful of, and contemning God, Jesus Christ, in the most proper season, when our guilt, wickedness, and need, were increased to the highest, died for us impotent, contemptible, and ungodly creatures. 7. Among men scarcely could any be found who would willingly sacrifice their life for the redemption of a harmless or upright man; and but few that would have enough of courage, gratitude, or friendship, to do it for the sake of a public-spirited, bountiful man, who had been, and might continue to be, an uncommon blessing to his family, friends, and country. 8. But God has, in the most transcendent and astonishing manner, manifested his love towards us, in that while we were, by nature and practice, highly injurious to him, and to one another, and justly condemned by his law to utter destruction, Jesus Christ, his only-begotten Son, according to his appointment, died a most accursed, tormenting, and shameful death, to purchase our forgiveness and eternal life. 9. Now, if God so loved us when we were under the power and guilt of sin, much more may we hope, that, having all our sins pardoned, and our persons accepted, through his righteousness as our surety, we shall certainly be delivered from all future punishments on his account. 10. For if, when we were not only weak, sinful, and ungodly, but even malicious enemies, rebels, and traitors, against God, he had, in his word and providence, and our own consciences, declared his just indignation against us, Jesus' obedience and suffering as our Surety satisfied his justice, and opened a way for communicating his grace and favour to us: much more being brought into a state of favour and friendship with God, shall we be effectually delivered from all sin and misery, and advanced to perfect blessedness in the immediate and eternal enjoyment of God. 11. Having then these views, we not only rejoice in hope of receiving spiritual and eternal blessings from God, but in God himself, as our reconciled God and chief portion and glory, and in our new covenant relation to, and assured interest in him, through Jesus Christ, our only Mediator, Lord and Saviour; by faith in whom, we, Jews or Gentiles, have now, under gospel discoveries, approved of, accepted, rested upon, and taken comfort in his righteousness, as the only atoning sacrifice that can effectually redeem us from wrath, and recommend us to the favour of God.——12. The fall of all mankind in the first Adam further proves the universal necessity, and illustrates the nature of a free justification through the imputed righteousness of Christ, to both Jews and Gentiles; for sin by him, as our common parent and covenant-head, broke in upon all men, from his eating the forbidden fruit; his first sin being imputed, and the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of nature attending it, being propagated to them, and a sentence of death, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, being passed upon them on that account,—death, in all its hideous forms, in and through him as their public head, spread over all mankind, as persons who had sinned in him. 13, 14. And it is manifest, that, by virtue of some law, sin was charged, and its penalty inflicted, in the world before God gave the law to the Jewish nation by Moses. Nay, for 2500 years before, all along from Adam's fall, death, the inseparable attendant of sin, had reigned over mankind, cutting off one generation after another, and even multitudes of infants who had never been guilty of any actual sin like to that first sin of Adam,—whom God constituted a typical figure of the promised Messiah. 15. But though Adam, as the covenant-head of his natural posterity, was a remarkable type of Jesus Christ, the gracious benefit which comes through the righteousness of the one, is more than answerable to the mischievous effects of the first sin of the other: for if, through the sinful fall of a mere man, sentence of death was brought upon all his natural posterity as the just wages of his sin, much more must that God, who delighteth in mercy, cause his rich and undeserved favours and blessings to abound, through the imputed righteousness of Christ, to his spiritual seed, in bestowing upon them greater happiness than they lost by the fall. 16. And not only does the gracious favour of God, through the righteousness of Jesus Christ, remove the guilt and curse of that one offence of Adam's eating the forbidden fruit, which brought the sentence of condemnation upon all mankind, but procures a complete forgiveness of that, and innumerable other personal transgressions, and a full acceptance unto eternal life. 17. And therefore, if, by the destructive fall of one mere man as their representative, death, in all its forms, has invaded, subdued, and exercised dominion over all men, through their polluting connexion with him, much more they, who are made partakers of the rich abundance of God's love and favour through Christ, and d Luke 20. 38. Heb. 10. 12—14.

3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized[a] into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore we are [c]buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

5 For if we have been planted[†] together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection:[‡] have his infinitely valuable righteousness imputed to them, and are interested in all the superabundant blessings purchased by it, shall enjoy a glorious freedom from sin and death, and reign honourably in grace and glory, in union to, and in fellowship with, Jesus Christ. 18. But notwithstanding such circumstantial differences, the manner of conveying Adam's guilt and Jesus' righteousness is the very same in substance; for as by one offence of Adam, sin, and through it condemnation to death, spiritual, temporal, and eternal, came upon all his natural posterity—so, by the righteousness of our one Mediator and Surety Jesus Christ, and by that alone, pardon of all sins, past, present, and to come, and an acceptance unto life, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, came upon all his spiritual seed. 19. For as by the imputation of Adam's sin of eating the forbidden fruit, all his natural posterity are legally charged with it, and so judicially constituted sinners, and being condemned as such, are brought under the punishment of an unholy and depraved nature, prone to all evil; so, by the imputation of Christ's holiness of nature, obedience of life, and satisfactory sufferings, all his elect seed shall be judicially constituted, and in justification declared righteous, and brought under a holy influence to sanctify their nature. 20. For God never gave the law, moral or ceremonial, to mankind in expectation of their obtaining justification and life by it; but the covenant of works was made with Adam, and the entrance of sin was occasioned by it, as an intended mean of glorifying the exceeding riches of his grace; and the moral law was afterwards solemnly published, and the ceremonial established, in order to manifest the dreadful nature and effects of man's fall; but in his infinite, free, sovereign, and unparalleled love, favour, and mercy, God took occasion, from the extensive spread, outrageous prevalence, and high aggravations of sin, to exert and manifest the most illustrious, extensive, and superabounding power of his grace, in pardoning not only the first, but innumerable other transgressions, subduing the most powerful lusts, and advancing to higher happiness than was lost by the fall. 21. That as sin, through the offence of Adam, had prevailed and cruelly tyrannized over mankind, triumphantly rendering them obnoxious to temporal, spiritual, and eternal death—so the free favour and mercy of God might prevail and triumph over sin, however powerful or aggravated, in pardoning and subduing it, and spreading abroad the blessings of salvation among sinful men, recovering them to a spiritual life of fellowship with God here, and immediate and eternal enjoyment of him hereafter, through the righteousness and by the mediation of Jesus Christ.

Reflections upon Chap. V.—Thrice happy is the state into which believers are brought by the gospel! A delightfully free justification, peace with God, spiritual establishment, comfort, and well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity, come to us through Jesus' person and blood. And all things amazingly work together for our spiritual and everlasting welfare. Transcendent and unbounded is the love of God manifested in Jesus' obedience and death for us, who were so unholy, wicked, and wretched. And certain and full is our everlasting salvation through him. Since all mankind, infants not excepted, are universally plunged in sin, condemnation, and death, by Adam's fall, God marvellously takes occasion, from that fearful destruction, to manifest the superabundant virtue of his Son's righteousness imputed, and of his own free grace by means of it. And much greater and more effectual are the blessings brought in by Jesus, our new covenant Head, to his spiritual seed, than all the loss and want entailed by Adam on his natural posterity. O my soul, contemplate, believe, admire, and share these glories, these blessings of redeeming grace!

Chap. VI.—Ver. 1, 2. But if our justification thus wholly depend upon the free grace of God through the imputation of Jesus' righteousness, and God's free favour superabound where sin had abounded, should we thence take encouragement to continue in, and more eagerly practise, wickedness, that God's grace may be the more illustriously displayed in pardoning and saving us? Nothing could be more detestable and horrid, or even more unnatural to a renewed heart: for though we cannot be justified by our own works, yet how could we, who are delivered from the guilt and dominion of sin, and whose affections are mortified to it, in any consistency with our state and character, or any sense of duty or gratitude, or with any conscience, hope, or peace, allow ourselves to continue in, or practise any known iniquity? 3. Know ye not that our baptism with water, by the authority, and into the profession, faith, and obedience of Jesus Christ, signified and sealed our spiritual union to him, as members of his mystical body; and the mortification, as well as the remission of our sin, through the influence of his death; and our federal obligation to concur with the end of his death, to redeem us from all iniquity? 4. It is therefore not only incumbent on us to be conformable to Christ's death in the crucifixion of our sinful lusts, but to give continued proofs thereof, in conformity to his lying in the grave; that as he was raised from the dead by the glorious power and operation of his Father, and in order to receive with him the reward of his glorifying him on earth, we, by virtue derived from him as our living and quickening Head, being quickened to a spiritual and heavenly life, should, with freedom, constancy, and in a progressive manner, daily live in all holy obedience, from new principles and motives, and by a new rule, and to new ends—the praise and glory of God. 5. For if, as is represented in baptism, we are so united to Christ as our mystical Head, that we receive from him gracious influences to render us conformable to him in his death, by the mortification of sin, and separation of our souls from it, we shall certainly receive influences from him as our risen Saviour, to enable us to live like him in holiness, till we are admitted into the immediate fellowship with him in his heavenly glory. 6. For from the principles of the gospel, we know that the subtle corruption of our nature derived from Adam, and spread into all the members of our body and faculties of our soul, is mortally wounded through Jesus Christ's death; he having died for this very end, that its whole frame, power, and authority should be gradually, but powerfully, mortified, subdued, and utterly destroyed; that from this very time we should never willingly yield ourselves to its inclinations and influence, or serve its interests and designs. 7. For whosoever is thus dead to the reign and love of sin, through conformity to his crucified Head and Saviour, is freed from its domineering power and command over him, and is delivered from all allowed inclinations and desires to serve it. 8. Now if, through the merits and influence of Christ's death, we, by virtue of union to, and fellowship with him, are thus conformed to him in an effectual death unto sin, we are assured, from God's word and by his Spirit, that, through virtue derived from him as our risen Redeemer, we shall be enabled to live a spiritual, holy, and heavenly life here, till we are raised to an eternal life of immediate fellowship with him hereafter. 9, 10. For we are certain that Christ, our risen and exalted Head, will never more die, or be obnoxious to death; but having, by his one death on the cross, fully taken away the whole guilt and punishment of our sins, he is raised from the dead to a life, heavenly, immortal, and divine, wholly calculated to promote the glory of his Father's perfections. 11. If he then, by dying once, so effectually took away the sin of his people, and destroyed the guilt and power of it, that he now lives in eternal honour to the glory of God, it becomes you to reckon yourselves dead, and actually to be dead, to the reign, love, and practice of sin, through union to, and fellowship with him; but spiritually alive in your hearts and affections, loving and be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

12 Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof:

13 Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law,* but under grace?† God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience‡ unto righteousness?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin,§ but ye have obeyed from the heart that form‖ of doctrine which was delivered you.

18 Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

serving God in thought, word, and deed, as under the power of gracious principles and influences, derived from him as our common Saviour and Lord. 12, 13. Take heed therefore that ye never suffer sin so to prevail in either your souls, or your frail, corruptible, and mortal bodies, as to make you yield any voluntary obedience to the corrupt desires and solicitations of those sinful lusts which still remain in you; or at any time to make you willingly employ your bodily members, or the affections of your souls, as instruments of warfare against God, or of serving the cause, or gratifying the perverse inclinations of sin; but with full consent, and without reserve, give up your whole selves, soul and body, to God through Christ, your only rightful Sovereign, to whom all your obedience is due, that ye may therein act as persons delivered from condemnation, and quickened by his regenerating Spirit; and cheerfully employ all the members of your body, and powers of your soul, as instruments of warfare with sin, and of serving God in holiness and righteousness. 14. To encourage you in which, know assuredly that, however your inward corruptions may trouble, perplex, and wound you, and strive for the mastery in you, yet they shall never regain their allowed and uncontrolled power over you who are united to Christ; for ye are not now under the covenant of works, which, however severely it forbids and condemns for sin, affords no pardon of it, or effectual assistance against it; but ye are under the covenant of grace, which secures full forgiveness of, redemption from, and assistance against sin, and affords every powerful motive and help to holy obedience; and under the influence of God's sin-subduing and heart-sanctifying favour; and under the government of a never-failing principle of grace implanted in your hearts. 15. Now nothing can be more contrary to the perfections of God, the design of the gospel, or your gracious character and state, than to pervert such a gracious deliverance and state as an encouragement to sin. 16. Ye cannot but know that it is impossible for you to divide your chosen services between opposite governors, but ye must be the proper servants of whatever you voluntarily give up yourselves to the habitual obedience of, whether it be to sin, the service of which is deadly, and issues in eternal death; or whether it be to holiness in the obedience of faith, for bringing forth the fruits of righteousness to the glory of God. 17. But blessed be God, that though all of you, who are real Christians, were once the voluntary servants and slaves of your sinful lusts, ye have, by his almighty and gracious influences, been made sincerely, deliberately, and cordially, upon his authority, to receive and obey those evangelical doctrines and commands which have been communicated to you by Christ and his ministers, and which, by their powerful impression on you, have formed you after his own image. 18. And being set at liberty from the tyrannical dominion and lordship of sin in your wills, affections, and conversation, ye have become the devoted and willing servants of that principle of holiness which God has implanted in your hearts in conformity to his own righteous law. 19. In condescension to your weak capacities, enfeebled by the present frailties of nature and remains of sinful corruption, I use this common similitude of master and servant, and I affirm that, as in your unregenerate state ye resigned and employed all the members of your body, and powers of your soul, in the voluntary service of unclean, unrighteous, and ungodly principles and habits of sin, which cruelly reigned and tyrannized over you, and rendered you more guilty, vile, and miserable, by adding sin to sin—so ye should now, when brought into a state of grace, act up to the dignity, obligation, and holiness of your character, earnestly employing all your members and faculties in the exercise of your implanted graces, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. 20. For when ye were the willing servants and slaves of your sinful lusts, ye were wholly estranged from, and disaffected to, every principle of holiness, insensible of all obligations to piety or virtue, and even pleased with an unrestrained inclination to wickedness. 21. But what real profit, honour, or satisfaction, did ye ever find, or could you expect to find, in your former sinful courses? Were they not attended with remorse, defilement, reproach, trouble, disappointment, loss, and mischief to yourselves? And are ye not now filled with holy confusion, self-abasement, and shame, in every review of them, as things foolish and unworthy, highly ungrateful, offensive, and dishonourable to God, and no less ruinous and destructive to your own souls and bodies in time and eternity? 22. But now that, by the mighty power and grace of God, in bringing you under another head and covenant, and implanting other principles and habits in you, ye are set at liberty from the reign and love of sin, as well as from the guilt of it, and made the willing and obedient servants of God in Christ, ye grow in grace, and bring forth the fruits of righteousness and holiness in this world, the final issue and perfection of which is an honourable and everlasting blessedness graciously bestowed in the world to come. 23. For death, in all its hideous forms, spiritual, temporal, or eternal, is all the wages allotted by the law of God, or which can be procured by all our labours and sufferings in the service of sin; but that everlasting life, which consists in the immediate and full enjoyment of, and conformity to God, which is the issue of holiness in heart and practice, though not indeed the proper wages of it, is the transcendently free gift of God bestowed on us, without any regard to our merits, and merely on account of the righteousness and mediation of Jesus Christ, our only, and appointed, and well-furnished Saviour and Lord.

Reflections upon Chap. VI.—Groundless, and very injurious, is every charge of licentiousness on the doctrine of the free justification of sinners through the imputed righteousness of Christ. Nothing is more detestable to a renewed heart than to continue in sin, because grace does, or that it may, abound. For though our good works do not procure, yet they necessarily follow, our justification by grace: and to indulge ourselves in sin, or to neglect the study of holiness, is a flat contradiction to all the signification and engagements of our baptism; and is absolutely inconsistent with our character, privilege, or duty, as members of Christ, and partakers of his grace and glory. Yea, delightful, excellent, and useful, are the effects of regenerating grace. What dying to sin! what spiritual quickening to our holy and heavenly life! What a holy, comfortable, and edifying walk before God, from new principles and ends, and after the new pattern of Christ, and by virtue derived from his death and resurrection! There is need then to examine ourselves fully, whether sin or holiness have the ascendancy in our hearts and lives. It is shameful to be less for the Lord Christ after our conversion, than we were for sin before it. And all new-covenant deliverances from sin ought to render it and its service detestable to us.—Alas, what confusion and wrath follow upon sin! But abundant, eternal, and free, is the redemption which comes to us through Jesus Christ.

Chap. VII.—Ver. 1—3. I now appeal to all of you, who know the law of nature or revelation, that no man can be bound by any law longer than he lives under it, or stands related to it; and that, however strictly the law of marriage binds a wife is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth: but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 [a]So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore,* my brethren, ye also are become dead to the w[†] by the body of Christ; that [b]ye should be r[‡] married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, [c]that we should bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For when we were [d]in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law,[‡] [e]did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death.

6 [f]But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held;[§] that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.[‖]

7 What shall we say then? [g]Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known [#]lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet.

* Sold at the fall for a promise never fulfilled, and seized as a slave, whom none but Jesus can set free.—Note. Of whom speaks the apostle? Of himself, as a renewed believer, evidently for the following reasons. 1. He had been once, in his own view, alive, but now knew that he was dead (ver. 9, 10, 11.) 2. He had acknowledged the law and commandment holy, just, and good (ver. 12.) 3. He had discovered sin to be "exceeding sinful" (ver. 13); an acknowledgment and conclusion to which the unregenerate never arrive. 4. He allowed not, and he hated, sin (ver. 15); but the unrenewed "take pleasure in sin and sinners (chap. 1. 32.) 5. He delighted in the law of God (ver. 22), a delight the unregenerate never feel. 6. The law of his mind warred against sin (ver. 23); the mind of the unregenerate is "enmity against God." 7. He felt his wretchedness, and longed for deliverance (ver. 24); the unregenerate never desire more than continuance in sin with pardon. 8. 8 But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead.

9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment, [h]which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

11 For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

12 Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

13 Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

to abide with, and perform all necessary duties to her husband whilst they both live, yet, if he die, she is fully delivered from that obligation, and may even be married to another man, as freely as if she had never had any connexion with her deceased husband. 4. In like manner, my dear Christian brethren, ye, through Christ's fulfilment of the law in your stead by his obedience unto death, are perfectly delivered from all connexion with it as a covenant, requiring personal righteousness in order to justification before God, justifying you for your good works, or condemning you for your sins;—in order that, in a state of spiritual marriage, union to, and fellowship with him, as your risen husband and Saviour, and by a principle of spiritual life derived from him, ye may bring forth fruits of holiness to the glory of God, acceptable to him through Jesus Christ. 5. For while we, Jews or Gentiles, were in our carnal unconverted state, under the full power and influence of our natural corruption, which works so much by our bodies, the violent passions thereof, irritated by the purity of the precepts, and severity of the curses of the broken covenant of works, powerfully employed all our members and faculties in incessant labours of wickedness, greatly dishonouring to God, and eternally ruinous to ourselves. 6. But now, the law in that form being dead to us through Christ's complete fulfilment of all its demands in our stead, we are delivered from all its requirements of perfect obedience in order to justification, and its rigorous sentences of condemnation on account of sin, that through union to, and fellowship with him, we might, from new principles, motives, and ends, under the influence of his Spirit, cordially and spiritually serve God in all holiness of heart and life, and not with mere ceremonial and external devotions and virtue. 7. But let none imagine that, because subjection to the law as a covenant retains us in our sinfulness, and deliverance from it promotes gospel holiness, therefore its moral precepts are causes of, rather than checks to, sin. With detestation of the thought, I can, from my own experience, affirm that my conscience had never been convinced of the sinfulness of the secret workings of irregular desires, and the first motions of inordinate affections, unless I had found that the law had forbidden all impatience, discontent, envious grudging, or uneasy and irregular inclinations to worldly enjoyments. 8. But though the holy law thus discovers and forbids the most secret operations of wickedness, and never gave me any proper occasion of sinning, yet the reigning corruption of my heart basely took occasion from the strictness and severity of the law, and, through my own natural enmity against God, wrought in me all manner of sinful inclinations and desires after that which is forbidden; for as long as I continued without any true sense of the spirituality, holiness, strictness, and extent of the divine law, sin, and especially heart sins, appeared to me quite trifling and harmless, without any power or danger. 9. Nay, I then imagined myself in a good state, deserving of, and able and inclined by my good works to recommend me to, God's favour; yea, able to entitle to, and prepare myself for, eternal life:—but when the Holy Ghost applied the commandments closely to my conscience, as reaching to my inmost thoughts, principles, views, and desires, as well as to my words and actions, I could not but be convinced of inconceivable multitudes of sins, and degrees of their aggravation, beyond what I had ever thought of, and of my just exposure to divine wrath on account of them: and while I lost all hopes of eternal life by my own performances, and my conscience condemned me to eternal death for my sins, my inward corruption, irritated by the holiness and severity of God's law, raged more and more against him: and this increased my spiritual death in sins, and my desert of eternal damnation. 10. And thus I found God's holy law, as a covenant of works, which was originally framed for a mean of men's justification and eternal happiness through Adam's perfect obedience to it, a tremendous instrument of condemning me to death, temporal, spiritual, and eternal; and, through my own indwelling lusts, a mean of increasing my spiritual death, and alienation from and enmity against God. 11. For my inward lusts, impatient of restraint, took occasion, from the strict holiness of its commands, and awful severity of its threatenings, to rage against both the law and the Lawgiver; and thus insensibly drew me into the commission of many forbidden evils, and so increased my inward corruption, and enlarged the sentence of my condemnation to death; while the law, further applied to my conscience, convinced me that all my hopes of recommending myself to God's favour were utterly groundless. 12. Since therefore the moral law gives no occasion to, but discovers, forbids, and condemns every sin, it must be acknowledged an intrinsically pure, holy, just, right, and true, good and excellent, eternal and unchangeable, rule and standard of all holiness and righteousness, every way becoming the holy, righteous, and good God to enjoin, and intelligent creatures to obey, for his glory, and their own advantage. 13. Nor is this holy law the cause of the mischief and death which comes upon mankind. Nay, from this representation of it, derived from my own experience, it is evident that sin, therein showing itself a most malignant and destructive evil, by a vile abuse of the law, produced in me what was wicked, and brought me under a righteous and manifest sentence of condemnation and death,—that thus rising up in desperate opposition to the holy law of God, it might be made to appear infinitely odious, unreasonable, and injurious, directly contrary to him and pernicious to men. 14. For though I, and all those who have felt its thorough convictions, are certain that this law of God is pure and spiritual, reaching not only to external words, actions, or appearances, but to the thoughts, dispositions, principles, motives, and ends of our heart, and requiring both internal and external obedience to be performed in a spiritual manner; yet, alas, notwithstanding all the powerful influences of God's grace which I have experienced, such are my deficiencies, and such the remains of corruption in me, that I am quite ashamed of myself, as inexpressibly carnal, and too often employed by my sinful lusts, as if I were still their slave, sold into their hands by Adam's fall and my own former consent. 15. I am indeed far from allowing myself in any known violations of God's law; but, alas, I too often, through sloth or inadvertence, neglect, or unprofitably perform, the duties which I am desirous of observing and persevering in, and am, to my great grief, drawn into the commission of those sins which I habitually and determinately abhor. 16. If then I have a supreme, fixed, and habitual aversion to those sins which I commit in opposition to God's holy law, I thereby manifest that I am so far renewed in heart, that I approve of it as right in all points, even to the condemning of myself. 17. And through this change which God's grace hath made on me, it is no longer my whole self, or even my better part, my renewed judgment, will, and affections, that transgress this law in omitting what it requires, or committing what it forbids, but it is the remaining sinful corruption of my nature, which I disallow and abhor, that transgresses it. 18. For I know, by sad experience, that in my corrupt nature, considered in itself, nothing spiritually good has any residence: and even though the principles of grace, implanted in me by regeneration, be wholly inclined to that which is good

THERE is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus,[*] who walk not after the flesh,[†] but after the Spirit.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness[‡] of sinful flesh, and [§] for sin condemned sin in the flesh:

4 That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit.

and holy, yet through the power of remaining corruption and concurring temptations, and the want of a lively exercise of faith on Christ's person and fulness, I cannot perform holy duties in that spiritual and vigorous manner in which I resolve and sincerely desire to do them. 19. For though I am by God preserved from gross vices, and have an unfeigned respect to all his commandments, yet I do not attain that universal conformity to them which I aim at; and too frequently fall into sins of infirmity, which I really hate and detest. 20. Since then these sinful falls are contrary to the reigning bent of my heart, I must insist on it, to the honour of God's work of grace in me, to the honour of his holy, just, and good law; and to the just reproach of sin, as an unreasonable violation of it; that it is not my whole or renewed self that knowingly and willingly does the abominable things which God hates, but it is owing to those remains of my sinful corruption of nature, which I do not oppose, watch, pray, and labour against, so much as I ought. 21. I therefore find an evil principle of sin so powerfully working in me by suggestings, sinful allurements, and prevailing insinuations, that often, when I am essaying to perform holy duties, some bad motion or influence presents itself in opposition to my unfeigned endeavours, and unawares draws me into something unlawful. 22. For certain I am, that, so far as my soul is renewed by the grace of God, I have the greatest delight and noblest satisfaction in all the precepts of God's law as right and good, and cordially desire to yield them the most perfect obedience. 23. But, alas, notwithstanding all my experience of God's grace, I feel in me a powerful principle of corruption residing in my whole man, and peculiarly working in my sensitive passions and appetites, and earnestly opposing all the holy aims and endeavours of that governing spiritual principle of grace, divinely implanted in my judgment, conscience, and will, and sometimes prevailing to render me its unwilling captive, and involve me in acts of wickedness. 24. And, alas, how vile, loathsome, and miserable, am I in myself on this account? O when shall an almighty and infinitely gracious God deliver me from this detestable and deadly system of indwelling lusts, which dwell in and overspread my whole nature, and render me so loathsome and inactive before him: and which, if his mercy prevented not, would certainly issue in my eternal destruction! 25. But blessed be his name, through Christ, that, by his free favour and the working of his grace in me, I am already delivered from the guilt and dominion of sin, and have an assured hope of a complete deliverance from all the defiling remains of it at death, through the obedience, suffering, and intercession of Jesus Christ, your and my Lord and Saviour. So then, to sum up all in a few words, so far as I am renewed by the grace of God, with settled judgment and choice, and with full approbation, resolution, and consent, I devote my whole man to God; and as his willing servant, yield an unfeigned and unreserved obedience to his law: but so far as the disallowed workings of corruption prevail in me, I am brought under the influence of sinful lusts, and made unwillingly to serve their abominable interests and demands.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—Marvellous, but certain, glorious, and full, is our deliverance from the broken covenant of works, by our union to Christ, and interest in his righteousness, whereby he fulfilled it in our stead. And this deliverance powerfully promotes the renovation of our heart and the reformation of our life. It is impossible to obtain either justification, or even true sanctification, by the broken law. And sharp convictions by it make fearful work on men's hearts and consciences. Jesus and his grace find unrenewed sinners in a most deplorable condition. And dreadful is the nature of sin, which perverts even the holy law of God, and convictions by it, as an occasion of strengthening and enraging wicked lusts. Alas, what remains of corruption are found with the best on earth! what a plague and burden is this to believers, and what a hinderance to holiness! But marvellous and merciful is the creation and preservation of gracious habits and holy principles amidst so much sinful corruption. And it is a certain mark of indwelling grace governing the soul, when the sense of indwelling sins occasions such heavy sighs and mournful groans to God. The battle may be sore; but victory, through Jesus Christ, will come at last. May the Lord hasten it to my soul in his time!

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 1. Since the grace of God, through Christ Jesus, thus delivers all true believers from the guilt and dominion of sin, in order to their being, in due time, freed from all the remainders of it, it is evident that, even in this imperfect world, there is no sentence of condemnation to God's wrath standing against them who are vitally united to Christ as members of his mystical body; and who, though attended with many lamented and condemnable infirmities, do, in the general tenor of their conversation, act, not according to the dictates and inclinations of their corrupt nature, but according to the inspired word of God, the suggestions, directions, assistance, and pattern of the Holy Ghost, and according to the nature and inclinations of that principle of grace implanted in regeneration. 2. For, through the covenant of grace perfectly fulfilled by Christ, and through the gospel applied by the powerful influence of the Holy Ghost to my conscience, I am delivered from the covenant of works, which is the strength of sin and binds over unto death, and have a new principle of grace implanted in my heart, in opposition to the sinful and destructive principle of natural corruption. 3, 4. For when the covenant of works, which required perfect obedience as the only condition of eternal life, and pronounced a curse for the very smallest transgression, had, not indeed of itself, but through our sinfulness and inability, rendered the justification of fallen men by their own works absolutely impossible, God, in his infinite wisdom and grace, appointed, and manifested in our world, his own only begotten Son, personally united to our nature in all the debased and distressing circumstances thereof, and, by rendering him an atoning sacrifice for sin, punished it in him, and sufficiently testified his displeasure against it, in order that all righteousness, in obedience to the precepts of the law, or satisfaction to its penalty, being fulfilled by him as our Surety in our stead, might be imputed to our persons, and applied to our consciences, who by his grace have our stated and habitual conversation towards God and men, not under the influence, or according to our natural principles, of sinful corruption, but according to the dictates and influences of the Holy Ghost, and the nature and bent of these gracious principles which he has implanted, and doth preserve, uphold, actuate, and assist, in our souls. 5. For, whatever men profess, they, who are under the direction, dominion, and influence, of indwelling corruption, habitually consult, relish, pursue, and delight in, worldly, sensual, and sinful things, answerably to their carnal and unrenewed appetites: but they, who are under the dominion and influence of the Holy Ghost dwelling in their hearts, and of the gracious principles implanted by him in regeneration, think of, are devoted to, contrive, relish, follow after, and delight in, those things which are of a spiritual and heavenly nature, answerable to their renewed inclinations and the dictates and influences of the Holy Ghost. 6. Nor is their condition less different than their course; for to have the prevailing bent and delight of the heart turned towards worldly, sensual, and sinful objects, and to live and act accordingly, is in its own nature a spiritual death in trespasses and sins, which deserves, tends to, and naturally issues in eternal death. But to have our mind frequently, delightfully, intently, and transformingly employed about spiritual things, under the dominion and influence of the Holy Ghost, and of infused spiribut [*b] to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

7 [c] Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9 [d] But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be [e] in you, [f] the body is dead because of sin; [g] but the Spirit is life [†] because of righteousness.

11 [h] But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also [i] quicken your mortal [k] bodies [§] by his Spirit that [k] dwelleth in you.

12 Therefore, brethren, [l] we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

13 For [m] if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: [n] but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

14 [o] For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

15 [p] For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

16 [q] The Spirit itself beareth witness [*] with our spirit, that we are the children of God:

17 [r] And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; [s] if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

18 For I reckon that [t] the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

19 For the [u] earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20 [x] For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope;

21 Because the creature itself also [y] shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that [z] the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have [a] the first-fruits of the Spirit; even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. [‡]

24 [b] For we are saved by hope: [§] but hope that

tual principles of grace, is in itself a spiritual life, fills the soul with inward activity, peace, and comfort, and is the certain earnest of, and preparation for, everlasting life and peace in the immediate enjoyment of God. 7. But this happy temper and privilege we cannot possess without an almighty renovation of our heart; for the whole bent of an earthly and unregenerate heart is in direct opposition to, and inveterate and malicious enmity against, God, his perfections, will, authority, and government, and all conformity to him, or spiritual enjoyment of him; and such is its desperate malignity, that it neither will nor can be brought into a subjection to, or compliance with, the spiritual and righteous demands of his holy, just, and good law. 8. It is therefore manifest that they, who are in their natural state under the power and dominion of carnal principles and corrupt affections, are, while they continue so, utterly incapable of doing anything spiritually good and acceptable to God, or of being in Christ discharged from condemnation, or accepted to eternal life. 9. But ye, brethren, are not under the dominion of your sinful, and in part remaining corruption, but under the direction and government of the Holy Ghost, and of implanted principles of grace, as is manifest from the abiding residence and operation of the same in you. Nevertheless, if any of you are not partakers of the inhabitation, renewing, and sanctifying operations, of that Spirit, who proceeds from, resides in, and is sent and given by, Christ, ye cannot possibly be of the number of his children; or, continuing such, be owned by him as his, or adjudged to eternal life at the last day. 10. But if Christ has, by his Spirit, taken up his abode in you, as his members spiritually united to him, your bodies indeed must die, because of the divine sentence passed against sin, and because of the remains of sin in you; but your souls are already made spiritually alive, and shall for ever live in blessedness and glory, through the righteousness of Christ, wrought out for and imputed to you, and by means of that true principle of holiness which is implanted in you, to make you live to God here, and meet for the enjoyment of him hereafter. 11. And if that blessed Spirit, who, together with the Father and Son, raised up the dead body of Jesus Christ from the grave, dwell in you, by peculiar relation, fixed inhabitation, and quickening and sanctifying operation, God, who raised up your anointed Saviour, Head, and Representative, will, in virtue of, and in conformity to, his resurrection, raise up your dead bodies at the last day to a glorious and immortal life by the same almighty operation of his Spirit. 12. Since, therefore, my dear brethren in Christ, all mischief and ruin are conveyed to us by sin, and all the blessings we enjoy or hope for are conveyed to us by the Holy Ghost, we can be under no obligation or reasonable inducement to follow the pernicious motions, or obey the unrighteous demands of our sinful corruption, but are under the strongest obligations to the good Spirit of God, and have the strongest motives to live answerably to his holy dictates and influences. 13. And if any of you, contrary to your Christian character and professions, habitually indulge yourselves in fulfilling your sinful lusts, ye must, notwithstanding all your notions, pretences, or external privileges, in religion, as persons who have no real union with, or interest in, Christ, fall short of eternal life, and be plunged into everlasting misery: but if ye, as true believers, vitally united to Christ by virtue derived from him, in the gracious influences and assistances of his Spirit, resist, subdue, and crucify your corrupt affections, principles, and practices, ye shall, according to the gracious establishment of the gospel, for ever live with him, soul and body, in heaven. 14. For all they who are conducted, assisted, and governed, by the light and influence of God's Spirit, in their minds, wills, affections, and conversation, and they only, as the children of God, are entitled to everlasting life by their adoption, and prepared for it by the implantation of holy principles in their regeneration: 15. For ye have not received the Holy Ghost in order to subject your souls to such servile fears as resulted from the darkness and terror of the legal dispensation, or from legal convictions of your sinfulness and misery before your conversion; but, according to the light, liberty, and joy of the New Testament dispensation, ye have been made partakers of him in his most comfortable and imboldening operations, by which we and other believers are enabled, with holy reverence, affection, fervour, importunity, confidence, and freedom, to address God in our worship, as our reconciled Father in Christ. 16. And in this assured pouring out of our hearts to God through Christ, the Holy Ghost, by working gracious dispositions in us, and by shining upon his own work, doth, in, and by his word, assist and concur with our consciences in witnessing that we are truly the adopted and regenerated children of God: 17. And if we be thus his children, we are necessarily and irrevocably entitled to the rich and glorious inheritance of everlasting life, happiness, and holiness, answerable to our high dignity and relation; and in, and through, and together with Christ our Saviour, Head, Father, and elder Brother, are heirs of God himself, and all that he is, or has, as our everlasting portion; and all our sufferings in this world for his sake, and in conformity to him, shall but promote and issue in our exalted and eternal enjoyment of God, in and together with him. 18. For, after an impartial and careful examining and balancing all accounts, under God's infallible direction, I compute, and am fully satisfied, that all the afflictions we can meet with in this world, or endure for the sake of Christ and his cause, are so short, light, and trivial, as to deserve no comparison with that amazing glory and happiness which shall be publicly allotted to, and bestowed upon us, in the last judgment. 19—22. Nay, such is the transcendent glory of that liberty and happiness which we, the adopted and regenerated children of God, shall then enjoy, that all the irrational creatures in this lower world, with order and earnestness answerable to their nature, long for it, that, by their sharing therein, they may be completely and finally delivered from all that vanity, disgrace, disorder, or pain, which has, by the curse, been introduced among and upon them on account of man's first and other sins. 23. And while they thus long for deliverance from their present vanity and misery, we, who have received the Holy Ghost in his sanctifying, sealing, and comforting operations, as pledges, earnests, evidences, and securities of our future full enjoyment of the heavenly inheritance, are, notwithstanding our peace and joy in believing, exceedingly troubled; and with secret groanings, under the pressure of our remaining sinfulness and affliction, earnestly long for and desire, assuredly hope, and patiently wait for, the full enjoyment of all those exalted privileges and blessings belonging to us as the adopted children of God, and in which, our bodies, raised to an immortality, shall, together with our souls, share in the most honourable and transporting fellowship with God. 24, 25. For at present we have not the actual possession of our full salvation, but only the assured hope of enjoying it in some future period: and, hoping for it as a thing unseen and unenjoyed, we, patiently bearing our troubles, and humbly resigning ourselves to God's will as to the time of its manifestation, wait for it with cheerfulness, firmly expecting that, in due time, we shall be fully delivered from all evil, and crowned with everlasting happiness in heaven. 26, 27. And as this delightful hope encourages and supports our patient waiting under all our griefs and burdens, so doth the Holy Ghost himself, by his concurrent direction, support under our manifold weaknesses and imperfections, which would otherwise carry us into unseasonable and impatient desires of deliverance; for by our remaining ignorance, selfishness, carnality, and perturbation of spirit, we neither know what to pray for, as most conducive to God's glory and our good, nor are capable of ordering our requests in a duly believing, spiritual, fervent, holy, humble, submissive, and steady manner: but the Holy Ghost suggests to us proper requests, and enables us to offer them up, with such vehement pantings and breathings of soul, in an admirable mixture of faith and patience, importunity, and hope, as no words can sufficiently express. But though we cannot fully express those strong inward desires of our heart, the all-seeing and heart-searching God accurately and kindly observes and approves, and is ready to answer, whatever we aim at and desire under the influence of his own Spirit, who always directs and assists to pray according to his will and word; such prayers must therefore certainly be answered in due season. 28. And for our further comfort under all our present tribulations and groanings, we believers know, from God's covenant, promises, relations, and affections to us through Christ, and from our own and others' experience, that all persons, things, and events, however bad or afflictive in their own nature, tendency, or appearances, shall, under the influence of the overruling wisdom, power, and grace of God, work together to promote the spiritual and eternal advantage of all those who sincerely love God as their chief good and highest end, having been, by the effectual working of his Spirit, called and converted to him according to, and in prosecution of, his eternal purpose of grace to them: 29, 30. And this indeed is the original source of all that good which we enjoy or hope for; for whomsoever God from everlasting fixed his love and choice upon, these he determined, in due time, to render conformed to his Son in holiness, needful suffering, and eternal glory, that he might have the honour of being the prime Ruler and Chief of a numerous family of ransomed men:—and whom he thus predestinated to holiness, sufferings, and honours, he, in the execution of this decree, effectually calls and converts to Christ, and unites them with him:—and whom he, not only externally by the gospel, but internally, calls, draws, and renews, by his grace, these he pardons, accepts, and entitles to eternal life, through the righteousness of Christ:—and whom he thus justifies, he, by his Holy Spirit, sanctifies and comforts in this world, and at last admits to the full and immediate enjoyment of himself in heaven, in, with, and conformed to, Christ. 31. If then the infinitely wise, unchangeable, and almighty God be thus our certain, fast, and steady friend; and all his perfections, purposes, promises, and operations, be on our side; what ground have we of confidence, comfort, and wonder! and how little reason to fear the malicious, crafty, and powerful attempts of our most malicious and inveterate enemies! 32. For if God, in infinite love to us, cheerfully and freely appointed his only begotten Son our Surety, brought him into our nature and place in law, and without the least abatement exacted from him all the obedience and suffering due from an elect world, that we, through his atoning sacrifice of himself in our stead, might be saved in him with an everlasting salvation, how is it possible that he should not, along with this unspeakable and leading gift, freely bestow upon us whatever purchased blessing, promised in his covenant, is needful for either our soul or body? 33. And since we are thus chosen in Christ, our sins atoned for by him, and our persons justified in him, how is it possible that any can fix a law charge of guilt upon us, notwithstanding the fearful sinfulness and transgressions which we have reason to mourn over?—since it is God himself, whose judgment is always according to truth, who has accounted and pronounced us absolved from guilt, accepted, and entitled us, as righteous, to eternal life. 34. And however intent our enemies, and however ready our own conscience may be to condemn us, yet who can subject us to the curse of God's law, to our eternal destruction? Christ has suffered the whole punishment due to our sins; has fulfilled the righteousness demanded by the law in our stead; and in receiving the reward of his work, has risen again for our justification; yea, is exalted to his Father's right hand, to exercise a universal dominion for our advantage, and publicly to absolve and adjudge us to eternal life at the last judgment:—and to manifest his own friendship, and secure our continuance in favour with God, he, as our righteous Advocate, pleads the merit of his atoning blood for us in his prevalent intercession, that we, on his account, may be eternally saved. 35—37. It must therefore be impossible that distresses or tribulations of soul or body, or the most permanent and murderous persecutions for his sake, can alienate Christ's heart from us, or ours from him, or exclude us from a share in the saving designs, fruits, and manifestations of his special love.——Nay, through his merits, and mediation, and over-ruling influence, we are, and shall be, safely, successfully, and triumphantly carried through them all; and they are rendered remarkably useful to try and exercise our graces, wean our hearts from this world, ripen us for heaven, and sweeten the thoughts of it to us. 38, 39. For, from the unchangeableness of God's nature, perfections, purposes, covenant, and promises, and of the merit and efficacious intercession of Christ, I am infallibly assured that nothing, however distressing, entangling, or powerful, either in this world or in that which is to come, shall ever be able to cut us off, or set us at a distance, from that infinite love of God the Father, which is fixed upon and manifested to us, and performs all things for us, in and through Christ: nor can anything remove, or root out from our souls, our sincere love to him as our God in Christ.

Reflections upon Chap. VIII.—What dreadful work hath sin made in the world! In the most debasing manner it has turned the natural bent of our heart towards earthly things, and into a fixed and malicious opposition to, and hatred of, God and his law. It has brought corruption and curses on the whole lower creation; and its distresses and infirmities still cleave even to believers. But great is their safety, comfort, honour and happiness, who are united to Jesus Christ. Their justification is complete; their nature and life are in part renewed; and grace implanted governs them. Their present beginnings of spiritual-mindedness, possession of Christ's Spirit, conflicting with remaining corruptions, heirship with Christ, suffering for his sake, and supplication for his mercies, are earnests and pledges of, and shall quickly issue in, their complete and everlasting glorification. Already all things promote, and the perfections, purposes, and providences of God, and the justifying death and powerful intercession of Christ, secure their full and eternal welfare. Why then do we not always triumph in what he is to us, and has done and will do for and to us? Why do we not always rejoice exceed-

I SAY the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost,

2 That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart.

3 For I could wish* that myself were †accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh:

4 Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and ‡the glory, and the ‡covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises;

5 Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.

6 Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel:

7 Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called:

8 That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed.

9 For this is the word of promise, At this time will I come, and Sara shall have a son.

10 And not only this; but when Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac;

* I could wish.—The word in the Greek is in the imperfect indicative, and not in the optative mood, as our translation has it, and should, therefore, be rendered, "I did wish," or "was desirous." The passage would then read thus: "I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart, (for I myself was desirous of being accursed—separated—an anathema, from Christ) for my brethren," &c. He pitied his brethren the more feelingly, because once (like them) he had desired to be separated from Christ. (See Acts 26. 9. Mat. 27. 25.)—An Anon. Correspondent.

"The verb translated 'wish,' would have here been more correctly rendered 'boast,' when the passage would read thus, 'I have great heaviness, &c., (for I myself made it my boast to be separated from Christ,) for my brethren,' &c.—Haldane. This translation would also remove the difficulty of the passage; but it must be acknowledged, that in the New Testament the word is uniformly translated "to will," in the sense of desire, "to pray," "to wish," "to rejoice," (Acts 26. 29. & 27. 29. 2 Cor. 13. 7, 9. 3 John 2), while the word translated "boast," is uniformly different, (Rom. 2. 17, 23. 2 Cor. 7. 14. Eph. 2. 9. Jam. 4. 16, &c.); and, though the proposed version may be sustained by classical use, yet the use of the word in the New Testament seems the only admissible standard.—Ed.

A. M. cir. 4064.
A. D. cir. 60.

* The word "hated," cannot be diluted down to "slighted," or "less favourably regarded." Yet the apostle surely speaks of Jacob and Esau personally, for he speaks of them before they were born: of the one before he was capable of doing good; of the other, before capable of doing evil. But can this be vindicated or explained? Just as far as any of the unsearchable judgments of God can be vindicated or explained, (Rom. 11. 33.) Perhaps two views of the subject limit the human understanding. (1) The distinction between Jacob and Esau is a fact declared on divine authority, which it becomes not the creature to call in question. (2) The sovereignty of God is not a solitary and independent attribute, but God ruling in the exercise of all his attributes of power, wisdom, justice, holiness, goodness, mercy, and truth. (See Dr. A. Thomson's Sermons, p. 11.) Such a ruler cannot do otherwise than right. And if any, on the ground of these attributes, deny the possibility that God should make the distinction before the children were born, the same ground will present the same difficulty in making it at the day of judgment. Nor is the difficulty one whit lessened by resolving the distinction into national privileges; for if national privileges convey any spiritual advantages, the difficulty returns in all its force; and if they convey none, what is their use? And if it be said, the distinction was made on the foreseen differences of character, then is the blessing not of "God that showeth mercy," but of man that "willeth and runneth." (See ver. 15, 16). Hear then the sum of the matter; it is not what man can explain, but, what has God revealed? See Haldane's Exposition.—Ed.

11 (For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;)

12 It was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger.

13 As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.*

14 What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid.

15 For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

16 So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy.

17 For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

19 Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?

21 Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?

ingly in hopes of the glory of God! Why are we not constantly wrapped up in wonder,—all inflamed by the views of his redeeming love? No created thing should ever disquiet our hearts, since nothing can separate us from Jesus' person, or deprive us of his and his Father's love.

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1, 2. I should have been inexpressibly glad, had I been able on good grounds to affirm that the whole of my Jewish brethren were the peculiar objects of God's redeeming favour, and heirs of his distinguished blessings which I have just now mentioned; and I dare, in the most solemn, candid, and Christian manner, appeal to the all-seeing Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit, who search the hearts, and try the reins of all the children of men, that my mind is exceedingly overwhelmed with grief and pain as a woman in travail, whenever I think of their present deplorable condition by means of their unbelief. 3—5. I could cheerfully submit to the greatest sufferings which can be endured without sinning; be cut off from life in the most tremendous manner, and be excommunicated from all the churches of Christ on earth; or even, for a time, cut off from all delightful communion with himself; if it could avail to promote his glory in the faith and salvation of these my dear countrymen, who are descended from Jacob the renowned wrestler with God, and have been nationally adopted as the peculiar people and children of God, and not a few of them made his spiritual children, by special adoption and regeneration;—who have had his glorious temple, ark, mercy-seat, Shechinah, and other visible tokens of his peculiar presence, granted to them;—and have been brought into his covenant for temporal and spiritual blessings, which has been frequently confirmed to them;—and have, in a most solemn manner, received his laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial; his ordinances of worship, and promises of blessings, temporal, spiritual, and eternal;—and have Abraham, Isaac, David, and many other holy men, for their natural ancestors;—and from among whom, in respect of his manhood or human birth, the Messiah sprung, who, in his divine nature, is infinitely blessed in himself, the object of all adoration, and the most High over all the earth. 6—13. But though, to the grief of my soul, the bulk of the Jewish nation are now in a most deplorable condition through their own rejection of the gospel, yet it must not be imagined that God's covenant of promise, which he made with their fathers, is disannulled, or has failed of accomplishment;—for all the natural descendants of Jacob were never considered by God as true Israelites, interested in the saving blessings of it.—The restriction of Abraham's honourable seed to Isaac, who was born by means of supernatural influence, and his descendants to the exclusion of his posterity by Hagar and Keturah, who were born by natural influence; and the after preference of Jacob, a younger child by the same mother at one birth, and no way superior to Esau in natural goodness of qualities or works, plainly manifested that not natural descent from Abraham, but spiritual conformity in faith, marked the intended heirs of promise; and that the Jewish posterity of these patriarchs should in due time, for their unbelief, be excluded from the church; and others, no better in themselves, by the sovereign grace of God, be brought in to fill their room. 14—16. Let none dare to think God unrighteous, in making such a wide difference in his choice and disposal of persons equally sinful and unworthy in themselves; for, as he declared to Moses, he may bestow his undeserved favour, with all its undeserved effects, upon whomsoever he pleases, without any dependence on their free-will, good disposition, careful inquiries, or diligent endeavours, after salvation, as the cause of his conduct. 17. And why may he not, in the same sovereignty, as in the case of Pharaoh the oppressing king of Egypt, advance men, no worse in themselves than others, to high stations, and preserve them for a time amidst manifold judgments, in order that, by tremendous acts, he may at last manifest the glory of his perfections to all around, in their dreadful, but just destruction. 18. From the above instances, it is plainly evident that God, in high sovereignty, extends his free mercy to such sinful and miserable creatures as he pleases, and at the same time leaves other sinners, no worse in themselves, to Satan and their own sinful lusts; that by abusing his word, ordinances, and providences, they may be hardened, as a punishment for their former sin, and as a prelude and means of ripening them for further destruction. 19—21. Let none therefore dare to arraign the most High, as if he were unrighteous in threatening, condemning, or punishing men for that obstinacy in wickedness into which he leaves them to fall, or as if it were necessary for him to account for bestowing his undeserved favours upon some, and withholding them from others; for if a potter, who himself is but a fellow-creature formed of the dust, may, out of the same lump of clay, form vessels for different purposes and degrees of honour, without injuring the clay, why may not the most High Creator, Proprietor, and Lord of all, dispose of his creatures as best answers the glory of his perfections, whether in their undeserved honour and blessedness, or in their deserved shame and contempt? 22. Why may not he, for the glory of his high sovereignty, and manifestation of his much long-suffering the vessels of wrath [b] fitted to destruction: *

23 [c] And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, 24 [d] Even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?

25 As he saith also in Osee, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved.

26 [e] And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God.

27 Esaias also crieth concerning Israel, [f] Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved:

28 For he will finish [†] the work, and cut it short in righteousness; because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Esaias said before, [g] Except the Lord of sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30 What shall we say then? That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, [h] have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith;

31 But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

32 [‡] Wherefore? [i] Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law: for they stumbled at that stumblingstone;

33 As it is written, [k] Behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone, and rock of offence: and [l] whosoever believeth on him shall not be * ashamed.

(1) There can be no question that the stumblingstone of the Jews was Jesus Christ whom they rejected. (1 Cor. 1. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 5—8.) (2) Hear the prophet Isaiah 8. 14. & 28. 16.—" Sanctify the LORD of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offence, to both the houses of Israel," &c. (3) Now surely what the prophet affirms of the LORD of hosts, the apostle applies directly to Christ; wherefore the conclusion is inevitable, that Jesus Christ is the LORD OF HOSTS, " God manifest in the flesh."—Ed.

BRETHREN, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. *

2 For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

4 For Christ is the end of the law [†] for righteousness to every one that believeth.

5 For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them.

6 But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above;)

7 Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead:)

8 But what saith it? The word is nigh

* " Secret things belong to the LORD;" wherefore, in strict accordance with the doctrine both of national election to privileges, and personal election to salvation, it is the duty of believers to pray for all men, even the most reckless and abandoned — the veriest enemies of Christ and of his faith; for no one can tell whether the Lord may not have some such gracious purpose concerning them as he had concerning Paul, whom he apprehended in the very midst of his career of enmity against himself, and persecution of his church.—Ed.

† The end of the law is explained ver. 5, and chap. 7. 10, where the apostle says " it was ordained to life." Now as the law, when broken, became " weak through the (sinful) flesh," and so incapable of conferring life, God, by sending his Son, condemned sin in the flesh, and brought in everlasting righteousness; which righteousness becoming, through faith, the property of the believer — every such believer receives eternal life, which is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Ed.

dreadful power and equity upon obstinate and impenitent sinners, defer their punishment, and even load them with many external benefits, till, by their increased sinfulness, they have rendered themselves more notoriously deserving of his wrath, and ripe for destruction? 23, 24. And why may he not take this course in order to manifest the transcendent and endearing riches of his glorious grace in the salvation of those, whom, from all eternity, he chose to everlasting life, and whom he prepares for it by his renewing and sanctifying grace,—even all his effectually-called ones, whether Jews or Gentiles; 25—29. From these predictions of Hosea and Isaiah, it is plain that God always intended to form a people for himself by the call of the gospel, where he had none; while only a remnant of the Jews should be saved; and designed, in awful justice, to reject the body of the Jewish nation, and other objects of his wrath, on account of their sin, while in free mercy he saves the objects of his love, Gentiles as well as Jews. 30. In fulfilment of which predictions, and to manifest which mercy upon the one hand, and just wrath on the other, the poor ignorant idolatrous heathens, who, instead of knowing, concerning themselves about, or endeavouring to perform, any good works, had lived in every sinful abomination, have many of them been made by faith to receive and share of the justifying righteousness of Christ, revealed and offered in the gospel. 31. On the other hand, the Jewish descendants of Jacob, who, with great but misguided zeal, have pursued after righteousness for justification by their own obedience to the law of Moses, have neither fulfilled, nor received any righteousness which can answer the demands of that law for which they are so zealous, or procure their acceptance with God, and title to eternal life. 32. And their falling short of righteousness is not owing to any decree of God hindering them, but to their own pride, perverseness, and unbelief, through which they refuse to accept it, as provided for them in Christ, and freely offered in the gospel, and desire to be justified, in whole or in part, by their own obedience to the law; 33. For, as Isaiah foretold, they take such offence at Jesus Christ, the only foundation of the gospel church and of all salvation, on account of his mean parentage, appearance, poverty, and crucifixion, the spiritual nature of his kingdom, and his humiliating doctrines, that they cannot think of owing any part, much less the whole, of their salvation to him alone.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—Certain and manifest is the supreme Godhead of Jesus Christ and his Spirit, who search men's hearts, and by whom they may swear. And very marvellous in himself, and just suited to our need, is he, who is at once a true man, the promised seed of the patriarchs, and the most high God, blessed for ever. Great is the honour and mercy to stand related to God as church members, and to enjoy their privileges. Yet, alas, many such, through their unbelief, fall short of spiritual and eternal salvation! But whether men be saved or damned, the purposes of God are executed, and his promises fulfilled. How free, how sovereign and endearing, is his electing love towards so many sinners, Gentiles as well as Jews, without any regard to their foreseen goodness! And righteous is his whole conduct, as he withholds from none what he ought to give them, and punishes none but on account of their sins, by which they deserve, and are fitted for, destruction. Gloriously he marks his sovereignty over his creatures. And it is absurd then to quarrel with his dispensations, or to pry into, or perplex ourselves with, his secret purposes, especially when his word, which is our only rule, gives all reasonable encouragement to faith and holiness as the means of manifesting our election. Yea, men's quarrelling with the sovereignty, mercy, or justice, of his conduct, will provoke him to give them up to judicial blindness and incurable hardness of heart. Multitudes effectually prevent their own justification and salvation by seeking righteousness in their own works, in opposition to the righteousness of Christ. But happy and full is their deliverance who rest on him alone for righteousness and strength.

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1. Notwithstanding these awful hints concerning God's rejection of my Jewish brethren, which I have suggested, my most earnest desire and prayer to him is, that, as far as can possibly consist with his glory, he would prevent the miseries which are justly impending over their heads, and give them faith in Christ, to their present and everlasting salvation. 2. For, however they hate, reproach, and persecute me, I must think and testify, that many of them have a real zeal for God and his laws; but, alas! wholly misguided, leading them off from Christ and the true method of righteousness and salvation. 3. For through their own chosen carnality and ignorance,—having mean and unworthy thoughts of the righteousness of God's nature, manifested in the strict demands and awful penalties of his law, and of that perfect righteousness of obedience and suffering by which Christ satisfied his law and justice,—they exert themselves to their utmost to make their own imperfect, ceremonial, and external performances stand as their righteousness for acceptance with God to eternal life;—and thus, through their wilful ignorance and desperate pride, they refuse to receive or owe their salvation to the righteousness of Christ, freely offered to them in the gospel, as the alone ground of their justification before God. 4. For as the manifestation of Christ was the great end of God's giving to the Jews their laws, so he, by answering all the types of the ceremonial law, has abolished it; and by fulfilling all the demands of the moral law as a broken covenant of works, has brought in a perfect and everlasting righteousness as our surety, to be imputed to every one, Jew or Gentile, who, under a sense of his own sinfulness and misery, receives and rests on him alone for salvation, as he is offered in the gospel. 5—8. For if men will 10 For with the heart man believeth [b] unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

11 For the scripture saith, [c] Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 [d] For whosoever shall call‡ upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

14 [e] How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, [f] How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things?

16 But they have not all obeyed the gospel: for Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed § our ‖ report?

17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

18 But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.*

[a] 1 Sam. 12. 22. Ps. 94. 14. Jer. 31. 37. Gen. 17. 7. Deut. 32. 9.

* The apostle specially describes himself as one of "the seed of Abraham," because the word "Israelite" might describe one who had become an Israelite by proselytism and adoption; and he traces his pedigree to Benjamin as a tribe that had never rebelled against the house of David, nor apostatized to idolatry.—Ed.

† Since the "election of grace" embrace merely a "remnant," that election must be personal, to salvation, and not merely national, to civil institutions, and ecclesiastical privileges. For these institutions and privileges—the latter of which are commonly called the "means of grace," were not peculiar to a remnant, but common to the whole nation. See ver. 7.—Ed.

I SAY then, [a] Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.*

2 God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying,

3 Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election† of grace.

6 And if by grace, then is it no more of insist upon being justified by their own personal righteousness as a fulfilment of the law, it is plain, from Moses' own declaration, that nothing less than a perfect fulfilment of all its demands can in the least avail to their justification and eternal life: but in hinting at the doctrine of justification by faith, he darkly represents Christ, not as needing to be brought down from heaven, but as already come into our world and nature, to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself; not as needing to be raised from the dead, but as actually raised again for our justification, and in order to apply his purchased redemption;—and represents him and his righteousness as brought near to our very ears, mouth, and heart, in the gospel, when we hear, read, or receive it as preached by his authorized ministers, that he may be the infallible foundation, and glorious object of our faith. 9. And we are assured that, if we with our heart believe in Christ as our only Saviour, who died for our offences, and rose again for our justification, and make a proper and open confession of him as such, we shall certainly be partakers of eternal salvation. 10. For not by a mere assent of our mind to the revealed truths of God, but also by a consent, approbation, and acceptance of our will and affections, we must believe in our crucified and risen Redeemer, in order to the obtaining a complete justifying righteousness in him; and with our mouth we must make a public, open, and resolute confession of him as such before the world; and must plead what he hath done and suffered, as the only ground of our hope towards God, if we would obtain a final and complete salvation. 11—13. And, as was foretold by the prophets Isaiah and Joel, Jews and Gentiles, who believe on and worship him, have now equal access to all the inexhaustible riches of his righteousness, grace, and salvation. 14, 15. It is therefore necessary that the gospel be preached by ministers authorized and sent by Christ, to Gentiles as well as Jews, that they, hearing these glad tidings of salvation, may cordially believe the same, and even highly esteem and regard the publishers of such important declarations and offers of justification, adoption, and eternal glory, through him. 16. But, as Isaiah foretold, neither Jews nor Gentiles have generally hearkened to the gracious calls of the gospel, nor yielded up themselves to the authority of God therein by the obedience of faith; 17. Yet it is nevertheless certain, that the hearing of it preached, by persons divinely authorized, is the ordinary mean of God's working faith in men's hearts by the almighty operation of his Spirit. 18—21. And it is plain, as was foretold by Moses and Isaiah, that the gospel, to the no small vexation of the envious Jews, has already been preached, far and wide, among the ignorant and idolatrous Gentiles; and through the effectual operation of God's sovereign grace, hath been attended with no inconsiderable success.—And no less evident is it, as was foretold by Isaiah, that the Jews have obstinately and ungratefully rejected Christ and his gospel, notwithstanding the most endearing, persuasive, and miraculous means, and the long-continued pains taken for their conversion, by him, his Spirit, and ministers.

Reflections upon Chap. X.—Faithful ministers very earnestly desire and pray for the salvation of their hearers. And it is a great grief and burden to their spirits, that so many, through ignorance, pride, and attachment to self-righteousness, refuse Jesus and his righteousness and salvation so freely offered. But infinite is the mercy that he and all his fulness are so fit for us, and brought so near to us in the gospel; and that this gospel is now extended to Gentiles as well as Jews, and is so long continued, even to the most criminal despisers thereof. The glad tidings of mercy and grace which it contains, are suited to the diversified conditions of all the sinful men who hear it. And with full persuasion and close application ought we then to embrace it.—With boldness and fidelity ought ministers to preach it. And highly should they be esteemed, if faithful, for their work's sake. But it is criminal and dangerous to attempt preaching without a commission from Christ; or to continue rejecting him and his gospel, till the time of God's patience hath expired.

Chap. XI.—Ver. 1. From these awful hints by the prophets, and the no less awful present appearances of things among the Jews, we must not conclude that God has universally, and for ever, abandoned his whole favourite nation, who have so long been his peculiar people, in visible covenant with him. No,—I, myself, to whom, notwithstanding the greatest unworthiness and guilt, his grace has been exceeding abundant, am an Israelite, of the very meanest and first miscreant tribe. 2—5. Whatever he has done with multitudes of the natural descendants of Jacob, and might justly do with them all, for their many heinous provocations, yet he has rejected none whom, in his eternal purpose, he chose to special and saving benefits; but, as in the days of Elijah, when idolatry and other wickedness so remarkably prevailed, that he thought scarcely a true worshipper of God but himself remained among the ten tribes, the Lord had secretly preserved no less than seven thousand; so now, notwithstanding our general and deplorable infidelity, a large remnant have been effectually brought to believe in Christ to the saving of their souls, according to that free choice which God, from all eternity, made of them in the riches of his own sovereign mercy and grace. 6. And if the choice, calling, and saving of some, rather than others, be entirely the effects of his mere favour and grace, then it is plain that no foreseen good works deserved, or moved him to it; nothing being more evident than that the mere undeserved favour and mercy of God, and the merit of men's good works, are so directly contrary the one to the works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work.

7 What then? [c]Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but [d]the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded [e]

9 And David saith, [g]Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumblingblock, and a recompense unto them:

10 [g]Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back alway.

11 I say then, [h]Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather [i]through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

12 Now, [k]if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the [‡]diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, [l]how much more their fulness?

16 For if the first-fruit[*] be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

17 And [q]if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive-tree, wert graffed[†] in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive-tree;

18 Boast not against the branches: but if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt say then, [r]The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in.

20 Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. [s]Be not high-minded, but fear:

21 For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: [‡] otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.[§]

23 And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again.

other, that they cannot be blended together; but salvation, from first to last, must be simply of the one, to the exclusion of the other. 7—10. The present state of the Jewish nation stands therefore precisely thus, that all such of them as were divinely chosen to everlasting life have obtained, or shall obtain, righteousness entitling to it through faith in Christ: but the rest, who are the far greater part, are, in the awful, but just providence of God, and according to his predictions by Isaiah and David, given up to their own lusts, to blind and harden themselves in their rejection of Christ and his gospel, and thereby bring upon themselves fearful curses and miseries, spiritual and temporal, in this world, as well as everlasting destruction in that which is to come. 11. Nor has God permitted them to stumble at his crucified Son, in order that their whole nation should fall from all their ancient privileges into utter and everlasting ruin; but has overruled their obstinate unbelief into an occasion of sending the gospel to the Gentiles, that the ready reception of it among that idolatrous and detested people might stir up the Jews to vie with them in faith and obedience, that these despised Gentiles might not wholly take away the gospel and its privileges from them. 12. Now, if the apostasy of the Jews, and their falling off from their peculiar relation to God as his people, be, in his infinite wisdom, made a mean of sooner enriching the Gentiles with the gospel and all its inestimable blessings, how much more shall the faith of the Gentiles be confirmed, their blessings increased, and converts multiplied, when, in some future period, the Jewish nation shall be converted to Christ, and enjoy the fulness and privileges of the gospel! 13. It is with great pleasure that I, who reckon myself highly honoured to be the apostle of Jesus Christ for the conversion and edification of you Gentiles, mention this to you for your comfort. 14. And it would give me inexpressible joy and satisfaction, if, by this or any other means, I could be an instrument of stirring up my Jewish brethren to bethink themselves, and believe in Christ, to their own everlasting salvation; 15. For if God's casting them off from being his peculiar people for their obstinate unbelief has been made an occasion of bringing you Gentiles, by the gospel, into a state of favour and fellowship with him, through faith in his Son, shall not their future general conversion to Christ be a mean of introducing an inexpressibly more glorious, enlarged, and lively condition to the gospel church? 16. And this general conversion we ought to hope for.—For God's sanctification of Abraham, and others of their ancestors, to his service, and entering them and their seed into special covenant with himself, imports that though, for their wickedness, the present and many succeeding generations should be cut off from the favour of God, and expelled from his church, yet he will, in some future period, from regard to that ancient covenant, convert multitudes of them to Christ, and reinstate them in his church. And of this I and others, who are already converted, are a specimen, pledge, and earnest. 17. But if the natural descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, those friends of God, be, for their obstinate unbelief, cut off and expelled from God's covenant and church, that you, ignorant, unprofitable, and wicked Gentiles, fit only for everlasting destruction, might, in the transcendent mercy of God, be brought into the church as their spiritual posterity, and, along with believing Jews, made partakers of all the promises, ordinances, privileges, and blessings of the gracious covenant made with Abraham; 18. Never insult or contemn these rejected Jews, nor imagine yourselves more worthy than they. Remember ye contributed nothing to the honours and privileges of Abraham and his posterity, but receive your gospel privileges through means of Abraham as their root, and the father of all the nations of them that believe. 19. Think not that they, as superlatively wicked, were expelled from God's church, that you, as better, might be admitted in their stead. 20. It was for their rejection of Christ, and the way of salvation through him, that they were cast out from their peculiar relation to God, and the gospel removed from them to you; and it is only by faith in Christ, and his salvation, as freely offered to you, that ye have been admitted to, and continued in possession of, the privileges which they have lost; never therefore ruin yourselves by contempt of others, or by a conceit of your own worthiness, or ability to persevere in your holy profession; but study always to maintain a holy reverence of God, a humble diffidence of yourselves, and a filial fear of falling by unbelief as they have done. 21. For if God would not pass over, without fearful punishment, the obstinate unbelief of his ancient people, descended from Abraham his distinguished friend, what need have ye, who, contrary to all your deserts, have been admitted into his gospel church in their stead, to take heed, lest, by pride and unbelief, you should provoke him to punish you in a similar manner; 22. Observe, and ponder therefore with solemn awe, the dreadful, but just, severity which God has exercised towards the obstinate and rejected Jews, and the transcendent mercy and kindness which he has manifested towards you Gentiles in sending his gospel to you, opening your hearts to receive it, admitting you into his church, and rendering you partakers of his blessings, if by an humble faith ye improve his kindness. But if, through pride and unbelief, ye abuse his merciful dispensation, assure yourselves that He will also unchurch you, and all other merely nominal Christians. 23, 24. And know, that even the Jewish nation, who are now rejected, shall, in God's time, by an effectual conversion to the faith of Christ, be again made members of his church: for if, by his supernatural and almighty grace, you idolatrous Gentiles, worthless, unprofitable, and wicked, have been brought into his church, to render you fruitful in good works, much more may we expect that these descendants of Abraham, with whom God established his covenant in their pious ancestors, shall, by faith in the exalted Messiah, be brought back into the covenant and church of God, from which their unbelief had cut them off, that they may partake of the spiritual benefits thereof. 25. 2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

3 For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think [†] soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.

4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office;

dulge yourselves in vain reasonings or self-conceit, or in contempt of them, know that this strange and tremendous abandoning of most of the Jews to their ignorance and unbelief, will only continue till there be a general conversion of the Gentile nations to Christ; 26, 27. And then shall multitudes of all the tribes of Israel be in like manner turned to the Lord, through faith in Christ, as the gracious forgiver of their guilt, subduer of their lusts, and reformer from their sinful practices, manifested to them according to the ancient predictions. 28. In judgment to them, and in order to the merciful spread of the gospel among you, they are indeed now enemies to, and contradicters and blasphemers of it, and have thereby cut themselves off from the blessedness of it: but, with respect to that absolutely gracious choice which God made of them as his peculiar people, they are still the objects of his kind and merciful regard, in consequence of that special favour which he had for Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and other pious ancestors. 29. For the effectual calling and other blessings which God bestows upon men in consequence of his choice of them in his eternal purpose, being irrevocable, we may depend on his infinite wisdom, power, goodness, and unchangeableness, that this chosen nation shall again be turned to the Lord, and multitudes saved with an everlasting salvation: 30. For as ye Gentiles, who had for many ages continued in the most hateful, helpless, and hopeless circumstances, have now, through occasion of their unbelief, been brought into God's covenant and church, and made partakers of his saving benefits; 31. Even so, in like manner, the generality of the Jews are now, for a time, permitted to reject Christ and the gospel, that, through your receiving and preserving the gospel in the world, it may at length be preached unto them, and, through faith in their own Messiah, they may be mercifully restored to their ancient privileges, and many of them eternally saved. 32. Thus by turns hath God, in infinite sovereignty, as well as equity, shut up mankind, first the Gentiles and then the Jews, under the power of their disobedience and unbelief, and out of his visible church, that in his own time he may magnify the exceeding riches of his grace, in calling multitudes of all ranks, among both Jews and Gentiles, to himself. 33. O the unbounded, the unfathomable depths of his wisdom and knowledge, and of his counsels and dispensations, especially those which relate to the disposing of, and preparing men for, their eternal state! How impossible is it for created minds to explore the reasons of his determinations with respect to particular persons or nations! And how intricate and unknown are the methods of his providence for accomplishing his great designs! 34. How impossible it is for mere creatures to penetrate into the secret thoughts and noble schemes of his infinite mind, who is the great Sovereign of heaven and earth; and which he, by the most improbable means, pursues in the most unsearchable dispensations of providence! And how impossible for any to assist him in forming his plans, or to direct him in accomplishing them! 35. Very absurd then is it to imagine that any creature, and especially any sinful man, Jew or Gentile, should have any claim of debt upon the infinite God, the Creator and Preserver of all. 36. For not only all things relative to his dispensation of justice and mercy, but all things in heaven, earth, or hell, are of him, as their Contriver, Creator, and Cause; and are all preserved, directed, governed, and disposed, by him; and are all intended, formed, preserved, and managed for the glorious illustration of his infinite perfections.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—Awful is the thought, that so many members of the visible church should be eternally rejected and ruined. Yet it is a great mercy that, in the very worst of times, a remnant, larger than many think, are saved; that our whole salvation is owing to God's free and rich grace; and that not one elect vessel can be finally lost. But it is absurd for men to attempt connecting their merits with God's grace, as joint causes of their eternal salvation, when the one is utterly eversive of the other. Dreadful are spiritual judgments especially when least perceived! and awful is the providence when God casts off a person, and especially a nation, which he has long remarkably favoured. It is necessary therefore for all professors humbly to fear and tremble for themselves, and to make sure their standing in Christ by vigorous and often repeated acts of faith. But when God casts off one nation, he supplies their room in his church and covenant with another; and when they are long cast off, God can nevertheless mark his regard to their ancestors, and to his promises made to them, in showing them distinguished favour at last.—Blessed indeed will be the period when both Jews and Gentiles shall be generally gathered to Jesus Christ. May the Lord hasten it in his time! And with reverend awe should we adore and acquiesce in all his purposes and providences, resolving all into his infinite wisdom, power, mercy, equity, and high sovereignty, and referring the glory of all things, all events, to his name!

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. Having thus largely represented unto you the exceeding riches of God's mercy and grace, in the election, justification, sanctification, and other blessings, which are granted to you who are in Christ, let me affectionately and earnestly beseech you by them, and by all the endearments, encouragements, obligations, and assistances, which result from them, solemnly, cordially, and unreservedly, to devote your own selves, soul and body, not as an atoning, but as a living sacrifice of thankful acknowledgment—that ye are the Lord's, quickened by his Spirit, and vigorously determined, through your whole life, to serve and glorify him;—and purified from your sinful lusts, that by faith and evangelical obedience ye may serve him in a spiritual, reasonable, and acceptable manner, answerable to his nature and the obligations ye were under to him. 2. And in order to this, beware of forming worldly schemes of happiness, or of complying with, or being moulded into, the spirit and temper, courses and fashions, of carnal and worldly men; but let your chief aims and endeavours be to become more and more inwardly renewed by the Holy Ghost, that ye may be more capable of understanding, practising, and recommending the excellent and important truths of God contained in his word. 3. And in order to your understanding this perfect will of God with advantage to yourselves and others, I, as an apostle of Jesus Christ, do, in his name, charge you that no one of you be puffed up with self-conceit, or contempt of others, by any distinguishing gifts or offices which he hath received in the church, nor entertain a higher opinion of his own gifts, graces, or usefulness, than his spiritual and holy endowments admit of: but that ye be all humble and modest in your thoughts of yourselves, remembering that whatever gifts, graces, or offices ye enjoy, have been freely bestowed upon you by God, for the edification of others as well as yourselves. 4, 5. For as in the human body all the different members are so framed and placed, that each may promote the good of the whole body; so we believers, who are united to Christ as his mystical body, and animated by his Spirit, ought all of us, in our different stations and endowments, to consider ourselves as closely knit together by one Spirit under him as our Head, and lay out ourselves to promote the general good of the church and of one another. 6—8. Having therefore received spiritual gifts in different forms and degrees, let us, by the assistance of God, faithfully use and improve them for his glory, and the edification of his church, according to our respective offices and stations. If we are called to preach the gospel, and explain the scriptures, let us do it according to the common principles of faith, clearly exhibited in the word of God. If we are called to state, explain, prove, and defend divine truths, and instruct and establish our hearers in them, let us, by searching the scriptures, and comparing one passage with another, labour to manifest the truth, as it is in Jesus, with all possible plainness and faithfulness. If we are called to apply the word of God to men's consciences, in exhortation to duty, reproof for sin, caution against sin or danger, or in comforting men under doubts, fears, discouragements, infirmities, temptations, or troubles, let us, with tender sympathy, and dependence on God's direction, deal with them in a manner suited to their circumstances.—If we are called to the office of deacons, for collecting, taking care of, and distributing the church's stock for the support of the poor, the ministers and ordinances of Christ, let us act with the utmost prudence and faithfulness, frugality, cheerful liberality, impartiality, and diligence, as occasions require. If we are called to the office of ruling elders, for inspecting the manners of the people, admitting them to sealing ordinances, censuring them when scandalous, and directing the circumstances of public worship, let us attend to this work with the greatest application, thoughtfulness, and diligence. And if we are called to visit the sick and imprisoned, let us attend to it with the utmost kindness and compassion, taking care that none of them want what is needful and convenient for them.——9. As to general duties, incumbent on you as private Christians, be most careful, sincerely, ardently, and practically, to love Christ, and God in him, above everything else, and your fellow-christians and neighbours in an unfeigned, hearty, and operative manner. Abhor, flee from, and mourn over, everything sinful, as the very worst, and the sum of all evil; but desire, choose, pursue after, adhere to, and practise, in heart, speech, and behaviour, whatever is truly honourable to God, or useful to yourselves and others. 10. Let not only your mutual affection to your brethren be extremely cordial, tender, and ardent, but also respectful: and think and speak more honourably of your brethren's graces and services than of your own, concealing their weaknesses and faults, instead of magnifying and exposing them; being conscious of your own weakness and sinfulness, though earnestly careful to do the duties of your station. 11. Always beware of, and avoid, an indolent and careless temper and behaviour, whether in civil or religious affairs; and engage in every work you are called to under the influence of the Holy Ghost, and with a fervent love to God, zeal for his glory, and always aiming to serve the Lord Christ, in obedience to his command, and for his honour. 12. And, to animate you in your work, always cherish the most joyful hopes of complete salvation, as your gracious reward and eternal rest. And, in these views and hopes, be constantly patient, submissive, and resigned to the will of God in all your present provocations, trials, and afflictions, and sustain them with an abiding and holy courage. And as nothing can be done without divine direction and help, be earnest, importunate, and persevering, in your prayers to God, with faith in the name of Christ, for the necessary supplies and aids of his Spirit. 13. Yea, that there may be no defect in your Christian love to others, always make conscience of readily communicating your property for the relief of your fellow-professors, and of laying out yourselves kindly to entertain and lodge in your houses poor strangers, or persecuted ministers and Christians. 14. And if ye be maliciously abused and persecuted for righteousness' sake, instead of returning the injuries done you, speak civilly to and as well of your persecutors as truth will permit; heartily wish, pray for, and study to promote their real happiness, temporal, spiritual, and eternal; and supplicate God to convince, forgive, and reform them. 15. Always study a most affectionate and sympathizing temper towards your neighbours and fellow Christians, as being of the same nature or spirit with them. Instead of envying any their happiness, temporal or spiritual, rejoice with them in it, after the example of God. If any be afflicted, labour, by compassionate sympathy, to soften and mitigate their distress; and do all that is in your power, by prayer, counsel, and otherwise, to comfort and assist them: for you might have been, or soon may be, in such distressed circumstances yourselves. 16. Whatever differences there may be among you as to less important opinions, outward circumstances, or inward attainments, study to live harmoniously, affectionately, and charitably with one another. Never affect pre-eminence over others, but treat inferiors with the most condescending kindness. Never aspire after great things in this world, but rather look on them with a holy indifference and disdain. If Providence bring you into straits, labour to bring down your minds to them. If it raise you up to temporal wealth or dignity, never set your heart upon, or be puffed up with it. Always carry yourselves with the greatest affability, courteousness, and freedom, to persons of the lowest rank; and never be ashamed of any proper office of brotherly kindness to the most poor or despicable saint on earth. And whatever honours or endowments God may grant you, never think yourselves wiser than others, or capable of managing your affairs without the direction or counsels of God or men. 17. If any shall injure you, never imitate their evil example, nor make yourselves partakers of their guilt, by revengefully doing anything passionate, unjust, or hurtful to them; but always labour to contrive and pursue such methods, or procure such things, as are manifestly good, generous, and honourable, not only in the sight of God, but of all the unprejudiced part of mankind, that the worst of your enemies may never be able to upbraid you with doing anything unworthy or indecent. 18. And however difficult it may be, in some cases, labour, as far as is consistent with truth and faithfulness, honour, and conscience, to cultivate a peaceable and quiet temper and carriage, in all your dealings, with persons of all ranks, professions, and characters, since on this the beauty, order, and happiness of society, civil or sacred, your own comfort, and the credit of religion, so much depend. 19. And since it is the supreme right and prerogative of God himself to inflict just punishments on such as deserve them, either by his own immediate judgments, or by the equitable laws of civil government, never take any private revenge for yourselves upon such as have injured you, nor even prosecute them at law, from a litigious and resentful temper of spirit; but rather endeavour to turn away their wrath by soft answers and a yielding conduct, or retire out of the way of their violence: and if they will continue their rage against you, calmly leave them to the righteous judgment of God. 20. Yea, if any, who have injured, abused, and persecuted you, be reduced to afflicted and necessitous circumstances, carefully seize the opportunity, and assist and relieve them to the utmost of your power; for by such kind and merciful conduct you will either mollify their spirit, and render them your penitent and fast friends; or, if they remain obstinately ungrateful and perverse, they will but aggravate their guilt, and bring upon themselves the most lasting, terrible, and destructive judgments of God. 21. Upon the whole, let no ill treatment discompose your spirit, inflame your angry, malicious, and impatient passions, and so enslave your mind, and give your adversaries opportunity of triumphing over you; but labour, by the grace of God, to exercise all meekness, kindness, and forbearance, under the highest provocations; and thus overcome your enemies, and your own resentments, by returning good for evil.

LET every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers* that be are ordained of God.

2 Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth† the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation:

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same:

4 For he is the minister of God to thee for good.‡ But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

5 Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake.

6 For, for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing.

7 [a]Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

‡ This is the proper description of the civil magistrate. 1. He is God's minister — God's servant — bound, appointed, to obey him. 2. comes professed Christians to have their hearts weaned from the profits, pleasures, and cares of this present world, and from its sinful practices and customs, and to labour after a thorough conformity to the image of God, and an experimental, practical, and approving acquaintance with everything good. It is very honourable when, amidst great gifts, graces, and services, we keep up humble thoughts of ourselves and a high esteem of others, and account whatever we have as freely bestowed on us for the good of the church. Great is the kindness of Christ in so plentifully providing gifts, graces, offices, and officers, for the edification of souls. And it is delightful when all, with integrity, diligence, and cheerfulness, are employed for that end. O what undissembled and ardent love to God and man: what hatred of everything evil; what diligence in our callings; what joyful hope of eternal happiness; what patient resignation; what fervent and persevering prayer; what cheerful liberality; what profound humility; what cordial sympathy; what harmonious concord and peacefulness; what disinterested returning of good for evil—is necessary to enter into the character of a Christian! And great is the grace and power of God which is necessary to work all these in our heart and life.

CHAP. XIII.—Ver. 1. And whether ye be Jews or Gentiles, ministers or people, see that ye conscientiously submit to, and cheerfully obey, the civil governors who rule over you, in everything lawful; for they are advanced to their dignity by the providence of God, derive their whole authority from him as the supreme Governor of the world, and therefore ought to be acknowledged and obeyed as his deputies and vicegerents. 2. Whoever therefore they be, and of what religious profession or worldly circumstances soever, who, in their private capacity, oppose any lawful command of the civil government which is providentially set over them, and in a seditious and treasonable manner, endeavour to disturb, defame, and subvert it, they rebel against the authority of God himself, and oppose an ordinance which he has appointed in his law, natural and revealed, for the protection, safety, and welfare of mankind, and expose themselves to severe punishment from their rulers, and to the everlasting vengeance of God who appointed them. 3. For according to the end of their institution, civil rulers are not authorized by God to punish men for, or deter them from, anything truly good and lawful, but to restrain and punish what is manifestly injurious and disturbing to the commonwealth, and dishonourable to God their supreme Governor, for the caution of others, and to preserve them from the like conduct. If therefore you would be safe from all danger of punishment by them, always live quietly and peaceably, in all godliness and honesty, doing what is morally and politically good: and then you may ordinarily expect the protection, commendation, and encouragement of magistrates instead of their severe resentment. 4. For by the very nature of their office, magistrates are God's deputies, whom, for the common benefit of mankind in this imperfect state, he has authorized to suppress vice, immorality, and profaneness, and to maintain his honour, as the Lord of the world, and the natural, civil, and religious rights of their subjects. If therefore you violate the moral and political laws of their government, by doing what tends to dishonour, weaken, or destroy it, you expose yourselves and families to the most dreadful consequences; magistrates being obliged, as the deputies of God, to punish such as are turbulent, or chargeable with any other notorious crimes. 5. Ye are therefore bound to pay all due subjection and obedience to magistrates, not only for avoiding that punishment which they are able and bound to inflict upon the injurious and rebellious, but chiefly from a principle of religion and conscience towards God, regarding their office as his ordinance, and themselves as his deputies, placed over you in his providence, and acting in his name and authority, in all their lawful injunctions, to whom, as guardians of the state under himself, he requires you to be subject. 6, 7. And since they are the deputies of the most high God, who, by virtue of their office and power derived from him, lay out themselves continually for the security of the rights and liberties of their good subjects, and the restraint and punishment of malefactors, make conscience of honestly paying whatever taxes are laid upon you for the support and dignity of government; and always labour to cultivate a becoming reverence and esteem of them in your minds, as your political fathers and lords; and manifest it in every proper expression of outward homage, honour, or respect. 8—10. Never be either backward or dilatory to pay the tax you owe them, or the debt you owe any other; and never think the just debt of love, which you owe to all mankind, fully paid, but in all circumstances, and by all proper means, desire, contrive, and labour how to exercise it best for their advantage.—For in love to our fellow-creatures in its due latitude and fervour, as founded upon, and springing from, our love to God, and from a sense of his love to us in Christ, we really fulfil all the commandments o the second table of the meral law, relative to chastity, preservation of life, furtherance of wealth, maintenance of truth, charitable contentment, and relative duties: for whenever unfeigned and fervent love reigns in the heart, it sweetly and powerfully restrains from desiring, designing, or willingly doing anything hurtful, and constrains to the performance of every kind office to every one; and so is radically and intentionally a compliance with all the duties of the second table of the law, and will render a man sincerely desirous of, and diligent in performing them. 11. And the more careful ought we to be in cultivating this comprehensive duty of love, as now, under the light and grace, assistances and encouragements, to the gospel dispensation, it is high time for us to shake off all our sloth and carnal security, that Jesus Christ may not, in death or judgment, find us asleep; for now our deliverance from persecution, and chiefly our complete salvation in heaven, is much nearer than when we first believed on him for it. 12. And since not only this night of our outward troubles, but also of our ignorance, unbelief, and sinful courses, is now far spent, and the day of gospel light hath begun to dawn in our souls, and the day of complete redemption is at hand, let us labour to mortify our shameful lusts, and shun every sinful and dangerous practice, and daily grow in, and exercise, the precious, pure, heart-comforting, and adorning graces of God's Spirit, in opposition to the temptations and terrors of sin, Satan, and the world. 13. Let us constantly, uniformly, and progressively, behave in a manner suited to our Christian character, and the privileges which we enjoy or expect:—carefully avoiding all excessive feasting and carousing, revellings, and debaucheries; all whoredom in heart, looks, words, actions, or dress; all angry contentions and brawlings; and all envying or grudging at the prosperity of others. 14. And, on the contrary, let us, by faith, constantly receive, profess, and improve the Lord Jesus Christ, as our Head and Husband, &c., made of God unto us righteousness and sanctification. Let us study to be conformed to him in heart and life, as a mean of rendering us meet for the heavenly blessedness, and of recommending him to all around us; and let us never inordinately consult, care, or provide for our body, to the neglect of our spiritual concerns; nor contrive what may promote or gratify our sinful inclinations.

9 [a] For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

10 But [b] why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for [c] we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.[*]

11 For it is written, [d] As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12 So then [e] every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

13 [f] Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, [g] that no man put a stumblingblock, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way.

14 [h] I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing [†] unclean of itself: but to him that esteemeth any thing to be [‡] unclean, to him it is unclean.

happiness of nations, is the Christian religion! While it directs rulers how to discharge their high trust as deputies of God, it requires the subjects to revere, honour, obey, support, and reward them as such.—An exact honesty in the contracting or payment of debts ought to mark every Christian. And Christian love to our neighbour is a permanent duty, and an amiable and powerful restraint from vices, and constraint to everything virtuous. No murder, adultery, theft, falsehood, coretousness, or relative disorder, can consist with it. But how imperfect, dark, dangerous, and transient, is the present state of things on earth! Great is the mercy that eternal happiness daily approaches nearer to every believer. The faith and contemplation of these things should make us effectually to shake off our sinful indolence and unconcern; to avoid and abhor luxury, uncleanness, strife, and envy; and to receive Jesus, and his righteousness and grace, that we may be always perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord.

Chap. XIV.—Ver. 1. And whereas there are different opinions among you about the continued obligation of some ceremonial rites of the Old Testament dispensation, I earnestly entreat you Gentile believers, who have more distinct views of the liberty of the gospel dispensation, to admit to your church fellowship, and intimate friendship, such Jews as still have some prejudices and scruples with respect to the abolition of these ceremonies, and beware of troubling them with perplexing disputes about meats, days, or things equally trivial; as these tend rather to puzzle and disquiet their minds, than to godly edifying: 2. For some Gentile, or other converts, who plainly perceive the abolition of the ceremonial law, have freedom in their own mind to eat every kind of wholesome food; and some Jewish, or other converts, through the prejudice of education, think that the Mosaic rules, relative to food, are still binding; and hence, when they eat with Gentiles, are afraid to eat any flesh at all. 3. In this case, let Christian charity and forbearance be exercised on both sides; for God bears with the weakness of the one, and hath accepted and taken the other into his family and church, without any regard to ceremonial observances. 4. It is therefore very improper for any of you presumptuously to judge and condemn those whom God hath accepted and approved in their conduct; it is to God, not to you, they are accountable, and by him their state must be decided; and he, having accepted, and admitted them, shall establish them in the faith and fellowship, comfort and holiness, of the gospel, and make them to stand with boldness in the last judgment.——5. Some think that the ceremonial seasons ought still to be regarded and religiously observed: others, who have clearer views of the gospel state of the church, are persuaded, that no day but the Christian sabbath ought to be distinguished from others. 6. As the regarders of the Jewish festivals do it from a principle of conscience towards God, and in obedience to what they think to be still his command, and in honour of Christ, who, they conceive, hath confirmed all the ancient institutions of Moses: and as they who do not observe these days forbear from a principle of conscience towards God, with a view to his glory, and to the honour of Christ's having fulfilled and abolished the whole ceremonial laws: so that they who eat every sort of wholesome food, aim at the honour of God and of Christ, who is Lord of all; and in asking a blessing on their food, give him thanks for allowing them freely to eat whatever is most suited to their conveniency, necessity, and innocent delight; and they who refrain from the meats anciently prohibited, do it with an upright intention to glorify God and Christ, in submitting to his authority in these ancient laws, and which they suppose still binding; and are thankful that enough besides is afforded them by providence: it is therefore proper that they should, in a Christian manner, bear with one another. 7. None ought, and no true believer will dare, to live as if he were his own lord and master, making his own humour the rule, or his own honour, profit, or pleasure, the end of his life: and none ought to make, and no real Christian will make, his own ease or honour the end of his death. 8. For in whatever form or time we live, it ought to be in obedience to the command of Christ, and in order to serve and honour him in all that we think or say, do or suffer; and whether we be cut off by a violent or natural death, it ought to be undergone with resignation to the will and appointment of Christ, who died for us; and with a fiducial commitment of our departing spirits into his hand, and a desire to glorify him and his truths, and the power of his grace, in the manner of our death; and to depart and be for ever with him. Whether therefore we live or die, we all ought to consider ourselves as Christ's property, and at his disposal, and relying upon him, labour to glorify him in our bodies and spirits. 9. For to this very end Christ, at his Father's commandment, laid down his life as an atoning sacrifice for sin, and rose from the dead, and ascended to heaven, that, as Head over all things to his church, he might have an absolute, universal, and sovereign dominion over them that are dead, or that are, or ever shall be, alive on the earth; and might have full power to direct, support under, and sweeten death to his people, as well as bestow everlasting life and honour upon them. 10. Why then should any of you judge, condemn, and think meanly of your Christian brethren about matters which are in themselves indifferent, when all of us shall in a little time appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, and have all our dispositions, tempers, thoughts, words, and actions, judged by him, and our eternal state of misery or happiness fixed in correspondence thereto? 11, 12. For as Christ, to show the irreversible nature of his purpose in this point, has sworn by himself, that every one of mankind shall be obliged to own him as the great God and Judge of all, to whom they are accountable, and by whom their eternal state must be decided, it is plain that all of us, both Jews and Gentiles, of every rank, character, or profession, shall be called to account in the last judgment, not for our neighbours' mistakes and miscarriages, but for our own faith and practice. 13. Let none of us therefore invade Christ's prerogative, by taking upon us to censure and condemn one another; but let us all take care that we never, by a free use of that which is lawful in itself, grieve or insnare our Christian brethren, or draw them into sin, by tempting them either to go into uncharitable censures, or to do that with a doubting conscience which we do with a satisfied mind. 14. For my part, I know, upon the authority of Christ, and the nature and design of his death, which was to reconcile and take away all religious distinctions between Jews and Gentiles, and to remove the curse which the fall had brought upon our created enjoyments, that no sort of food is in its own nature morally, or now any longer ceremonially, unclean: yet, if any one should think any particular sort of food forbidden by God, his eating of it would violate the dictates of his conscience, and so defile it, by doing what it represented as sinful. 15. Yea, if ye yourselves were ever so fully persuaded that you might eat whatever food comes in your way; yet, if your Christian brethren, through weakness, should be troubled and offended at it, it would be very untender and uncharitable stroy not* him with thy meat for whom Christ died.

16 Let not then your good† be evil spoken of:

17 For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness,‡ and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

18 For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19 Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

20 For meat destroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence.

21 It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22 Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

23 And he that [k] doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

* Destroy not the peace of the church, the edification or comfort of thy brother (see ver. 19, 20.), neither run the fearful hazard of leading him to defile his conscience through your example. See ver. 20. —Ed.

† Let not the liberty you enjoy under the gospel, of eating things forbidden in the law of Moses, "be evil spoken of," as if you were influenced by mere appetite; but show by your self-denial that you are influenced by a higher and better motive — the peace and edification of your brother.—Ed.

‡ This "righteousness" is interpreted by Haldane, not of "the righteousness of God imputed to the believer," but of that righteousness "of which he is the subject." And as "peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" are received not merely as gifts, but as powers by which God establishes and maintains a kingdom in the human heart—so righteousness, though a gift (chap. 5. 17.), is also viewed as a similar power by which grace reigns unto eternal life. WE then that are strong* ought to bear† the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.

2 Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification.

3 For even Christ pleased not himself;‡ but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

4 [a] For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope.

5 Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like minded one toward another, § according to Christ Jesus;

6 That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

7 Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God.

* Strong is here applied to those mature Christians who were so firmly established in the liberty of the gospel as to know they were released from Jewish distinctions of meats and days.—Ed.

in you, if ye knew their scruples, to persist in using your liberty before them. Never dare to stagger the faith, wound the conscience, destroy the peace and comfort of a brother, or draw him into damnable sin, for whom it appears Christ, in infinite love, laid down his life. 16. Take heed that your lawful liberty, in the use of meats or other indifferent things, be not reproached as licentiousness through your imprudent and unseasonable use of them to the scandalizing of your weaker brethren. 17. But, after all, the nature, glory, and blessedness of the gospel dispensation, or of the kingdom of grace thereby erected in men's hearts, do not consist in any circumstantial and external things, but in the righteousness of Christ imputed, in true holiness of heart and life, in a solid peace in our own souls, and a peaceful temper and carriage towards others, under a sense of God's being reconciled to us through Christ; and in those supernatural and divine comforts which the Holy Ghost imparts to us through the word. 18. And whoever, in these substantial points of vital religion, behaves as a faithful servant of Christ, obedient to him, dependent on him, and aiming at his glory, is, through him, acceptable to God in his person and services, and is approved by all good and wise men as a sincere Christian, whatever be his opinion in things indifferent. 19. Let us therefore, instead of laying any stress upon, or contending about, such things, labour to pursue what tends to promote our own inward peace and prosperity, and an amicable temper and conduct towards our brethren in Christ; and to propagate such opinions and practices as may strengthen one another in faith and love, hope and holiness. 20. Never, for the sake of meats, or such like indifferent things, obstruct that harmony, love, and peace, spiritual edification and comfort, which the Holy Ghost produces and delights in. All meats may now indeed be eaten without defilement to the conscience, and to every true believer they are cleansed from the curse brought on them by sin; but it is very sinful and injurious for professed Christians to abuse their liberty in even eating them, or doing things indifferent, when they know it will grieve and stumble a tender-spirited brother. 21. In such cases it is right, kind, prudent, commendable, and well-pleasing to God, to abstain from whatever has any tendency to stumble, discourage, prejudice, weaken, or grieve any of our Christian brethren, or insnare them into rash censuring or sinful compliances. 22. If therefore ye be fully persuaded, that ye may eat all manner of wholesome food, and neglect the observance of the ceremonial festivals, hold it fast, and act according to it on all proper occasions, as in God's sight, and with a view to his glory. Happy is that Christian whose conscience can approve his conduct in every point, as both lawful and expedient. 23. But he who eats meats, or practises anything indifferent, while he doubts of the lawfulness of it, is condemned in his own conscience and by the word of God; for, in all matters of a religious nature, it is very sinful for us to practise or comply with anything which we do not believe authorized by the word of God, being at once a contempt of what we allow to be his law, and our only rule of faith and practice, and a violation of the restraints of our own conscience.

Reflections upon Chap. XIV.—With great care ought we to extend church fellowship, as far as can tend to the honour of Christ and the mutual edification of church members in faith and holiness. And no lesser differences, which do not affect the system of divine truth, or the vitals of religion, ought to hinder our mutual intimacy. We have all need to beware of an uncharitable, disdaining, and censorious spirit, and earnestly should we be concerned to comfort ourselves in God's love to us, and to approve ourselves to him, and to our own conscience, in the view of our appearance before his awful tribunal. What reverential thoughts ought we to entertain of Jesus Christ as the great God and Judge of the world!

And in the view of his impartial and final judgment, with diligent care should we, by faith, live on his person and fulness, and to his glory, and avoid all uncharitable judging or offending the weakest of his apparent members. Yea, it becomes us always to act from principles of faith and a good conscience in all things, and to promote each others' edification and peace; and always to remember the excellency and spiritual nature of the blessings of his kingdom, that it consists not in anything external, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Chap. XV.—Ver. 1. Such of us therefore as are established in the faith of the gospel liberty, or who have arrived to greater measures of knowledge and grace, ought, from a compassionate and tender regard to our Christian brethren, whose faith is staggering, and whose judgment and other spiritual attainments are but small, to be meek, forbearing, and patient towards them, and should make kind allowances for, and endeavour to relieve them, under their prejudices, doubts, and fears, rash censures, and conscientious scruples, and not aim at gratifying our own inclinations, much less our own humour, pride, and passions: nor ought we to do anything which is barely lawful in itself, at the expense of offending and injuring the tender minds of others. 2. Let each of us therefore labour to behave towards our fellow Christians and neighbours in such a condescending and engaging manner as will best soften their temper, instruct and win them, and make their souls to grow in grace and knowledge, comfort and holiness, to complete salvation. 3. For even our blessed and all-sufficient Lord Jesus did not indulge his own ease or pleasure, or seek his own safety or honour, to the neglect of others, when here upon earth; but, to promote our salvation, and his Father's honour, condescended and denied himself in numberless instances, and freely submitted to all manner of hardships, sufferings, disgraces, and malignant and blasphemous reproaches, as is represented, through David as a type, in the 69th Psalm. 4. And whatever things were written in the Old Testament, by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, were written, not only for the instruction of our ancestors, but for ours also, that by means of its types, prophecies, histories, and examples, as well as doctrines and laws, we might be excited, animated, and encouraged, to proper patience under our troubles, and made partakers of the joys of faith, the peace of a good conscience, and the comforts of the Holy Ghost, in order to confirm our well-grounded hopes of all needful grace from God now, and glory hereafter. 5. In order therefore to your dutiful and successful improvement of the Scripture, may that God, who is infinitely patient and long-suffering, and who is the author, fountain, and giver of all Christian patience and spiritual comfort, grant you a harmonious, tender, and peaceful disposition towards each other, that you may be entirely united in all doctrines and duties which belong to your Christian state and character, according to the example and command of Christ, and as may be most for his glory, and acceptable to God through him; 6. That, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, ye may, with united hearts and voices, cordially agree in your profession, worship, and practice, to advance the honours and show forth the praises of God, as your God in Christ, who is the centre of all our spiritual union and fellowship. — 7. Notwithstanding therefore your different opinions about matters of little importance, let the endearing example of our great Lord and Saviour, in bearing with our infirmities, who are believers, and receiving us into favour, union, and communion with himself and his Father, influence you cordially to embrace one another as brethren, without distinction of nations or parties, that ye may glorify God by your harmoniously walking together in faith and love, and in the fellowship of the gospel, till ye arrive at all possible perfec-

8 Now I say that [b] Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers;

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

10 And again he saith, [c] Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, [d] Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people.

12 And again Esaias saith, [e] There shall be a root of Jesse,* and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust.

13 Now the God of hope [f] fill† you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

14 And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God, 16 That I should be [g] the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles‡ might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

17 [h] I have therefore whereof I may glory§ through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God.

18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, 19 Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21 But as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand.

22 For which cause also [i] I have been *much hindered from coming to you.

23 But now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you;

24 Whensoever I take my journey into Spain,† I will come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled [k] with your company.

25 But now I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints.

26 For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem.

27 It hath pleased them verily; and their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things.

28 When therefore I have performed this, and have sealed to them this fruit,‡ I will come by you into Spain.

* Or, many ways, or oftentimes.

† It does not appear from any Scriptural record that Paul ever visited Spain. The want of such record is, however, no proof that he did not visit it. Ecclesiastical tradition appears in favour of his visit; nor is such authority, though, in many cases, an insufficient ground to be altogether rejected. But whether the purpose of the apostle was fulfilled or frustrated, matters not—the evidence of his inspiration is, in either case, alike complete. He does not say that God had commanded him, but that he desired, to go into Spain; and the Spirit instructed him to record that holy desire, which God might grant or refuse as seemed good in his sight. Thus David desired to build the temple—God approved of the desire, yet refused its fulfilment, reserving it for another. And the sacred historian was alike inspired in recording the desire, the approval of it, as a desire—the denial of its fulfilment, and its transfer to Solomon.—Ed.

‡ By "sealing" the apostle cannot mean, as some think, "safely delivering;" for that were to intimate that he doubted the integrity of any other conveyance. Does it not rather mean that the delivery of this charitable contribution from the Gentiles to the Jews, would be a practical seal or evidence of the various prophetical promises that the silver and the gold of the Gentiles would be offered at Jerusalem to Messiah, the temple, and the people of God? (See Ps. 72. 10, 15. Is. 60. 5—17.) Of these promises the offering by Paul was the first-fruits—a type and seal of a progressive, but greater fulfilment.—Ed.

tion in his glorious presence for ever. 8—12. And to show you how Christ has admitted both Jewish and Gentile believers to equal privileges and blessings, without making any distinction under the gospel state, observe, on the one hand, how he sprung from, and appeared as a member and minister of, the Jewish church, and taught, obeyed, and suffered, to display the faithfulness of God, and to ratify, establish, and render efficacious, the gracious promises which had been made to the ancient patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob;—and, on the other, that many of those promises, spoken by David, Moses, and Isaiah, represent Christ as publishing the truths of God to the Gentiles, and bringing them into his church, as joyful and grateful members thereof, subjected to him as their Head, and trusting in him as their Saviour, along with the Jews. It is therefore proper that both parties should receive each other with all readiness of mind, as their brethren in Christ. 13. Now may that gracious God, who is the object, ground, and author of all that hope which we, whether Jews or Gentiles, have of spiritual and eternal blessings, plentifully enrich and satiate you with all sorts of divine joys and comforts, and with an abiding, solid, and evangelical peace in your own souls, and with one another, in the lively exercise of faith in Christ, and the promises of the everlasting covenant, that ye may not only have a good, but full and assured hope of future blessedness through the powerfully enlightening, strengthening, witnessing, and confirming operation of the Holy Ghost! 14. And indeed I am firmly persuaded, that ye, my dear Christian brethren, are abundantly endowed with such benevolent graces of the Spirit, as dispose you to mutual kindness in your temper and behaviour one towards another, and with such knowledge of all things necessary to salvation, as renders you capable of instructing each other in the most important truths of the gospel, and of admonishing and exciting one another to everything truly virtuous. 15, 16. I have nevertheless written with the greater plainness and freedom on the head of your Christian liberty, and obligations to mutual charity, because, by the transcendent grace of God, I have been called and furnished to be an apostolic preacher of Christ and his unsearchable fulness in the gospel, especially to the Gentiles, that many of them, being converted by my ministrations, might be devoted as living, holy, and acceptable sacrifices to God, and might offer up to him the sacrifices of prayer, praise, and charitable contributions,—both they and their services being consecrated by the effusion of the gifts, graces, and sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost. 17. In consequence of which call to this office, and success therein, I have great reason to rejoice and glory, not indeed in myself, but in and through Christ, by whose grace I have so abundantly and so successfully laboured in preaching the gospel, and bringing multitudes of Gentile sinners to the faith of Christ, to the praise and glory of God. 18, 19. But in this my humble and holy glorying I neither dare boast of anything I have done myself, nor ascribe to myself what others have done, but I merely hint at what Jesus Christ, by means of my preaching, labours, and sufferings, has wrought, by the almighty influences of his Spirit, in bringing multitudes of the Gentiles to receive and profess him as their Lord and Saviour, and to live in obedience to his laws: and encouraged by his miraculous and gracious operations, which attested my call, mission, and the truths which I preached, I have, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, with great freedom, faithfulness, fulness, and success, published the glad tidings of salvation through Christ to sinful men, all along from Jerusalem, through Canaan, Syria, Lesser Asia, and Greece, till I came to Illyricum, at no great distance from Rome. 20, 21. And, in my ministrations, I have especially studied, agreeably to a prediction of Isaiah, to publish these astonishing mysteries of the gospel where they had never been preached before, that so I might the more remarkably act as one who had received an immediate commission from Christ, and needed no human assistance to introduce me. 22—24. My necessary and extensive labours in these regions have, under the direction of God's providence, hindered me from visiting you, as I sometimes intended; but the gospel being now extensively known, and churches planted in all these places, I hope, according to my long fixed inclination, soon to see you. And if the Lord permit me, as I intend to attempt the propagation of the gospel in Spain, I expect to visit you as I pass westward into that ignorant and idolatrous country, and to be helped forward by you in my journey to it, after you and I have had some comfortable and edifying fellowship together. 25, 26. But at present I am obliged to go south to Jerusalem with the contribution which the Christians of Macedonia and Achaia have made for their holy, but poor, brethren in Judea. 27. In this the contributors have been extremely forward and cheerful, as indeed just gratitude and common benevolence required that they should; for if the sinners of the Gentiles have received the enriching gospel of Christ from Jerusalem, and by means of Jewish apostles and preachers, and have been thereby made partakers, along with the Jews, of all spiritual and eternal benefits, it is certainly proper that they in return should assist with their temporal substance the poor Jewish saints at Jerusalem, and the places about. 28, 29. However, when I have

I COMMEND unto you Phebe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea;*

2 That ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

3 Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus;

4 Who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles.

5 Likewise greet the church that is in their house.† Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the first-fruits of Achaia unto Christ.

* Cenchrea. — Corinth, whence the apostle wrote, was situated on a narrow neck of land between two seas. Cenchrea was one of its ports.—Ed.

† At this early period, the Christians could scarcely be supposed to have places of worship erected; and, as it was their practice at Jerusalem, so it is most probable that at Rome they also assembled in private houses. By "the church in their house," is, therefore, to be understood, not any private godly family—for there must have been several such at Rome—(see ver. 10, 11, 14, 15)—but, either the whole church (that is, all the Christians at Rome when meeting in church form), or the local church of a particular district of the city, assembling in their house for worship and instruction.—Ed.

6 Greet Mary, who [a] bestowed much labour on us.

7 Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my [b] fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were [c] in Christ before me.

8 Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord.

9 Salute Urbane, our helper in Christ, and Stachys my beloved.

10 Salute Apelles [d] approved in Christ. Salute them which are of Aristobulus' [*] household.

11 Salute Herodion my kinsman. Greet them that be of the † household of Narcissus, which are in the Lord.

12 Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa, who [e] labour in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which laboured much in the Lord.

13 Salute Rufus chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine.

14 Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15 Salute Philologus and Julia, Nereus and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints which are with them.

16 Salute one another with an holy kiss.‡ The churches of Christ salute you.

17 Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; § and avoid them,

‡ The practice here directed, being the ordinary mode of salutation among kindred or friends, continued in the church till at least the second century — the sexes sitting apart. As persecution subsided, worldliness was introduced, simplicity was superseded, and discipline was relaxed — this precept was first neglected, and then held obsolete. But whether with propriety, and under due authority, should be matter of serious question to all who believe that the New Testament presents a sufficient, and the only, model of a Christian church.—Ed.

§ Whoever introduces a doctrine, practice, or rite—(for practices and rites can never be separated from doctrine)—contrary, or superadding, to those of the apostles, is to be "marked and avoided." The Lord grant grace to the instructors and rulers of his church to be self-denying, and to church members to be watchful! — Note. How needful, how prophetic, was this apostolic admonition to Rome! where so many novel doctrines, fantastic rites, and unmeaning ceremonies, have not only been invented, but enforced, under all the temporal penalties that could afflict the bodies, and all the spiritual terrors that could affright the souls of men! But "the night is far spent, the day is at hand"—let Christians watch and be sober, and keep their garments! Blessed is that servant, and blessed are those churches, whom their Lord, at his coming, shall find so doing!—Ed.

manifested my tender regard to my dear countrymen, and have faithfully delivered to them this collection, I intend, if the Lord will, to see you on my way to Spain. And from what I have experienced of Christ's powerful operations by me, I hope to come to you plentifully furnished with gospel instructions, offers, and encouragements, and thereby to be an instrument of conveying to you the most abundant gifts, graces, and comforts. 30—32. In order to my accomplishing these desirable designs, I earnestly entreat you, by all the obligations and endearments of the love and grace of Jesus Christ and his Spirit, and by all that love wrought in your hearts by these divine persons, or which you owe to them for all that they have done for or in you, that ye, in the most fervent manner, join your believing, importunate, and persevering supplications to God with mine, for his guidance, protection, and blessing to me,—that I may be delivered from all the snares and violence of my Jewish persecutors, and that the collection which I carry up to Jerusalem may not, through prejudice, be despised or refused, but kindly accepted by the believing Jews, as a mean of weaning them from their dislike to me and the Gentile converts,—and that, being thus prospered in my present way and work, I may, through the kind providence of God, have an opportunity of seeing and conversing with, and preaching to you, for our mutual comfort and edification. 33. Meanwhile, may that God, who is reconciled to us in Christ, and is the Author of all our peace, comfort, and happiness, and who delights in our possessing our souls in peace, and living together in harmony and love, be graciously present with you, by the special influences of his Spirit, to unite your hearts in the strongest brotherly affection, prevent all animosity and discord, and bless you with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus!

Reflections upon Chap. XV.—With much tenderness and self-denial should we behave towards our Christian brethren; and with kind affection bear with one another's infirmities, and study one another's spiritual edification. It is an inconceivable mercy to have access to peruse, and a great honour to be diligent students, searchers, and improvers of the holy scripture. In the ministry of his Son, and the ancient promises, God delightfully laid the foundation of uniting Jews and Gentiles into one gospel church, and he hath done most marvellous things to effect it. Richly replenished are all the promises with Jesus Christ and his grace; and with what joy and peace doth a right believing of them fill our souls! Thrice happy are they who believe them, to their own sanctification of heart and life, by the Spirit of God, and to their eternal salvation. Thrice happy is it when ministers, depending entirely upon God, are diligent, faithful, and successful, in preaching the gospel, and multitudes, through the gospel, attended by the influences of the Holy Spirit, are turned to Christ and his service. And it wears a hopeful appearance when the fervent prayers of ministers and people are united in behalf of Christ's interests, and for one another's mutual advantage; and when spiritual fellowship is their joint delight.

Chap. XVI.—Ver. 2. Readily receive her into your religious fellowship, and assist her in transacting her civil affairs at Rome; for she has generously and hospitably entertained, sheltered, and provided for many poor Christians and destitute strangers. 3, 4. They very much assisted and encouraged me in my ministerial labours at Corinth; and when I was in danger, they exposed their very lives in order to save me. 5. Their religious family, by the blessing of God on their good example, diligent instructions, and prudent regulations, is like a church of Christ for its stated worship of God, purity of manners, and beautiful order.—Epenetus was the first converted to Christ in all the regions of Achaia, and an honourable pledge and earnest of that great harvest of souls which have been since gathered unto the Lord. 7—9, 13. In Christ, or in the Lord, denotes being united to, beloved by, and believing in him, and holding fellowship with him. 10. Apelles hath been tried, proved, and justly accounted a judicious, faithful, and zealous disciple, and servant of, and sufferer for, Christ. 16. A kiss attended with the utmost chastity, sincerity, and spiritual affection, as becometh saints who love one another with a pure heart fervently. 17. In order to cultivate and maintain true Christian love among yourselves, carefully watch against, and avoid, all those teachers, or others, who attempt to form parties among you, and to introduce pernicious opinions and practices, contrary to the pure truths of the gospel which ye have been taught by the inspired servants of Christ. 18. For whoever are of such a spirit and temper, and carry on such designs, are not the true servants of our Lord Jesus, the only Prophet, Priest, and King of his church; nor do they sincerely aim at promoting his interests and glory in the world, but seek to avoid persecution, gain the favour of worldly men, and gratify their own sensual appetites:—to compass which vile ends, they, by high pretensions of kindness for you, or zeal for God's truths and honour, attempt to impose on the good temper and credulity of weak and incautious, though well-meaning, persons, to turn them aside from the ways of the Lord. 19. I am indeed glad that your ready reception of the gospel, and obedience of faith, are become so exemplary and famous in the churches; and that hitherto no seducers have been able to draw you away from the simplicity which is in Christ: but considering your own weakness and depravity of nature, and the subtlety of Satan and his instruments, it is absolutely necessary for you to be very prudent and watchful, able to make a difference between good and evil, truth and error; and so inoffensive, plain-hearted, and sincere, that ye may neither deceive nor injure others, nor be deceived or injured by them; quite unacquainted with all envious, spiteful, and mischievous arts. 20, 24. And for your comfort and encouragement, remember that your gracious and reconciled God, who is the author of all true peace, and delights in your being at peace among yourselves, will stand by you, and in a little time subdue Satan and his emissaries, and defeat their malicious power and subtlety, by his providence and grace, and render you at last fully victorious and eternally triumphant over them.—And, for this end, my fervent, my repeated, prayer to God for you is, that the free favour of your and my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, in all its special fruits and effects, and all communications of grace from him, may be continually and abundantly with you, to guide and strengthen, sanctify and comfort, defend and save you, and carry you through all temptations and dangers, till ye arrive, with triumph, at his heavenly kingdom. 25—27. Now, to that great, gracious, and almighty God, who is able to defeat all the attempts of your spiritual enemies, and to preserve you from falling into sins or error, and to settle, strengthen, and confirm, you in faith, comfort, and holiness, according to, and by means of, the glad but incomprehensible tidings of salvation to sinful men, which Jesus Christ himself preached while on earth, and which I, having them revealed to me by the inspiration of his Spirit, labour to publish in the world,—even those glorious doctrines, which were long entirely hid from the Gentiles, and but obscurely hinted to the Jews, in types, shadows, and dark prophecies; but are now, under the gospel dispensation, evidently and openly manifested to both Jews and Gentiles, in the ministrations of his servants, and the accomplishment and explication of the Old Testament figures and predictions, according to his special and unchangeable purpose, appointment, and command,—in order that, through the influences of his Spirit attending the same, they might be persuaded and enabled to believe in Christ, and, by virtue derived from him, perform all holy obedience to him,—even to that God who alone is originally, essentially, infallibly, wise in himself and in all his dispensations, particularly in his contrivance and execution of the gospel scheme of salvation, and who is the only author and fountain of all the wisdom that is to be found in any creature whatsoever,—be all adoration, thanksgiving, honour, and blessing, through Jesus Christ as the only Mediator, by whom our praises and prayers are to be offered, and are acceptable to him for evermore.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—The Christian religion delightfully promotes friendship and good manners. It teaches us to pay civil respect, in a decent manner, to persons of all ranks, and gratefully to return favours shown to us in the best way we can. It gives a holy turn to a genteel behaviour, and makes men sincere in wishing the temporal, and especially the eternal prosperity of their friends.—With deep concern should all Christians labour to excel in piety, fix themselves in church fellowship, and, in their respective stations, study to be serviceable to the whole mystical body of Christ. Amiable are those families which resemble a church of Christ in their worship, order, and conversation. And it is a great honour to be first, or eminent, in the faith and profession of the gospel: With exact care ought all to judge for themselves in matters of religion, according to the doctrine which they have received from Christ and his apostles; and to avoid such as cause divisions and offences, by broaching errors or forming parties in the church. Whatever be the plausible pretences, fair shows, or flattering speeches of such, they always secretly carry on some selfish and carnal design. There is great need therefore, in this evil world, to have such knowledge of the truth that we may not be imposed on; and such honesty as to act up to our knowledge, imposing upon none. For Satan earnestly promotes pernicious principles and practices, to the disturbance and corruption of the church. But it is very encouraging to true believers that their God will quickly and entirely subdue him, and all his emissaries and works. And if faith and patience hold out a little, we shall reign triumphant for evermore.—Ancient and divine are the gospel tidings of our salvation. Delightfully they harmonize with the types and predictions of the Old Testament. And their offers and blessings graciously extend to all nations of mankind, and by the Holy Ghost are made effectual to some of all ranks and degrees. With what faith and love ought they then to be received, submitted to, obeyed, and practised. And infinite is the glory that redounds to God from this his wonderful work of our salvation.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

In the visible heavens "one star differeth from another star in glory"—yet all stars are equally the work of God. So, in the Scriptures, one book differs from another, either in the extent or importance of the truths revealed, yet "all Scripture is (equally) given by inspiration of God, and (each according to its intent and measure) is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

Among the books of Scripture, the Epistle to the Romans holds a similar place to that of a star of the first magnitude among the heavenly bodies. 1. It stands specially remarkable for the guidance it affords in searching out "the deep things of God"—such as, the co-existence and reconciliation of inflexible justice with abounding mercy—of the unchanging purposes of the Eternal with the perfect accountability of man—and of justification by grace sovereign and free, with the indissoluble obligation to every duty of holiness. 2. It stands specially remarkable for its practical vindication of the doctrines of free grace. There seems a natural antipathy in the carnal mind against a free salvation; so that the heart that needs it most, hates it most. And the alleged ground of this antipathy is, that it is unfavourable to morality. But this objection proceeds upon disregard of self—ignorance of the principles of the human heart—and a total forgetfulness of historical truth, or neglect of observation. Disregard of self—for a sinner cannot be saved, unless by free grace. Ignorance of the human heart—for nothing can subdue its enmity but redeeming love, or govern its powers, but gratitude for mercies. And forgetfulness of historical truth, and neglect of observation—for both have united to prove, that in all countries and times, the most godly and moral characters have been produced by the preaching of salvation by the cross of Christ. 3. It is conspicuous for the boldness with which it encounters national prejudices, combined with the affection with which it seeks to conciliate good-will. The prejudices of the Jews against the Gentiles, and the contempt of the Gentiles for the Jews, formed one of the chief barriers against the triumphant spread of his gospel. These diseases of the carnal mind the Apostle never overlooks or palliates, but, like a skilful physician, reveals all its symptoms and malignity, and applies, as its only adequate remedy, the doctrine of free grace and salvation. 4. It is remarkable for the extent of its moral precepts. Every book of Scripture abounds, either directly or indirectly, with moral precepts; but this Epistle takes a wider range, yet descends to more minute particulars than any other book in the New Testament; thus affording the readiest reply to those who charge the doctrine of grace with an unfavourable aspect towards morality. And, truly, if morality, rightly understood, be any evidence of the divine origin of a system (and that it is so is unquestionable), then does the morality of this Epistle place it as far above every heathen system of ethics as light is superior to darkness; and conducts infallibly to the conclusion, either that Paul was wiser than all the philosophers of Greece and Rome, or that he was inspired by the all-wise God. This superiority the philosophers of the world will not acknowledge—the inspiration, therefore, they should not deny. 5. It is remarkable for its speciality of personal attentions. While with a most wonderful terseness, or as Haldane phrases it, "parsimony of words," it delivers its moral precepts, and transfuses into a single sentence the spirit and amount of volumes, it exhibits "what might seem a prodigal waste of words" in its commenda-tious, salutations, and acknowledgments. But the memory of the heart never forgets; and the Christian is the only true citizen of the world. He loves him that begets, and, by the same reason, he loves all that are begotten of him.

He that would study this Epistle, must begin, as all study of Scripture should begin, with humble prayer "to the Father of lights and mercies;" but to this he must add a firm determination to study it as a whole: it cannot be understood in fragments. He must attend to it with diligence, until he has acquired a consecutive view of its parts—till he is able, as it were, to take the parts asunder, as the wheels, &c., of a machine, and to set them up again in their original order. And the whole he must receive "as a little child;" for he that does not so receive it, will neither discern its meaning nor feel its comfort.—ED.

ADDITIONAL EDITORIAL NOTES ON THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

CHAP. I. Ver. 17. Righteousness of God.—The word here translated "righteousness" is the same as in chap. 3. 21, 22. & 4. 3, 6, 9, 11, 13. & 5. 17. & 10. 3, 4, 5, 6, &c., and may be translated either "justice" or "righteousness." When the subject relates to administration of the law, it must be translated "justice:" when it implies obedience to the law, "righteousness." The phrase "righteousness of God" forms the key to Paul's Epistles—indeed to the whole gospel. Wherefore, the following definitions are selected, as presenting a brief review of the minds of several distinguished Expositors, ancient and modern:—"God's attribute of justice."—Origen. "The divine clemency."—Chrysostom. "The justice or rectitude of the divine nature—a system of morality—a pure scheme of morality, truly of God."—Campbell. "A righteousness belonging to faith, and not that conveyed and received by faith. Because God has enjoined faith as the righteousness he will count to sinners, and will accept and reward it as righteousness."—Macknight. "God's method of justification."—Newcome. "God's method of constituting men righteous, though in fact they are criminal, and obnoxious to punishment."—R. Watson. "Not the essential righteousness of God's nature, but the manner of becoming righteous which God has appointed and exhibited in the gospel—the method which God has contrived and proposed for becoming righteous, by believing his testimony, and casting ourselves on his mercy."—Doddridge. Now, it is of the highest importance that every Christian should be aware of the insufficiency of these several definitions, but especially of the two latter, because they constitute the staple of a large amount of popular theology, and the doctrine which they would eventually overturn is that by which, as Luther truly declared, the church of God must either stand or fall. And surely it will be admitted that if such arbitrary modes of definition were followed out with other words and phrases, the Scriptures would be deprived of all certain meaning. For if "the righteousness of God" do not mean simply his "righteousness," but merely "a manner or method in which he renders believers righteous"—then, the love, the mercy, the grace, the truth, the justice, of God, do not mean those very attributes as essential to God, but so many methods or manners of their exercise. In fact, such arbitrary definition outrages the first principle of all interpretation, which ever must be, to search out the meaning of words or phrases, not in the judgment of the expositor, but in the use and wont of the author. Accordingly, the phrase "righteousness of God," if thus sought, by comparing Rom. 1. 17. with 5. 19, will be found to mean—"the obedience of one," by which "many are made righteous:" that righteousness or obedience to the law, taken in its requirements and penalty, which has been yielded to it by our Lord Jesus Christ. This is indeed "the righteousness of God," for it has been provided of God (Heb. 5. 10. Job 33. 24. Mat. 20. 28), and, from first to last has been effected by his Son, who is "the mighty God, the Father of eternity," (Haldane)—"God manifest in the flesh"—who being, as the incarnate WORD (John 1. 1, 14) "made under the law," (Gal. 4. 4) "became obedient unto death" (Phil. 2. 8)—death, the penalty of a broken law, inclusive—and thus "brought in an everlasting righteousness" (Dan. 9. 24), which is "unto all (as a gift, Rom. 3. 22. & 5. 17), and upon all (as a garment, Isa. 61. 10) who believe" in his name for justification of life.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 19—23. The earnest expectation, (ἀποκαραδοκία,) signifies the lifting of the head and stretching of the body as far as possible, either to see or hear something very interesting.

On the meaning of the word "creature" (κτίσις), the exposition of the entire passage must depend. Let its meaning, therefore, be sought—1. In the Scripture use of the word. In Mark 10. 6. & 13. 19. it signifies "world," or "creation;" and in 16. 15. "intelligent creature" (man), capable of believing or rejecting the gospel. In Rom. 1. 20. it signifies "creation;" and in ver. 25, "any created being." In 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 5. Col. 1. 15. it signifies either "creature" or "a creation;" and in Col. 1. 23. it evidently signifies, as in Mark 16. 15. "every man," nationally considered. In Heb. 4. 13. it appears also to signify "any human or other intelligent being;" and in 9. 11. it is translated "building," the visible creation being represented as the architecture and temple of God. In 1 Pet. 2. 13. it signifies "ordinance," "institution;" and in 2 Pet. 3. 4. and Rev. 3. 14. it signifies "creation," visible and invisible. If this examination fails to give a preponderance to any one use of the word, let its meaning be sought—2. In the attributes ascribed by Paul to this κτίσις. The chief of these are—earnest expectation, waiting, hope, bondage, groaning, travailing, deliverance, and entrance into the liberty of the sons of God.

Now though it is seldom good to perplex the mind with various opinions, yet, on a subject of so much importance and confessed difficulty, it may be well to state both the chief opinions and authorities. 1. By κτίσις some understand "the whole church of God," (see Is. 43. 7. & 65. 17.) because all its true members are, in this present world, distinguished by earnest desires for the glorious manifestation and liberty of the sons of God—being subject to vanity, that is, weakness, corruption, and misery, but not from choice (Heb. 12. 11.), but for the mortification of sin (Rom. 8. 13.), and exercise of grace, and especially hope (Rom. 8. 24. 2 Cor. 4. 17). This view is supported by Limborch, Hammond, &c.

2. The Gentile world in distinction from the Jews.—Lightfoot, Guyse.

3. All mankind, Jews and Gentiles, as in Mark 16. 15. who through all their history have felt the evil of the present state of things, and have been earnestly labouring and looking for both present deliverance and future happiness.—Whitby, Macknight, Ritchie, &c.

4. Not good angels; for they are not subject to vanity—not devils; for they believe, tremble, and hate God—not the reprobate; for they scoff—not saints and believers; for they are distinctly mentioned (ver. 23.)—not beasts; for they are incapable of longings after futurity. It must therefore mean the whole visible frame of creation, heaven and earth, and the creatures in them personified, and which thus, under the emblem of one intelligent person, wait as it were for restoration to that primitive condition from which they were cast down by sin.—Luther, Calvin, Manton, Henry, Haldane, &c.

5. The irrational and inanimate creation, in which everything is perverted to unnatural and sinful uses, and in which the lower animals suffer so much from human cruelty.—Scott, Hodge, &c.

Amidst this conflict of high authorities, it were specially presumptuous to dogmatize; nevertheless, a sense of accountability compels a decision in favour of the first—and that chiefly for the following reasons. 1. Because of the contrast and parallelism between this κτίσις (creation) which did "wait and groan." (ver. 19, 22.), and the apostles and his brethren who did "wait and groan" (ver. 23). Now would it not seem unnatural thus to contrast a "waiting and groaning" confessedly figurative, with a "waiting and groaning" confessedly real?

2. Because, while Adam, the representative of created rationality, was made subject to vanity, "willingly," of his own free choice, act, and deed; and while the unregenerate remain subject to it, "because they love darkness rather than light," all who, by a new creation, become sons of God, are, though still subject to vanity, not subject "willingly," but "wait" in faith, hope, and submission, for the day of the liberation of the spirit, and redemption of the body.

3. Because "the creature" to be delivered, is to enter into the "glorious liberty of the sons of God," a liberty that can be enjoyed by none but creatures endowed with intellect and will, and a state of adoption that can be enjoyed by none but regenerate believers.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[Corinth ranked among the most illustrious of the Grecian cities. It was situated on the isthmus that joins the Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece. With a port on each side, it received equally the commercial contributions of Europe and Asia; became first distinguished for arts and commerce, and next (such is ever human abuse of mercies) equally distinguished for luxury, and infamous for licentiousness. Yet here, after the missionary labours of about two years, Paul and his companions succeeded in planting a Christian church, consisting of Jews and Gentiles. But shortly after his departure, false teachers, undervaluing Paul's authority, crept in among them; erroneous and heretical doctrines were inculcated, and sectarian divisions were introduced. Under these circumstances Paul writes this Epistle:—1. To support his apostolical authority, and vindicate himself from the calumnies of his adversaries. 2. To correct the abuses that had arisen, and remedy the disorders that had infected the church. 3. To return answers to certain queries that had been addressed to him on some important points of Christian doctrine, management, and morals. These answers and directions, though generally referring to circumstances and practices no longer in existence, are yet, by virtue of the principles involved, of perpetual application to the various emergencies of the Christian church.—ED.]

PAUL, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes [*] our brother,

2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified [†] in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon [‡] the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours:

3 Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 [a] I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ;

5 [b] That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge;

6 Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you:

7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the [§] coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:

8 Who shall also confirm [‖] you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

10 Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions [*] among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are [c] contentions among you.

12 Now this [d] I say, that every one of you saith, [e] I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ.

13 Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

14 I thank God that [f] I baptized none of you but Crispus [*] and Gaius; [†]

15 [g] Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name.

16 And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: [‡] besides, I know not [§] whether I baptized any other.

17 For Christ sent me not to baptize, [‖] but to preach the gospel: [h] not with wisdom of [*] words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

18 [i] For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.

19 For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

21 For after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. [†]

† By "wisdom of God," some understand the permission or government of his wise providence. But may not the whole verse be better understood thus:—"For after that the world, through its (philosophical) wisdom, knew not God (though manifest) in his wisdom (of creation, providence, and word), it pleased God, through the preaching of foolishness (the cross, ver. 18, 23, 25) to save them that believe."—Ed.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1—3. I, Paul, who have not thrust myself into this apostolic office which I claim, but was graciously, sovereignly, and immediately, called to and qualified for it by Jesus Christ,—and Sosthenes, my dear and faithful assistant in the ministry, though not an apostle, —do, in the most earnest and affectionate manner, wish to all you at Corinth, who are regularly united in church fellowship, set apart for, and spiritually joined to Christ, as your Head of influence and government, and by the effectual call of his Spirit rendered like him in holiness,—and to all those who anywhere profess and adore him, our common Lord, as the object of their faith, worship, and obedience, —all the riches and the blessed effects of redeeming favour, love, and mercy, and an abundant peace with God, with your own consciences, and with one another, from God the Father, as the original spring and deviser of every blessing, and through Jesus Christ, as the purchaser, storehouse, and bestower of them. 4—6. I heartily congratulate you on your happiness and honour upon every remembrance of you, and bless my infinitely gracious God for the manifold favours, gifts, and graces, which, on Christ's account, he has bestowed upon you, enriching you not only with such spiritual habits and tempers as are necessary to salvation, but with remarkable knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, and a ready ability to communicate them to others;—the Spirit of God thereby confirming to your hearts and consciences the truth of the gospel of Christ, which we preached and ye believed. 7—9. So that ye are not remarkably deficient, or inferior to other Christians, in any spiritual gifts which could render you useful in Christ's church, in which ye continue praying, preparing, and patiently and hopefully waiting for his second coming,—who, by a constant supply of necessary gifts and graces, will more establish you in the faith, hope, and holiness of the gospel: that, when others are condemned, ye may appear perfectly righteous, holy, and irreproachable, at his tribunal; for God, who has effectually called you into a state of union and fellowship with his dear Son, being unchangeably faithful to his character, covenant, and promises, will infallibly render you partakers of eternal glory. 10—12. If then God hath done, and will do, so much for you, and if Jesus will in a little time judge you at his awful bar, let me beseech you, by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, by his excellencies, relations, and works of love, and by your profession of him, to lay aside your contentions and alienation of affection from one another, and to study the most cordial harmony in sentiment, affection, and holy practices; for, to my great grief I have been informed that ye, whom I truly esteem, and of whom I hoped better things, have, by uncharitable divisions, been thrown into different parties, under different leaders,—some of you ranking yourselves under me, as the apostle of the Gentiles, or instrument of your conversion; others under Apollos, as the most eloquent and fervent preacher; others under Peter, as the apostle of the circumcision; while others pretend to be immediately directed by Christ alone, needing no other instructor. 13—16. To convince you of the absurdity of your conduct, let me ask even you, who pretend to be solely for Christ, overlooking his ministers and ordinances, is his person to be divided from his offices? or his offices from the execution thereof by the ministry of his servants, who labour in the church by his authority, and according to his will?—Why set up me, or any other minister, for your spiritual head? Did I, or my brethren, make atonement for your sins? Or were ye baptized by the authority, or into the faith, worship, and obedience of us? I thank God that, though I was the instrument of conversion to many of you, I baptized but very few of you, lest any should have thence taken occasion to insinuate that I had acted by my own authority, and bound the persons whom I baptized to acknowledge me as their spiritual master. 17. For indeed Christ sent me not chiefly to baptize, but to preach the glad tidings of salvation through his blood; and that not dressed up in flowers of rhetoric or maxims of philosophy, for the promoting of my own selfish honours, but in the most plain language and style, that the native majesty, spirituality, glory, and power of the gospel doctrine, of and concerning a crucified Saviour, might be the more clearly manifested in the humbling and conversion of sinners. 18. For the plain preaching of salvation through the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ, received by faith, appears quite despicable, foolish, and absurd, to them who live and die in their sins; but to us, who are eternally saved from our sins and miseries, it is the marvellous mean through which the almighty influences of God's Spirit are conveyed for illuminating, sanctifying, supporting, and comforting our hearts. 19, 20. This, according to the scripture, quite confounds the notions of the learned of this world, and exhibits a method of salvation directly contrary to whatever they could have imagined. None of them, Jews or Gentiles, could ever contrive a method of saving sinners, or of reconciling them to God; and herein he hath stamped disgrace upon all the wisdom of philosophers and others, and manifested their schemes for appeasing an offended God, and reconciling guilty sinners to him, as altogether vain, foolish, and ineffectual. 21. For after he, in the manifestation of his own infinite wisdom, had plainly shown that neither the works of creation, nor of common providence, nor any powers of human reasoning, could lead to a saving and satisfying knowledge of himself, or the way of salvation, it pleased him, by the much despised plain preaching of a crucified Christ, and the way of salvation through his blood, to save them, who by faith receive and rest

22 For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

23 But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness;

24 But unto them [k] which are called, both Jews and Greeks, [l] Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

25 [m] Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that [n] not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called:

27 But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

28 And base things [*] of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, [†] to bring to nought things that are:

29 That no flesh should glory in his presence.

30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who [o] of God is made unto us wisdom, and [p] righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption:

31 That, according as it is written, [q] He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

† The expression, "things which are not," is generally represented as hyperbole, or oxymoron—an extravagance or contradiction in language, frequent in classical writers. But there is no necessity for attributing either to the apostle. God had chosen a people (the future Christian church) "that were not" then in being, "to bring to nought" the heathen empire of Rome; and there is still a chosen people to be born, under whom all the kingdoms of this world shall become "the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ." AND I, brethren, when I came to you, [a] came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

2 For I determined not to know [*] any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

3 And I was with you in weakness, [†] and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power:

5 That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect; [‡] yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought:

7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory;

8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

* Not to know.—Not to regard or esteem anything else as really worthy of notice. See 1 Thes. 5. 12.—Ed.

† In much weakness, of bodily health.—Ed.

‡ By "perfect" some understand those "who are advanced in Christian knowledge," as distinguished from the "babes," and corresponding to the "spiritual" (ch. 3. 1); others, the Christians, as distinguished from the Jews; and others, that higher mode of teaching exemplified in the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, in which Christ is fully set forth as "the end of the law for righteousness," by the perfect exposition of the Jewish dispensation. This last opinion seems to receive decisive support from apparent contrast between ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου ver. 4.) and ἐν τοῖς τελείοις (ver. 6); which last expression appears to apply, not to persons, but to correspond with the things that once were "hidden," but now "revealed" by the Spirit, as things fulfilled and perfected (ver. 7, 10). See the similar expression, Eph. 3. 6.—Ed.

upon him for their eternal redemption, as therein offered to them. 22, 23. Notwithstanding all the proofs that Christ hath given us of his Godhead and saving offices, the obstinate Jews still persist in demanding a sign from heaven to prove them, and the learned Greeks insist upon philosophical demonstrations of the method of salvation. But regardless of these prejudices, we faithful ministers proclaim a full, eternal, free, and offered salvation to sinful men through the obedience and death of Christ, which the Jews contemn, to the infinite hazard and ruin of their souls, and the learned Greeks account highly foolish and absurd. 24. But let others think as they will of Jesus Christ, or of the doctrine of salvation through his blood, we, who are effectually called, discern and experience therein the great power and manifold wisdom of God, clearly exhibited in his whole person, offices, and saving effects. 25. For what ignorant, carnal, and prejudiced men reckon absurd folly, infinitely transcends in wisdom all the boasted schemes of the most sagacious, prudent, and learned philosophers; and what they account weak and unavailing, is found, by experience, to have an incomparable energy in destroying the works of the devil, renewing the heart, and reforming the lives of men. 26—29. And to manifest the sovereignty of his grace, and, as it were, to mark the insignificancy of men's natural or acquired advantages, ye cannot but observe that very few of the learned, the eminently sagacious, great, or powerful, are converted to Christ; but he has generally fixed his love upon, and effectually calls, such as are comparatively foolish, weak, mean, or contemptible; that none, Jews or Gentiles, might have any pretence to glory before him of their natural parts, accomplishments, or external privileges, as if these could recommend them to his favour, or qualify them to receive the gospel. 30, 31. Yea, on the contrary, by a mere act of his own gracious and sovereign will, he has chosen you in, and called and united you to, Christ Jesus, who, by his divine appointment, is constituted and made over to us in the gospel offer, and effectually granted to us in the day of power, as an infinitely well furnished and effectual Teacher, to render us wise unto salvation; a law-fulfilling Surety, through whose finished obedience and suffering we may be completely justified; and not only as a purchaser, but as an effectual giver, of all renewing, quickening, and sanctifying grace, by his Spirit dwelling in us; and a full deliverer from sin and misery, and bestower of that eternal happiness which he hath obtained for us;—that, as the Scripture directs, he who has any honours and blessings bestowed upon him may centre all his joy and boasting entirely in the Lord Jesus, and in the free grace of God through him.

Reflections upon Chap. I.—With great prudence, but with plainness and courage, ought ministers, on some occasions, to assert their mission and the dignity of their office. And with firm assurance should we receive the apostolic writings and doctrines, as indeed of divine authority. Divine power and grace are necessary to render men saints, while fervent prayer and religious worship evidence them such. And it is absurd to hold profane prayerless persons for church members. With holy reverence ought we to address Jesus Christ and his Father for the gifts and mercies which we need. And with pleasure may we reflect on what he has bestowed on others, as an earnest of their perfect holiness and happiness. Yea, it is a great mercy that God's faithfulness secures the eternal salvation of all those whom he hath effectually called by his grace. It is shameful and absurd for Christians to be divided about ministers, as if all Christ's faithful servants were not embarked in one common cause. And it is a comfort for a minister to have had no hand in such carnal rendings of Christ's church; and an honour to have avoided honouring himself at Christ's expense. Very corrupt and darkened by sin must be the hearts of unregenerate men, to whom the mystery and offers of a crucified, a divine Redeemer, appear contemptible and absurd. And the enlightening and renewing power of the Holy Ghost is absolutely necessary to make us apprehend it, as every way worthy of God, and calculated to render us wise, holy, and happy. Amazing is the sovereignty of God's redeeming grace in respect of its objects and manner of influence. And exactly answerable is Jesus Christ to all our need, who are ignorant and foolish, guilty and naked, polluted and plagued, enslaved and self-ruined sinners. Yea, the whole work of our redemption delightfully promotes the highest glory of God. In this let my soul rejoice, and daily think what Jesus is, and what Jehovah is in him, to my heart.

Chap. II.—Ver. 1. The glorification of the divine power, wisdom, sovereign mercy, and other divine perfections, and the humiliation of men, being the great end of the gospel, I laboured to preach to you in the plainest manner, without any affected parade of eloquence or philosophical reasoning. 2. And counting all but loss and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, I determined to employ all the talents which God has given me chiefly to make him known in his person, offices, and work; particularly in his obedience and suffering, in which all the lines of the gospel meet. 3. And in preaching on this subject, I conducted myself with the utmost meekness and deepest concern, lest, through your prejudices, or the agency of Satan, ye should, to your eternal perdition, reject and despise my message. 4. And encouraged and directed by Jesus Christ, I laboured to publish and inculcate the doctrines of redemption through his blood, not with any tickling arts of human invention, or soothing language, but with the convincing light and persuasive evidence of the Holy Spirit himself on your minds and consciences, and attended with his miraculous gifts and operations. 5. That the faith, by which he assented to the gospel, and embraced Jesus Christ in it, might not so much as seem to be wrought in you by the authority, arts, or arguments of men, but might be solely produced by the efficacious power of God, and built on his authority and faithfulness manifested in his word. 6. Nevertheless, we preach the infinitely wise plan of the redemption of sinners, and explain the transcendent mysteries thereof, especially to such as have attained some considerable measures and degrees of knowledge and grace:—not indeed the wisdom of philosophical or political schemes of learned men or princes;—7. But we publish and inculcate that mysterious doctrine which is the wonderful product of the infinite wisdom of God, which has been long hid from the Gentile world, and but obscurely revealed to the Jews, and can never be fully comprehended by creatures; and which God from all eternity determined at this time to reveal with transcendent light and evidence, for the honour of the gospel dispensation, its ministers and subjects, and the eternal happiness of every believer. 8. Which important scheme

9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

10 But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? [b]even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.[c]

12 Now we have received, [c]not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13 [d]Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.[†]

14 [e]But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

15 But he that is spiritual [f]judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man.[‡]

But he means that, while compared with other believers, they "came behind in no gift, being enriched in all utterance, and in all knowledge" (chap. 1. 5, 7.), yet were they inferior to others in the quality of Christian prudence, which avoids all "doubtful disputations," and of the Christian temper which "bears the infirmities of the weak," and which in all its witness to the truth, (Rom. 14. 1. & 15. 1.) of salvation the rulers and great men concerned in the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, and others so disposed, had no just notion of, their minds being blinded, and their hearts hardened, against all the means of conviction afforded them, otherwise they had never concurred in the shameful, ignominious, deliberate, and public murder of the divine Messiah, who has all infinite glory in himself as the Son of God, and is the author, purchaser, and bestower, of all the glory of the gospel dispensation and heavenly state; 9. And who, as Isaiah foretold, has brought in that incomparably and inconceivably glorious, delightful, and advantageous gospel state, and all the transcendent blessings thereof, which God, of his infinite wisdom and grace, had provided, adjusted, and secured: and which he bestows upon them who, in the faith of his special love to their souls, do sincerely esteem, desire, and delight in him. 10. Yea, God hath now manifested them to us by the immediate revelations and gracious internal illuminations of his Spirit, who has a perfect and comprehensive view of the divine nature and counsels. 11. For as none but a man's own soul can know his secret thoughts and designs, so none but the Holy Ghost, who has the same essence and will with the Father and Son, can penetrate into or comprehend the secret counsels of God. 12. And it is this all-knowing Spirit of God, not the boasted wisdom and learning of the world, which we have received, in order that we may savingly understand the great and glorious blessings of the gospel, freely prepared for, offered to, and bestowed upon us; 13. Which glorious mysteries and benefits we, being taught of God ourselves, represent to others, not in the foppish gildings of human language, but in a plain, grave, and majestic style, suited to their nature, dignity, and beauty, even in the words and figures in which the Holy Ghost has represented them, carefully comparing them together. 14. But no unregenerate men, be as learned and sagacious as they will, can truly approve or embrace these spiritual doctrines and blessings; nor can they, for want of an understanding illuminated and rectified by the Spirit of God, discern their divine truth, spirituality, excellency, and glory, in a truly spiritual and affecting manner, suitable to their transcendent worth and importance. 15. But he who is really renewed in the spirit of his mind can search into, discern, and form a right judgment about, everything necessary to be known in order to salvation, and perceive the glory, and feel the transforming power of divine truths; though his views thereof, and satisfaction therein, cannot be certainly judged of by any other man; far less by such as are destitute of the Spirit of God, and the true experience of these things. 16. For what unregenerate man ever penetrated into the secret counsels or revealed truths of God, so as to be able further to instruct a spiritual man in what he before knew, or to prove what is contrary to his views? Nay, we apostles, and other Christians, are, by the Holy Ghost, instructed in the doctrine of Christ in everything respecting the glory of God, and the salvation of men.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Great is the native beauty of the gospel, as God's own testimony, concerning Jesus Christ crucified for men. And it is absurd and hurtful to souls to vail and stain its illustrious simplicity, wisdom, and grace, by human oratory. The faith of God's elect must be the effect of divine operation, not of human persuasion. It is impossible for carnal men to understand the gospel, or to make it comport with their worldly schemes. And not merely an external revelation, but the inward illumination of the Holy Ghost, who is perfectly acquainted with the whole mind of God, can give us just and impressive conceptions of spiritual things. Thrice happy are they who have him to lead them into all necessary truth, and to make them know what inexpressibly great and glorious things God has prepared for, and freely given to them! Judicious and experienced Christians discern admirable wisdom, power, and grace, in the gospel method of their salvation. And while they have the greatest satisfaction, experience, and hope in themselves, relating to it, no natural man is able to correct or refute them.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. And indeed, brethren, when I was among you, I perceived in you such an earthly-minded, opinionative, and disputatious temper, as discovered you to be really weak in spiritual knowledge and experience. 2. I therefore made it my chief care to instruct you in the plain principles of the gospel concerning Christ and his salvation, which were suited to your weak capacities, not entering into the more sublime and abstruse points, which neither then, nor even now, ye can improve to your real edification. 3. Your present contentions, and envying of one another, is a plain evidence that many of you do not, in a spiritual manner, or upon proper authority, take up the doctrines of the gospel, but are under the influence of your natural corruptions, and act in the manner of unregenerate men. 4. Nothing can more plainly manifest your great carnality of temper than to extol particular ministers, as if they were to be the lords of your faith: 5. For what are ministers but servants of Christ, by whose preaching of one and the same doctrine ye were brought, not by their skill or power, but by his effectual operation on your hearts, to receive and rest upon him for your salvation? 6. I, as an apostle, first published the gospel among you, which, through the gracious and almighty influences of the Holy Ghost, proved instrumental in the conversion of many of you; and Apollos, coming after, laboured in promoting your spiritual edification: but whatever success he or I had, was entirely owing to God's powerful blessing and influence on our labours; 7. And therefore to him alone ought all the glory to be ascribed; not in the least to us, who are neither the authors of the gospel, nor of its efficacy upon you. 8. Whether we be instrumental in the conversion or in the building up of souls, we all act under the same authority of Christ, and are united in our doctrine and principal design, yea, are all accountable to God, and are equally incapable in ourselves of producing any saving effects by our ministrations: and if faithful, shall in due time receive from him a gracious reward, answerable to that diligence which his own free grace has enabled us to use. 9. For all of us labour jointly with the same views, and as his workmen, with, and in subordination to God, who will never desert us in our work, nor be unmindful of us: and ye are not ours, but God's workmanship and property, and therefore ought to be devoted entirely and only to him. 10. And I, being employed under him as his distinguished workman and first labourer among you, have, with all that knowledge, wisdom, prudence, and care, which he enabled me to exercise, laid the ground-work of your faith and hope, safety and comfort, in the gospel doctrines of a crucified Jesus, and salvation by him alone. Every preacher therefore who comes after me must take care that he attempt not to build you up by any doctrine inconsistent therewith. 11. It is beyond the power of any to lay another foundation of true holiness or happiness beside what is already laid in the incarnation, obedience, and death of the Son of God in our nature, and which is exhibited in the scripture, and was taught by me. 12. And if Apollos, or any other like minded, should now, after my preaching, attempt to edify you with the precious truths of God; or if others of a different stamp should attempt to build on it the unsubstantial, contemptible, and perishing inventions of men, 13. Their whole doctrines and practices, as well as those of all other men, shall, at the last day, be thoroughly tried by Jesus Christ, according to the standard of his word; and the truth and value, or the falsehood and emptiness thereof, be fully manifested to all around. 14. Whoever then shall, in his doctrine and practice, be agreeable to the scriptures, and answerable to the foundation truth of free salvation through Jesus' blood, shall be graciously and amply rewarded, in proportion to his faithfulness and diligence: 15. And whosoever shall, in his doctrine or behaviour, be found unscriptural, though not fundamentally erroneous, shall indeed, if united to Christ, though with apparent difficulty, be saved from eternal wrath; but have nothing but shame and dishonour for his erroneous notions and bad practices. 16. Remember therefore, that as ye, who are God's true church, founded upon Christ preached in the gospel, are set apart, sanctified, and devoted to him as his temple, in which, through his Spirit, he dwells by special relation, possession, operation, and favour; 17. If any of you maintain and propagate such errors as are subversive of the foundation, and so at once corrupt yourselves and the church, he shall certainly be punished by him in a fearful and lasting manner, as a defiler of his gospel temple, more sacred and dear to him than any of the apartments of the Jewish. 18. Let therefore every man, preacher or hearer, take heed, lest, through a conceit of his superior understanding, he bring loss and ruin upon himself; and if any have apparently a large stock of earthly wisdom, let him renounce it all, as insufficient to lead him to the attainment of gospel truth; and in becoming truly wise towards God, and to the salvation of his soul, through faith in Christ, let him patiently submit to be esteemed as a fool by the carnal pretenders to reason; 19, 20. For as the scripture repeatedly testifies, all the policy, prudence, wit, and learning, which give men a reputation for wisdom in this world, are but folly in God's account, when compared with his glorious scheme of salvation through a crucified Redeemer: and in the end it will appear to have insnared them, and discovered the vanity of their minds. 21, 22. Since human knowledge then is so insignificant, and no man can direct you into the way of salvation, but as he himself is taught of God, let none of you, to your own spiritual hurt, set up one gospel minister as his head, in opposition to another; for all things, particularly those relating to the dispensation of the gospel, are in the new covenant secured for, and given to, you who believe, and are divinely managed for your spiritual advantage: all faithful ministers, with all their gifts, graces, and ministrations, are appointed for building you up in faith, holiness, and comfort, to eternal salvation: all the wealth, honours, pleasures, and transactions of this world, are in Christ's hands for you, to be given you in property or use, as shall tend to your real good: life, in all its diversified conditions, and death, in all its harbingers and forms, are yours: 23. And what secures all these to you, completes your happiness, as well as calls for your attachment to him, is, that ye are given by the Father to Christ, that ye may be saved through his blood, and filled with all the blessings of his grace and glory; and Christ is God's dear Son and faithful Servant, set up by him to be the infallible mean of your eternal salvation, to the praise of the glory of his grace.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—With great faithfulness and prudence ought ministers to accommodate themselves to the capacities and circumstances of their hearers. And often great pretenders to wisdom and knowledge have no true grace in their heart. When all Christ's faithful ministers are, under him, united in the same spirit and design, how absurd is it to kindle contentions in the church, by setting up one above another! Their honour is great in being workers together with God in the salvation of men. And the effectual success of their labours flows wholly from his power and grace. Yet none must expect God to bless their administrations, but in preaching Christ as the sole foundation of the hopes and happiness of sinful men, laid by his Father. Terrible is their ruin who refuse to build on him; and great their loss who attempt to mingle their own fancies with the doctrines of Christ. Exact shall be our future account; and our eternal honours be proportioned to our right improvement of Christ and his truths on earth. And very necessary is holiness in every church and member thereof. Great is the danger of self-conceit. And it is very sinful and ruinous to trust our eternal happiness to the care and direction of our carnal wisdom, which is so insignificant before God. But extensive is their happiness, and high their honour, who, as united to Christ, the eternal Son of God and only Saviour, and to God in him, have all things present and future, secured as their property, and divinely managed to their best advantage.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. Let none depreciate us ministers, or exalt one to the dishonour of another, but account of us all as persons called and qualified by Christ, for dispensing to Jews and Gentiles the great and unsearchable doctrines and ordinances of the grace of God. 2. And, as stewards of Christ, we must take heed that we by no means neglect, pervert, betray, or deal partially in our trust; but study to be faithful to God, to our own conscience, to the truth of Christ, and to the souls to whom we minister, giving them their proper food in due season. 3. And if any pretend that I am unfaithful, or take offence at my fidelity, I little regard the censures of men, as I am not to stand or fall in the last judgment according to their fallible, partial, and prejudiced sentiments concerning me; nor dare I pretend that my own judgment of my sincerity, faithfulness, and diligence, is absolutely right. 4. For though I am not sensible of any allowed unfaithfulness, but have the testimony of my conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity I have had my conversation in this world; yet such is the inadvertency and treachery of my heart, that I dare not look on this as a justification of my conduct before God, but expect the acceptance of my person and services only through Jesus not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 [b] Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God.

6 And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another.

7 For [c] who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? now, if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

11 Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place;

12 [e] And labour, working with our own hands: [f] being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it;

13 Being defamed, we entreat: [g] we are made as the filth* of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 [h] I write not these things to shame you,† but, as my beloved sons, I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: [i] for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

16 Wherefore, I beseech you, [k] be ye followers of me.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you [l] Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

18 Now some [m] are puffed up,‡ as though I would not come to you.

19 [n] But I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power.

20 For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? shall I come unto you [o] with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

Christ and his righteousness. 5. Beware therefore of judging our hearts, or of passing uncharitable censures upon us; but wait till Christ, at his second coming, manifest all the secret transactions, thoughts, and desires of men; and then shall every man, who has acted uprightly, be publicly acknowledged and rewarded by God according to his real character. 6. I have mentioned myself and Apollos in this point, who are distinguished in office and success among you, that you may learn to adjust your sentiments about men, and never pride yourselves in, or boast of, one preacher in opposition to another. 7. And to humble you, and prevent your idolizing of ministers, think what gifts or graces you or any of them have which ye did not receive freely from God. Why then do ye boast of any of them, as if they were originally your own: 8. For indeed ye seem to pride yourselves on your gifts, graces, and other acquirements, as if, independent of us who first preached the gospel to you, ye had arrived at the highest prosperity; and I heartily wish that ye did remarkably flourish in everything excellent, great, and glorious, that we, as God's instruments in your conversion and edification, might rejoice in your mercy, and share your happiness and Christian esteem. 9, 10. For I really think God hath set forth us apostles, his last and extraordinary messengers in the church, to be a public show before angels and men, devoted to deadly combats, to contempt, trouble, and violence: we are treated as weak, foolish, and despicable, and are loaded with labours, cares, and sufferings for Christ, while ye appear to yourselves and others wise, powerful, honoured, easy, and opulent. 11—13. While ye live in your rich city and commodious dwellings, amidst ease and affluence, we faithful preachers, ever since the Lord called us to this work, have been often destitute of the common necessaries of life, and cruelly abused, and driven from place to place, like vagabonds. Meanwhile, to avoid prejudicing men against us as mercenary, we have earned our daily subsistence by the labour of our own hands;—we have earnestly prayed down blessings on them who reproached and cursed us:—we have patiently borne all the injuries and abuses we met with;—we have humbly exhorted and supplicated them who maliciously slandered us; and notwithstanding all this inoffensive, meek, and winning behaviour, we continue to be treated as the vilest miscreants, who have been the cause of every public calamity, and are fit for nothing, but to be killed as sacrifices for the purgation of cities. 14. I have not drawn out this detail of our injurious treatment, and of our meek, patient, and benevolent behaviour under it, in order to expose you to shame among your fellow Christians, but in order affectionately to warn you against pride, or an unbecoming behaviour to faithful ministers. 15, 16. For though many preachers have laboured to promote your instruction and edification, I alone have been remarkably honoured as the instrument of your spiritual regeneration and adoption. I therefore beseech you, in the most endearing and condescending manner, that, instead of turning aside after those who desire to corrupt the simplicity of your faith and manners, ye would follow the directions which I, your spiritual father, give you from Christ, and imitate me in faith, holiness, humility, and love. 17. And for this cause I have sent to you Timothy, my dear partner in preaching the gospel, who being converted to Christ by my ministry, and my ordinary attendant, can acquaint you with my uniformity in doctrines and in holy practices, answerable to what I everywhere teach. 18. Some of my opponents boast that I dare not make my personal appearance among you, where I have so many opposers, but must rest content with sending my friend. 19. But if God give me strength and opportunity, I sincerely intend to visit you, and to try those proud pretenders to learning and eloquence, as to what authority they have received from Christ to preach his gospel, what of God's gifts and graces appear in their ministrations, and what efficacy their doctrine hath upon their own and others' hearts and lives. 20. For the excellency of the gospel dispensation does not consist in human learning or outward profession, but in an experience of what is wrought by the Spirit of God. Nor is the gospel propagated, or the work of grace begun and carried on in men's souls, but by the miraculous operations and divine energy of the Holy Spirit, which attend the plain preaching of a crucified Christ. 21. Think then whether ye would have me come in order to inflict spiritual censures, or even corporeal punishments, upon obstinate transgressors, or, as I earnestly wish, in tender affection, meekness, and gentleness, to encourage, commend, and comfort you.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—Important is that trust of divine truths and human souls which Christ has committed to his ministers. And with great care and faithfulness ought they to declare and explain his mysteries and dispense his ordinances. It is groundless to be either puffed up or cast down by men's judgment of us. The great point is to approve ourselves to God, by whose judgment we must abide, and who will at last clear us from all false accusations. And never must those, who are most conscious of their integrity, depend on that, but on Jesus' fulfilment of the law, as the ground of their acceptance to eternal life. With great care ought we to avoid rash censuring of others, in the view of that last judgment, in which the secrets of men's hearts and lives shall be discovered. And there is need of deep humility when our defects are so great and many, and all our gifts and graces are the free gifts of God. Alas, that many should be puffed up with spiritual gifts, or even with riches or honour in this life; and the faithful servants of Christ be chiefly exposed to poverty, disgrace, and violent persecution. But it is delightful when Christians and ministers shine in meekness, patience, and returning of good for evil. Great wisdom is necessary in faithful reproofs, that they may neither provoke nor expose. And Christians need to be frequently reminded of admonitions formerly given them. With great care should they copy after the example of their godly ministers. And if faithful ministers 10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11 But now I have written unto you [e] not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat.[f]

12 For what have I to do to judge [f] them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within?[†] bear strong affection to such as have been converted to Christ by their ministry, those converts ought fervently to love, regard, and reverence them as their spiritual fathers, and study that they may be always not grieved correctors, but joyful comforters of them. It is not fine words or fair speeches, but the power of the Holy Ghost changing the heart and purifying the practice, that will prove men real ministers or Christians.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1, 2. I must now mention some particular offences among you; and first, it is publicly reported, to the great scandal of your holy religion, that one of your members lives in the most shocking incest with his own stepmother:—a form of whoredom detested by, and scarcely known among, civilized heathens; and, nevertheless, many of you, puffed up with a conceit of your gifts and attainments, have overlooked, if not boasted of him, instead of being deeply concerned for the dishonour hereby done to Christ, the disgrace brought upon his church, and the hurt done to the soul of the offender, and of others, and of being careful to have such an infamous sinner removed from your holy communion. 3. Therefore, though I am not personally present to direct or influence your procedure, yet being earnestly desirous of your true honour and welfare, under the special direction of the Holy Ghost, I have considered and determined how this base scandal ought to be censured. 4, 5. That ye, whom Jesus Christ hath made spiritual rulers in his church, should, as a court constituted in his name, and after solemn prayer for his direction and assistance, with my hearty approbation, in his name and authority, as the great institutor and ratifier of the sentence, fully excommunicate this notorious offender from all fellowship with the visible church, and deliver him back into the visible kingdom of the devil, as one who has no manifest claim to the promises of the new covenant,—in order that, by the blessing of God on this awful sentence, his prevailing corruptions may be mortified and subdued, and he, through fear, grief, and shame, brought to such repentance and reformation as may issue in his solemn acquittal and salvation in the last judgment. 6. Your glorying in such a person, be his gifts and attainments what they will, or in your own spiritual gifts, or the prosperity of your church, is extremely sinful and dangerous. Know ye not that a single instance of scandal or manifest error connived at, tends to corrupt the minds and practices of others, and to infect and defile the whole church. 7. In imitation of the Jews, who purge their houses from leaven at their passover, labour not only to purge out corrupt affections from your own hearts, but to cleanse the church from scandalous persons and sins, in honour of Jesus Christ, who offered himself as an atoning sacrifice to God, in order that his people might be cleansed from all iniquity, and rendered zealous of good works. 8. Let us therefore lead our whole life on earth, and particularly celebrate the New Testament festival of his supper, without sinful fellowship with notorious offenders, or indulgence of corrupt affections, envy, malice, or the like; but with integrity and godly simplicity, and a real love to the brethren, according to the truth of the gospel. 9. Being absent, I have in this epistolary manner warned you to abstain from all familiar intercourse with persons addicted to whoredom, as thereby ye would harden them in their sins, and they would tempt you to follow their detestable example. 10. Yet I mean not that you should have no dealings with heathens who live in whoredom, manifest covetousness, extortion, or idolatry; for then it would be necessary for you to leave this world, which is everywhere filled with such. 11. But I insist, that if any of your professed Christian brethren be chargeable with uncleanness, or be inordinate lovers of money, or join in idolatrous worship, or be given to wrathful, abusive, and opprobrious language, or be lovers of much drinking, or intoxicated with liquor, or given to take advantage of others by excessive rents or prices, ye carefully avoid all voluntary familiarity with them at common meals, and especially partaking with them at the Lord's table. 12. For I, as a minister of Christ, have no power to prohibit such converse as the civil offices, secular affairs, and relations of life call you to; nor have ye power to judge and censure any offenders but such as are of your own spiritual society. 13. Those flagitious sinners, who are not in church fellowship with us, must be left to the righteous judgment and vengeance of God: but be ye careful to exclude this incestuous member from your church fellowship, and from all familiar and chosen conversation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—It is very shameful to hear of such scandalous enormities among Christians as even heathens would be ashamed of. And highly unbecoming when professors, for the sake of party attachments or great gifts, are puffed up rather than humbled and mourning under such awful events. Flagrant and obstinate sinners must be solemnly cast out from the Christian church, that their souls may be recovered, and the honour of Christ, and the purity of his church preserved. For how inconsistent is it for those, who were ransomed by, and live upon, a crucified Saviour, to indulge themselves in unholiness of heart and life! And extremely infectious are scandals, if they be not seasonably censured and restrained. Very awful is an excommunication from the church, inflicted in the name of, and ratified by Jesus Christ the supreme Judge. And happy or terrible are its effects as men are duly affected with it. Heinous and highly aggravated are the iniquities of professed Christians; they render them more detestable and infectious than the very heathens. With conscientious care should all Christians forbear familiar converse with such scandalous professors, in order to render them sensible of their sins. And church officers ought to proceed with the greatest prudence in their censures with respect to their subjects, manner, and end. But thrice happy will it be when we shall be no more plagued with wicked persons, lusts, or practices.

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1. And since ye have power to call your own members to account, and to judge of their behaviour, how imprudent, unbrotherly, and shameful, must it be for you to prosecute your small differences, in civil affairs, in a litigious manner, even before heathen magistrates, to the scandal of your religion, rather than submit to the arbitration of your fellow-Christians! 2, 3. Do ye not know that faithful ministers, and really holy persons, shall, at the last day, sit with Christ on his throne, and give their assent to the sentences which he shall the world?[a] and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall [b]judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 [d]Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another: why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 [e]Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, 10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 [f]And such were some of you: but ye [g]are washed,[†] but ye are sanctified,[‡] but ye are justified[*] in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not [†]expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 [h]Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.[‡]

14 And [i]God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

15 Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid.

16 What! know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for [k]two (saith he) shall be one flesh.

17 [l]But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.[§]

18 Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without[‖] the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body.

19 What! [m]know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

pass upon wicked men and angels? Are ye not then able to settle matters, nay, small matters, of right and wrong, between one another? 4. If therefore ye have hereafter any civil differences, submit them to the arbitration of some of your brethren in the church, who are not ministers, but sensible and disinterested persons; nay, rather submit them to the arbitration of two or three of the weakest honest Christians, than bring them before heathen judges. 5. What a shame and reproach is it to you, who boast so much of your wisdom, that you cannot find among yourselves any persons able to adjust trifling debates about civil property! 6. But brethren, united together in the same saving Head, faith, and fellowship, to the reproach of all, litigiously prosecute one another before heathen magistrates! 7. This your conduct is extremely sinful, contrary to Christian prudence, forbearance, love and friendship, and highly dishonourable to your meek and lowly Lord and Saviour, the Prince of Peace, who purchased peace with his blood. Why then do ye not rather part with what is strictly your due, than expose one another, and even Christ himself, to contempt in the open courts of profane heathens? 8. Nay, I find, that instead of meek and patient bearing and forgiving injuries, too many of you, by lawsuits, really defraud and unjustly wrong your Christian brethren. 9, 10. But know, and consider this plain and awful truth, that whatever profession such people make, they are utterly unfit for, have no title to, and shall never be admitted to enjoy the blessings of grace or glory, who live impenitent and unbelieving under the guilt and dominion of any sin. Deceive not your souls with flattering fancies, hypocritical pretences, or presumptuous confidences. The nature, perfections, purposes, and word of God, render it absolutely impossible that any, who live and die impenitent, in idolatry, uncleanness, dishonesty, drunkenness, or reviling, should ever be members of his kingdom of grace here, or heavenly glory hereafter. 11. And remember, for your humiliation and warning, and for exciting your admiration of God's sovereign grace towards you, that, while ye continued heathens and unregenerate, some of you were chargeable with these detestable crimes: but in his most transcendent mercy, all of you, who truly believe in Christ, have been graciously cleansed from the guilt and the domineering and defiling power of your sinful lusts, and brought into a state of favour with God, adjudged to eternal life, and made partakers of holiness in nature and practice, through the righteousness and intercession of Christ, and by the applying, quickening, renewing, and purifying influences of the Holy Ghost, bestowed upon us by our gracious God, and which are signified and sealed to us in our Christian baptism.—12. With respect to eating of meats, with which some of your pretenders to wisdom hold fornication equally indifferent, I allow that, whatever is not directly or indirectly forbidden by Christ in his word, is lawful in itself; but it is not in every circumstance conducive to good purposes, but may be very injurious to others. I therefore allow myself to do, or not to do, what is indifferent in itself, precisely as it tends to promote good or bad ends; but will not suffer myself to be enslaved by any ungovernable passion for it, nor would I submit to the arbitrary imposition of it upon my conscience by any man. 13. Yea, all kinds of food are formed answerable to our belly, and our belly to them; though we shall soon have no need of them, being removed to the eternal state.—But fornication is a thing of a quite different nature. God never intended nor formed our body for it; but to be used for the honour, and in the service, of Jesus Christ, as redeemed by, united to, and to be glorified together with him; 14. And God has raised up the dead body of the Lord Christ from the grave, as a pledge, earnest, and security, that he will, in due time, by the same almighty power, raise up the dead bodies of his true members to a like blessed and glorious immortality. 15. Know ye not then, that your bodies, being constituent parts of your persons united to Christ, must, as his members, die and sleep in him, and be raised to glory with him? How shameful then, how wicked, and dishonourable to him and to his law, would it be to alienate them from his service and honour, and, as it were, rend them off from him; and by committing uncleanness, render them the members of a lewd woman! 16. Do not ye, who pretend to so much knowledge, understand, that the man, who unites himself in criminal affection or conversation with a harlot, disgraces himself, and becomes one body with her, in a sense extremely vile and abominable? 17. But, on the contrary, he who is vitally united to the Lord Jesus, as his Head and Husband, partakes of, and is animated by, that very same divine Spirit which dwells in Christ; and so, being mystically one Spirit with him, every affront done to that man's body must be an affront to Christ himself. 18. Abhor therefore, and resolutely abandon, all manner of uncleanness, and keep at the greatest distance from it. Watch and pray against all inclinations, enticements, and all appearances and occasions of it. For he that is guilty of it not only sins against God, his soul, or his neighbour, as in other sins, but debases his body, and unworthily sacrifices it to the most brutish and abominable lust. 19, 20. Know ye not that, if ye be true believers, your bodies, through their union to Christ, are a sacred, dedicated, and appropriated habitation of God the Holy Ghost, who is freely and divinely bestowed upon you, in which his person dwells, and his sanctifying influences are exerted. And ye are not your own property, to dispose of your bodies according to any brutish inclinations; but ye were redeemed from the curse of the law, and from sin, Satan, and everlasting ruin, and purchased, for the service and enjoyment of the holy and blessed God, by the blood of his Son: labour therefore, through grace, to yield your bodies, and all their members, as well as your souls, with all their faculties, as instruments of righteousness to God, that ye may never alienate and debase his peculiar property, but in all things obey and glorify him with that which he hath created, preserved, redeemed, and sanctified.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—Great shall be the honour of the saints to sit with Christ on his throne at the last day, and as assessors, to concur in the condemnation of devils and wicked men! And it is shameful, then, if they cannot adjust trifling disputes without going to law one with another. How much more CHAPTER VII.

(1) Of marriage: 1—17. (2) Every man to rest contented in his vocation: 18—24. (3) Of virginity; and, for what reasons, Christians may either marry or abstain: 25—40.

A. M. cir. 4063.
A. D. cir. 59.

NOW concerning the things whereof ye wrote* unto me: [a]it is good for a man not to [b]touch a woman.

2 Nevertheless, [c]to avoid fornication, let every man† have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

3 [d]Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence; and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband; and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 [e]Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6 [f]But I speak this by permission,‡ and not of commandment.

7 [g]For I would that all men were even as I myself:§ but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, [h]It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9 But [i]if they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord,‖ [k]Let not the wife depart from her husband:

11 But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: [l]and let not the husband put away his wife.

12 But to the rest speak I,* not the Lord; If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, [m]let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified† by the husband; else were your children unclean, but now are they holy.‡

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage§ in such cases: but God hath called us ‖to peace.

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

17 [n]But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk: and so ordain I in all churches.

18 Is any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised: is any called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised.

19 [o]Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a servant?* care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.†

22 [p]For he that is called in the Lord, being

§ Some think this liberation from bondage means, that the marriage is dissolved by the act of desertion, and that the brother or sister is free to marry another. This, however, seems decidedly at variance with our Lord's decision, Mat. 5. 32, and the apostle's own direction, ver. 10, 11—39, and Rom. 7. 1—3. The "bondage" from which the believer is freed is not, therefore, the marriage vow, but the following of husband or wife in a false religion. But while difference of religion does not dissolve the marriage bond, if the dissatisfied or irritated unbeliever will separate, the believer may blamelessly submit—remembering, however, that the call of God is not to separation, but rather to the cultivation of domestic affection and "peace."—Ed.

like Christians, as well as profitable, would it be to settle them by kind arbitration, than by litigious lawsuits! And it is very base for professed Christians to act as if they neither regarded the honour of Christ nor his people, if they can but secure external advantages to themselves. It is absurd to hope for heavenly happiness, without being weaned from our lusts, and reformed from our gross sins. Jesus' word, blood, and Spirit, make a most evident and important change upon the most notorious sinners. And how blessed, how deeply indebted to free grace, are the partakers of it! It is absurd for such to disturb their consciences with scruples about meats and drinks, or such like trifles, or to enslave them to human impositions; and more base immoderately to indulge their sensual appetite in the use of meats and drinks, which will soon be entirely useless. Infinitely detestable is every form of uncleanness; and contrary to the law of nature and marriage, to the noble purposes for which our bodies were designed, and to which those of saints shall be raised at the last day. Yea, much more so to our relation and intimate union with Christ as his members, and his right of purchasing our souls and bodies to be eternal instruments of glorifying God. It is highly dishonourable to his name, and debasing to ourselves, and a vile indignity to the Holy Ghost, who dwells in our bodies, as well as in our souls.

CHAP. VII.—Ver. 1—6. With respect to your question proposed to me in your letter, The unmarried state, in such times of persecution and uncertainty, is preferable to the married. But it is far better to marry than to expose one's self, or any other, to temptations to uncleanness; and married persons ought to take all proper opportunities of testifying their relation and affection to each other. And that Satan may have no occasion to tempt them to unchastity, let even their withdrawment from one another, for the purpose of solemn fasting and prayer, be with mutual consent, and for short times. But this I, as an inspired apostle, advise to, as most agreeable to your holy profession in your different circumstances, not as an express command of Christ. 7—9. For I could wish that every unmarried Christian could live as contented in a single life as I do; but every man must act according to his own temper, disposition, and situation, and the gifts and abilities with which God hath furnished him for the ends of his glory. If such as are unmarried can continue such, without danger of uncleanness, they will, in these troublesome times, find many advantages for the service of God. But if, by the grace which they have received, they cannot duly restrain their animal inclinations, it is better for them to marry some proper object; it being far more wise, dutiful, and comfortable, to do so, than to live under the tormenting or inflaming power of impure desires of unlawful enjoyments. 10, 11. And for directing such as are married, there is no need of further inspiration; the Lord Jesus having expressly commanded that wives should never voluntarily depart from their husbands, nor husbands put away their wives, except for the cause of fornication before, or adultery after, marriage; or, if they voluntarily part, both parties should live single, or rather study to be reconciled one to another. 12—14. And, as inspired by God, I charge you, that no Christians think of parting from those husbands or wives, with whom they were married before their conversion, on account of their continuing heathens, as the Jews were commanded to do in the time of Nehemiah, but dwell with them in the most friendly, peaceable, and engaging manner: for even heathens are separated to a holy use, by having Christian wives or husbands: and hence the children begotten between them are held by God, not as unclean heathens, but as externally, relatively, and federally holy; entitled to all the privileges of the new covenant equally as if both parents had been Christians. 15, 16. But if their heathen yoke-fellows, notwithstanding all prudent means to prevent it, will obstinately desert them, Christians are not obliged to enslave their consciences to their humours, or to continue in marriage relation to such as obstinately break the bond and defeat the ends of that relation. Meanwhile, they ought to do everything consistent with truth and holiness, in order to engage these heathen consorts to live with them:—for none knows but, by their meek and kind behaviour, through the blessing of Christ, and working of his Spirit, they may be rendered instrumental in gaining them to Christ, for the salvation of their souls. 17—19. And whatever the event be, let every one of you, and of other churches, study to walk in a course of holiness and virtue answerable to the condition or relation in which he stood when converted. Never trouble yourselves whether ye were originally Jews or Gentiles: for it is of no account with God whether ye be circumcised or not; but whether, according to his commandments, you receive the Lord Jesus, and walk in him righteously and godly. 20—22. And as redeeming grace was never intended to alter the stations or duties of secular a servant, is the Lord's free man: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

23 Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men.[a]

24 Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

25 Now concerning virgins[b] I have no commandment of the Lord:[c] yet I give my judgment,[d] as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.

26 I suppose[e] therefore that this is good for the present distress; I say, that it is good for a man[f] so to be.[g]

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28 [q] But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned: nevertheless such shall have trouble[h] in the flesh; but I spare you.[i]

29 But this I say, brethren, the time is short.[k] It remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31 And they that use this world, as not abusing it: for the fashion of this world passeth away.

32 But I would have you without carefulness.[l] [r] He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33 But he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife.

34 There is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy [s] both in body and in spirit: but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but [t] for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely[u] toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry.

37 Nevertheless he that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity,[v] but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 [u] So then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

39 [x] The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth: but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; [y] only in the Lord.

40 [z] But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and [a] I think[‡] also that I have the Spirit of God.

[u] For the elucidation of this obscure passage, four points must be observed:—1. That, generally, among the Jews and Greeks celibacy was held dishonourable. 2. That the Essenes among the Jews, and certain austere sects of philosophers among the Greeks, were unfavourable to marriage. 3. That, both among Jews and Greeks, females lived in a state of great seclusion; and 4. That fathers exercised supreme authority in their marriages, either as to giving or restraining. All these points the apostle proceeds to discuss and answer:—Any man, compared with ver. 38, evidently signifies any father:—virgin is, therefore, virgin-daughter.—Need so require—any need; but in time of persecution, the special need arising from the difficulty of protecting his family.—"Let them (the virgin and her suitor) marry."—Ed.

life, but to enforce the improvement of them in the manner most conducive to the glory of God, study to rest contented with those very stations in which you were before your conversion: and if you were converted in the station of a servant or slave, be not uneasy, as if that servile condition would render you less acceptable to God or honourable to your Christian faith or fellowship; yet, if you can have your freedom by fair means, thankfully accept and faithfully improve it: for a converted slave is as much freed from the bondage of sin, Satan, and the broken law, as any other; and a converted freed man is under as deep obligations to serve Christ, as if he had been a servant or slave to men. 23, 24. Since therefore your spiritual and religious freedom, purchased by Jesus' infinitely precious blood, is perfectly equal, resolutely maintain this, and never serve the lusts or sinful commandments of men, nor suffer the duties of your civil relations to hinder your service of him; and in whatever station you were converted to the Christian faith, rest contented with it, as ordered for you by the providence of God; and study to fulfil the duties of it as under his eye, in obedience to him, by assistance from him, and in fellowship with him. 25—28. With respect to persons who were never married, the Lord Jesus, indeed, left us no express command on this point; but I, as his faithful apostle, directed by his inspiring Spirit, advise, that if they can remain unmarried, without endangering their chastity, they should do so, for their greater conveniency in these perilous times. But let such as are married study, with cordial affection and contentment, to bear the encumbrances which attend their state; and let such as are unmarried beware of marrying rashly, lest they involve their wives and children in trouble along with themselves. Nevertheless, if any find marriage a necessary mean of preserving their chastity, they may lawfully enter into it; only it will in these times expose them more to anxiety and trouble. But I shall add no more, lest I should discourage some who are married, or hinder some from marriage, whose natural inclinations call to it, or make any to think the unmarried state more holy in itself. 29—31. But what I now subjoin is of infinite importance, that, in a very little time, all earthly stations, relations, sorrows, and comforts, will leave us, and we shall be launched forth into an eternal state; it is therefore proper that our hearts should sit loose to them, as quite unsubstantial and transitory, and only so far to be accounted of as they are God's gifts, to be improved for his honour, and as means of preparing us for eternal fellowship with him. 32—35. The reason why I have preferred a single state of life to the married, is, that I would have you as much as possible freed from all the anxious cares and perplexing encumbrances of this present world, that ye may, with less hinderance and distraction, attend the service of God, and pursue the salvation of your souls; for they who are unmarried have most liberty to lay out all their thoughts, time, and labour, about what pertains to the service and fellowship of God; whereas they who are married must be employed in providing for their families, and rendering themselves agreeable and helpful to their yoke-fellows.—My whole aim is the advantage of your souls, not to insnare any into unchaste inclinations or practices; but that, in the most easy and becoming manner, ye may have abundant liberty for waiting upon, keeping close to, and serving the Lord Jesus, and God the Father through him, in all religious duties, without disquiet, perplexity, and wandering of heart. 36—38. But if any parent or guardian find that the restraint of his daughter or pupil from marriage, beyond the flower of her age, is calculated to insnare her; or if a young man find that his temper, honour, or chastity call for it; it is very lawful and commendable that they should marry: but if they have no such call to marriage, it is still more advisable and commendable to refrain from it in these persecuting times. Thus parents who give their children in marriage, and children who, having gained their consent, enter into it, act a wise and lawful part; but if, without danger of sin or infamy, they continue unmarried, they better provide against the inconveniences of these troublesome times, and for a more uninterrupted liberty of serving God. 39, 40. But let the state of the church be as difficult as it will, the law of God and nature, and the marriage vow, bind a wife to abide with, and cleave to, her husband, till death part them, unless he voluntarily and resolutely leave her, or be guilty of adultery; but if he die before her, she may then marry another, but let it always be one who makes a credible profession of Christianity, and with whom she may expect the approbation, presence, and blessing of God in their conjugal relation, that they may dwell together, worshipping God, and religiously training up their children. But, indeed, I think that if she continue single, she will find it most convenient in these dangerous times, and best on religious accounts.—And whatever your new teachers insinuate, I know I have suggested these admonitions under the special direction of the Holy Ghost.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—Persons married or unmarried, bond or free, should labour to live contented with their lot, and always to the glory of God. And with great prudence should they marry or remain single, as best tends to prevent sinful impurities, and promote their more active and undisturbed service of God. In marrying, Christians should make conscience of choosing none but such as appear to fear God, and of entering into that relation with much serious consideration and solemn prayer. And married persons should cultivate the most endeared mutual affection, and live together as heirs of the grace of life, as not only their temporal, but their own and their children's spiritual and eternal happiness depend so much thereon. A deep sense of the vanity and shortness of time, and

CHAPTER VIII.

(1) Of meats offered to idols: 1—8. (2) Of the abuse of Christian liberty and knowledge: 9—13.

NOW, as touching things offered unto idols,* we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

2 And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3 But if any man love God, the same is known of him.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing† in the world, and that there is none other God but one.

5 For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

6 But to us there is but one God,‡ the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.

7 Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge: for some, with conscience§ of the idol, unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worse.

9 But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to them that are weak.

10 For if any man see thee which hast knowledge† sit at meat [a] in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be ‡emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols;

11 And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish,§ for whom Christ died?

12 But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

* The idol feasts were held in the temples, and the offerers were accustomed to invite their friends to partake with them. To these feasts, it appears, the Corinthian Christians were sometimes invited, and that some went through habit contracted in their heathenism; some, to avoid offence, or retain the favour of idolatrous neighbours; and others, because they knew the idol to be a mere stock or stone, and no god—so that the feast appeared to them no act of religion, but a mere common repast. Still, as this use, or rather abuse, of knowledge might lead the ignorant to conclude that such as attended the festivals venerated the idol, the apostle protests against such compliances of the well-instructed, because they might lead the ignorant into sin. See ver. 10.—Ed.

§ Hence some have concluded that some may perish, that is, eternally, "for whom Christ died." But surely this would directly contradict John 6. 37, 40. & 10. 27—29; and the Scriptures cannot be broken. Besides, the words are a mere interrogation, and assert nothing—but merely go to prove the enormity of the guilt of those intelligent Christians who, for the sake of their own appetite, would endanger the consciences of their weaker brethren. —Ed.

of the importance and length of eternity, ought always to regulate our affections and conduct. That is always best for us that is best for our soul; and whether single or married, our chief aim and endeavour ought to be to please the Lord, and to be holy both in body and spirit.

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 1. With respect to what has been offered to idols by your heathen neighbours, and is either feasted on by the offerer and his friends, or exposed to sale in the public market, I allow you and your new teachers to have a great deal of knowledge, and I know that we apostles have no less; but mere notions in men's heads, and a fond conceit of their superior understanding, do but puff up the pride of their heart, and indispose them to receive further instruction; —but love to God, and to our brethren, is that which alone makes us practically improve our knowledge for promoting our own and others' holiness, peace, and comfort. 2. And if any think their own knowledge of things so perfect that they need not consult the sentiments, nor regard the edification of others, it is a sufficient evidence that they know nothing in a truly spiritual and beneficial manner. 3. But if any heartily love God, and from that principle improve their knowledge to his glory and the edification of souls, God takes special notice of, and approves them.—4. With respect to the lawfulness of a Christian's eating what has been offered to idols, we all know that the heathen gods have no divine nature or virtue in them to make things either better or worse in themselves; and that there is but one God. 5, 6. For though the heathens have hundreds or thousands whom they esteem and worship as gods, celestial or terrestrial, supreme or subordinate, yet to us Christians there is but one God, from whom, in the person of the Father, all things in creation and providence originally proceed, and in whom we live, move, and have our being; and one Lord Jesus, by whom, as his Father's only begotten Son, all things were created, and by whom, as Mediator, we receive all new-covenant blessings, and have our persons and services rendered acceptable to God. 7. There are, however, some professed Christians who do not yet distinctly understand the nullity of all the heathen idols, but continue to eat what is offered to them with a kind of religious regard; and thus their consciences, not being fully instructed in the doctrines of the gospel, are herein defiled by the guilt of idolatry. 8. And however distinct knowledge we or others may have that idols have no divinity in them, it is plain that our eating of food offered to them can never profit our souls, or recommend us to God; and our prudent refraining from it can do us no hurt. 9. It is therefore certainly your duty carefully to avoid all use of your freedom, or right to eat of these things which tends to insnare such as are weak in knowledge or faith, and make them sin in doing that with a doubting or superstitious mind which ye do safely and without any doubt: 10. For if such weak persons see you feasting upon these meats in an idol's temple, will they not be imboldened to eat them with an idolatrous veneration of the idol? 11. And thus, through your knowledge leading you to an imprudent use of your liberty, your weak, mistaken, and doubting brother, for whom you charitably believe Christ laid down his infinitely precious life, is led into damnable sin, or to destroy his own inward peace and comfort. 12. Now, while you thus lead your Christian brethren into sinful and idolatrous practices, and wound, disturb, and defile their tender and unsettled consciences, ye sin not only against them, but against Christ, whose members they are; and ye attempt to defeat the designs of his love, in what he suffered for their comfort and salvation. 13. This consideration bears such weight with me, that, if my eating of flesh offered to idols, or even of common flesh, should disturb the conscience of my Christian brother, or occasion his falling into sin, I would never indulge myself in eating any more as long as I live.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—Fine and extensive notions in our head, without love to God and men in our heart, do but puff us up with self-conceit, and render us detestable to God. And nothing more plainly manifests our want of solid knowledge than our contempt of others as weak and foolish. None are more apt to be self-conceited than such as are remarkably ignorant of things important: and that is always the best knowledge which is most useful in practice. It is a great mercy then to have the saving knowledge of Christ as the alone Mediator, and of God in him as the only true God! And yet, alas, many true Christians are too little acquainted with the vanity of idols, or have but confused and unsettled conceptions of things most important. With tender and exact care ought Christians to avoid dubious, or even innocent and indifferent practices, which may grieve their fellow-believers, and occasion their stumbling into sin. For it is highly criminal to grieve the spirits, and destroy the peace and edification of them for whom Christ laid down his life.

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1, 2. It was for this very purpose of avoiding offence that I forbore taking my necessary and due subsistence from you. How absurd then is it to infer from this circumstance, that I am not an apostle, when no one can be produced that has a more evident claim to that high office! for did not I receive my commission and instruction immediately from Christ himself when he appeared to me? And are not ye Corinthians, who were converted many of you by my ministrations, an evident proof that Christ hath sealed mine office in your effectual calling, and your enrichment with many excellent gifts and graces? 3—6. I therefore boldly interrogate your new proud preachers, who dare to question my authority. Have I not a divine right to necessary subsistence, not only for myself, but also for a family, if I chose to have one, as well as James, Jude, Peter, or 18 What is my reward then? [l] Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power [§] in the gospel.

19 For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And [m] unto the Jews I became as a Jew, [‖] that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

22 To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: [‡] I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

any other apostle? Am I and Barnabas, who were so expressly appointed to the apostolic work by the Holy Ghost, and no other preacher, obliged to maintain ourselves by the labour of our hands? 7. What can be more unreasonable? Have common soldiers, labourers, or shepherds, a universally allowed claim at least to a reward of necessary food and raiment? And must we, who, under Christ as our Captain, fight his battles, pull down the strongholds of sin, Satan, and captivate multitudes of sinners to him;—we, who, under his direction, labour in his vineyard, plant and water the souls of his people;—we, who watch over, direct, and feed his spiritual flock, have no claim to necessary subsistence? 8—10. Nay, let the law of Moses, of which my judaizing opponents are so fond, decide the point. It expressly forbids to muzzle the mouth of an ox while treading out the corn, in order to prevent his eating mouthfuls of it. Now God never appointed this law merely for the sake of these brutes, but chiefly to direct and bind men to exercise humanity and equity towards those of their own species who labour for their advantage, and especially who labour for the benefit of their souls, and to encourage such to expect a proper reward from those who reap benefit by them. 11, 12. When we have spent our time and strength in dispensing unto you the oracles and ordinances of God, for the conviction, conversion, comfort, and eternal salvation of your souls, could you reasonably grudge us the small return of a temporal necessary subsistence for our bodies? If other preachers, and even your false teachers, claim a right to a proper maintenance, are not we, who first planted and watered your church, much more entitled to it? Nevertheless, to manifest that we have no mercenary aim, but only seek your spiritual and eternal welfare, and that the gospel, which sets forth the offices and grace of Christ, and which he has authorized and committed to our trust, might be the more readily received by you, we neither asked nor received from you our due maintenance. 13, 14. But though we had done both, we should have but exerted our right: ye, and especially your judaizing pretenders to wisdom, cannot but know, that, under the Mosaic dispensation, the priests and Levites, who officiated for others in the worship of God, had a very large subsistence divinely allotted them out of their tithes, sacrifices, meat-offerings, and gifts.—In like manner, when Christ sent forth his disciples to preach the gospel, he expressly appointed that all faithful preachers should be suitably maintained by those who share the benefit of their labours. 15. But notwithstanding these express laws of both Moses and Christ, I neither have, nor ever intend to ask or receive, any maintenance from you; for I had rather earn my bread with the labour of my hands, or even be starved to death, than give any occasion to think that I preach the gospel for the sake of carnal gain. 16. For let me be as earnest and diligent in publishing the glad tidings of salvation as I will, it is no more than what my commission and command from Christ render my indispensable duty; and should I neglect it, the reproaches of my guilty conscience, and the everlasting damnation of hell, must be my just reward. 17, 18. But if, under all the difficulties of poverty and of providing for myself, I preach from a pure regard to the glory of God and the salvation of men, I have a present inward satisfaction of mind, and humbly expect a future gracious reward of my faithfulness and zeal. On the other hand, if I should with reluctance receive and manage that trust which Christ has committed to me, what reward could I expect but uneasy remorse of conscience now, and eternal misery hereafter. And in these views I preach the gospel freely, when circumstances require it, that none may be prejudiced thereat, or pretend that I rigorously or unseasonably require my dues. 19, 20. For in this, and many other instances of Christian liberty, I have studied, in the most condescending and engaging manner, to accommodate my behaviour to men's different tempers and inclinations, that I may the more effectually sweeten their spirits, and recommend Christ and his ways to them. In order to reconcile the Jews, who reckon themselves still under the law of Moses, I reason with them out of the Old Testament, and indulge the observance of such ceremonies as are not yet absolutely unlawful, always instructing them, that none of their works, but the righteousness of Christ alone, must be the ground of their hope towards God. 21. And though I reckon myself indispensably bound by the moral laws of the most high God, as the rule of my duty, issued forth to me through Jesus Christ, yet, in order to gain the Gentiles to Christ, I rest the proof of my doctrine upon the extrinsic evidence thereof, in the undoubted miracles attending it, and its being set home upon their hearts by the Spirit of God: and I neither observe Jewish ceremonies myself, nor encourage them to it. 22. In dealing with weak Christians, who are apt to be easily grieved or stumbled, I condescend to their weakness, and forbear even things which are in themselves lawful and innocent, that I may prevent their taking offence, and may establish them in the more important points of faith and holiness. In fine, by all lawful expedients, I suit myself to men's diversified tempers and circumstances, in order that, in the hand and by the blessing of Christ, I may be instrumental in delivering them from under the slavery of sin, Satan, and the broken law, and bringing them to share the blessings of spiritual and eternal salvation. 23. All this I do from a sincere and zealous concern to prevent unseasonable exceptions against the gospel of Christ, and that I may recommend and propagate it among persons of every character; that in fellowship with you and others, I may share the special benefits of it. 24. To take therefore a hint from your own Grecian races, in which many run, while they know that one only shall obtain the prize, let us, by diligent receiving of the Lord Jesus, and walking in him, run our Christian course, in which not one, but all who run, shall receive the gracious reward of eternal life and honour.

And as by great moderation in diet, the wrestlers and boxers prepare themselves for their public combats, so ought we to mortify every worldly and sinful affection that would hinder us in our Christian warfare; and the rather as our crown of glory is infinitely more excellent and durable than their garlands of flowers, pines, myrtles, olives, bays, laurels, or the like. 26, 27. Under this apprehension, I labour to run my Christian race, and fight the good fight of faith, in a most careful and judicious manner, directed by the law of God, and in good earnest against my spiritual enemies.—As combatants strive to beat down and conquer their antagonists, so do I, by faith, repentance, watchfulness, fastings, and prayer, mortification and self-denial, labour to subdue my inward corruptions, lest after preaching the gospel to others, instead of sharing with them in the blessed fruits of it, I should, in the last judgment, be esteemed as one whose works are unfit to be rewarded.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—It is a great comfort to ministers when they have full evidence of the Lord Christ's calling them to their work, and granting them success in it. And readily ought they to forego their own liberties or claims, if it tend to the success of the gospel. But if they do this, it is base to revile their persons, or deny their rights, on that account. Nothing can be more evident than that ministers have a divine right to a sufficient maintenance from their hearers. Yet never ought the procuring of that to be their great aim, but the glory of God in the conversion and edification of souls: and every form of lawful condescension is to be practised so far as best answers that end.—With great faithfulness, care, and pains, ought ministers and others to run their Christian course, and fight their spiritual warfare, according to God's word, and duly to govern their passions, appetites, tempers, and conduct. And with humble and holy jealousy ought ministers to take heed to themselves, their doctrines and practices, that neither they nor their labours may be disapproved and rejected by Christ at his second coming.

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1—5. And to awaken you to run your Christian race with care, diligence, and resolution, and to guard against every idolatrous or other deviation from it, observe, with the utmost attention and deepest concern, the fate of God's highly favoured Israelitish nation;—how,—after he had conducted them by a pillar of fire and cloud, and led them through the Red Sea, thereby solemnly initiating them into a peculiar covenant relation with himself by the mediation of Moses,—and nourished them with excellent manna from heaven, and water from flinty rocks, which prefigured Christ, and followed them through the Arabian wilderness; and which, as symbols, represented the light, comfort, and deliverance of the gospel church, their solemn instalment in their happy state, and their marvellous and unceasing nourishment,—he was so offended by their apostasy, unbelief, idolatry, murmuring, and other provocations, that almost that whole generation were cut off by miserable deaths in the wilderness, falling short of the promised Canaan, and many of them of the heavenly inheritance. 6—10. Now these things happened to them, and are recorded in Scripture as awful examples, representing to us what fearful judgments we may look for, in time and eternity, if we indulge ourselves in the like murmuring against what God provides for us, or in desiring what he forbids. Let none of you, therefore, like them at Sinai, partake of idolatrous feasts, or in any direct or indirect acknowledgment of heathen idols, lest God's wrath overtake you, as it did them.—Neither indulge yourselves in uncleanness, as some of them committed whoredom with the Midianitish women, and were punished, by the death of 23,000 in a plague, and 1000 more in a legal process of the magistrates.—Neither let any of you distrust the power, faithfulness, and grace of Christ, to help you under difficulties and discouragements, or, through presumptuous sinning, try his patience, or defy his power and justice, as they did, and were destroyed by fiery serpents.—Neither indulge dissatisfaction and repining complaints of the dispensations of God, or of the afflictions which ye suffer for Christ, or against the persons, dutiful behaviour, or divine doctrines, of any of his ministers, as they often did in the wilderness, and were destroyed by one judgment after another. 11. Now all these public calamities happened to God's ancient professing and favourite people as examples of what we may expect if we imitate them in wickedness: and they are recorded in God's word for warnings to us who live when the Jewish dispensation is just ending, and under the last dispensation of grace which God intends for his church in this world, that we may avoid their sins, in order to escape their punishment. 12. Let therefore self-conceited professors, who pride themselves on their gifts, privileges, attainments, strength, and stability, watch and pray, and, in a dependence on God's grace, use every other mean of his appointment, to prevent backsliding and apostasy. 13. And let those of you who, having no confidence in yourselves, trust wholly to Jesus Christ, and his free grace, for your preservation in the way of duty, remember that no afflictions or temptations have happened to you but such as are common to men in this evil world and imperfect state, and may, through divine help, be borne or overcome; and that God, who has granted you so many promises of support and deliverance, will infallibly fulfil the same, and will not suffer you to be troubled or tempted beyond the measure of strength which he bestows upon you; and knowing that ye cannot always bear up under them, or struggle with them, will, in due time, grant you an honourable and complete deliverance from them. 14. Therefore, my dear fellow-Christians, awed by these alarming examples on the one hand, and encouraged by the hopes of all needful assistances on the other, detest and avoid to the utmost all idolatry, and all appearances of it, or approaches to it. 15. These solemn warnings I give you, as persons who are acquainted with Christian principles, and even value yourselves upon your superior wisdom and knowledge; and I appeal to your own reason and conscience, and desire you to ponder the weight of what I am going to say. 16. Is not our partaking of the consecrated bread and wine in the Lord's supper an open profession, token, and mean, of our joint holy fellowship with Christ, in the benefits of his incarnation, obedience, and suffering,—and a public acknowledgment of our obligations and purpose to yield all holy obedience to him? 17. And does not our partaking of the same loaf or cup signify, that, however different our persons or circumstances be, we are all spiritually connected in the one mystical body of Christ's church? 18. And did not the ancient priests and Israelites, by eating their respective shares of the peace-offerings, profess their joint fellowship with, and dedication to, that God to whom part of it was burned on the altar? 19. I do not, by these instances, insinuate that the nominal gods of the heathens have any real divinity in them, or that meats are made any worse in themselves by being offered to them. 20. But what I intend to suggest is, that the heathens, by sacrificing to these idols, and feasting on their sacrifices, do really worship and hold fellowship with devils: and I would by no means have you to hold fellowship with these unclean spirits or their worshippers. 21. For ye cannot, in consistency with the honour of Christ and his Father, or with your Christian profession or edification, at once hold fellowship with Christ and his people in his holy supper, and with devils and their worshippers in their idolatrous feasts. 22. Should we then, who are espoused to Jesus Christ as our spiritual Husband, dare to provoke his jealousy by honouring pretended deities? Are we more able to escape or resist the almighty strokes of his wrath than the Israelites were? 23. No pretence of the indifference of things offered to idols, or of our intending no respect for the idols thereby, can warrant our eating of them: for things very lawful in themselves may become very inexpedient and unedifying in some circumstances, by stumbling others, and drawing them into sin. 24. In such cases Christians must not do what serves their own pleasure, honour, or temporal benefit, but what will tend most to the real and lasting advantage of their neighbours. 25. But though it would be highly criminal and dangerous for any of you to eat meats offered to idols in their temples or idolatrous feasts, yet ye may freely eat whatever is sold in the public market, without any scruple or inquiry whether it has been offered to an idol or not. 26. For God, who is Creator, Proprietor, and Governor of the whole earth and of all its produce, and has now, under the gospel, abolished the ancient typical distinction of meats, allows you to eat whatever can contribute to your health. 27. If therefore any of your heathen neighbours invite you to a meal with them in their own houses, and regard to good manners, and an intention to promote their spiritual edification, incline you to go, eat freely whatever is set before you on the table, without any scrupulous thought or inquiry whether it has been offered to an idol or not. 28. But if he who invited you to the entertainment, or any other, by telling you that it had been offered to an idol, should hint that your eating of it would be a practical allowance of some honour to the idol; then, that neither his, nor your own, nor any other's conscience may be defiled or wounded, and to testify your high detestation of idolatry, eat not of it: for God, who is the proprietor of all the animal and vegetable food on earth, has granted you enough beside what has been offered to idols. 29. Nor ought ye in such points chiefly to regard your own conscience, but the consciences of your neighbours, that they may not by your conduct be grieved, or imboldened to anything unlawful to them: for why should you or I, by an imprudent and unseasonable use of our Christian liberty, tempt other men's consciences to pass a wrong judgment upon our conduct? 30. For if, through the bounty of God's providence, I have an opportunity, and, through the grace of the gospel, have liberty, of feeding indifferently upon whatever food is presented to me, yet why should I indulge myself so far as to give any one occasion to reproach me for eating such meats as I receive with prayer to him for his blessing on them, and with religious thankfulness to him for providing and allowing them to me? 31. To close this argument with some important rules:—Not only in your eating and drinking, but in all your conduct, civil or religious, keep the glory of God before you as your principal and last end, and behave as is most conducive toward this. 32. Always carefully avoid whatever can prejudice the minds, and hinder the conversion, of either Jews or heathens, or may stumble either Jewish or Gentile Christians, or grieve, discourage, or pervert, any church member, strong or weak. 33. And, on the contrary, in Jesus' strength, labour, after my example, to deny yourselves, and study to do or forbear things, as is best suited to the peace, comfort, spiritual advantage, and eternal salvation of all around you.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—No visible relation to God, no sacramental privileges, can screen idolaters, fornicators, tempters of Christ, unbelieving murmurers, or any similar transgressors, from his just vengeance. And instances of other men's sins and punishment should deter us from sinful indulgences or self-confidence, lest we fall into the like condemnation. Great is the mercy that God's faithfulness and grace secure, for his watchful and humble saints, mitigation of, support under, and seasonable deliverance from, all their troubles and temptations; that our Redeemer is so mighty, that we may safely trust him; and that he knows best what afflictions we need, and how long we should be exercised with them.—What a great and holy God we have to do with—infinitely jealous of his own honour! And highly do we affront him if in the least we countenance the worshipping of vain idols and impure spirits in them. Marvellous is his condescension and kindness in allowing us intimate fellowship with himself, and appointing solemn ordinances for that purpose. And totally inconsistent with our communion with Christ, and one another as his members, are the very smallest approaches towards fellowship with devils or lusts, or towards giving occasion of grief or sin to the weakest saints or neighbours. Things that are lawful in themselves must never be needlessly or unseasonably used to the insnaring of others. God, to whom all things pertain, has given them to be used freely, or with restraint, as best tends to edification. And his glory therefore, and the spiritual advantage of our neighbours, ought to be our leading aims in all our actions, natural, civil, or religious.

CHAP. XI.—Ver. 1. Carefully therefore follow my directions, and imitate my example, in condescension to the weaknesses and prejudices of others for their good; and in everything else which I copy after the perfect pattern of our great Lord and Master Jesus Christ. 2. And indeed, my dear brethren, I cannot but commend you, that, notwithstanding all that your false teachers have done to cor-

3 But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ;‡ and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God.

4 Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered,§ dishonoureth his head.

5 But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoureth her head:‖ for that is even all one as if she were shaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

9 Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

10 For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God.

16 But d if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom,† neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions‡ among you; and I partly believe it.

19 For there must be also e heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper.§

21 For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken.‖

22 What! f have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame *them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

rupt you, the better part of you still discover the most dutiful regard to my apostolic authority, reputation, and comfort, and to the most important doctrines which I preached to you, and observe most of the rules relative to worship which I taught you. 3. Many irregularities, however, have been introduced into your church. Some of your women, under the pretext of praying or prophesying by immediate inspiration, appear in your public assemblies unvailed, and thus assume an undue authority over the men, or imitate the heathen priestesses. I beg you would seriously consider, that by divine appointment, suited to the nature of things, the Son of God, who created all things, is made head over his church, and over all men for her benefit; and husbands, according to the superiority of their sex, are the head of government to their wives; and God the Father, who has put all things under Christ, has, in that view, an authority over him as man and Mediator. 4. Now the vailing of the head being a badge of modesty and subjection, and uncovering of it a token of superiority, in your country and many others, every man, who, by an extraordinary influence of the Spirit leads your public worship in praying or preaching with a vail on his head or face, dishonours Jesus Christ, from whom he received his authority. 5. But every woman, who, by the special influence of the Holy Ghost, pours out her prayers to God, or delivers exhortations to the people, with her head unvailed, shows a disrespect to her husband and his whole sex; for that is all one in signification as if she wore her hair short in the manner of a man. 6. If therefore women will throw off their vails, those badges of modesty and subjection, let them cut their hair short as men do: and if, as every one must, they think that immodest and contrary to custom, let them keep on their vails. 7. For men, being the honourable representations of God's supreme and glorious dominion over all, ought to mark their head with no token of subjection; but women's subjection to men being their distinguished honour, they ought, in all public assemblies, to mark their heads with the tokens of it. 8. For, in the original creation of mankind, Adam was not created out of the substance of Eve, but she was formed of one of his ribs. 9. Nor was Adam originally created for the sake of Eve, who then had no existence; but she was created to be a help meet for, and comfort to him; plainly intimating, that the woman, who was last formed, and out of the man, for his use, ought to live in all reasonable subjection to him. 10. Therefore, especially in acts of public worship, women, in deference to the superiority of those messengers whom Christ hath sent to preach the gospel, as well as in reference to holy angels present: and that evil angels may have no occasion given them to suggest anything proud or immodest, ought always to have their heads vailed, as a token of men's superiority and power over them. 11. Nevertheless, no man must look on himself as an absolute lord over a woman, to command and rule her in a harsh and tyrannical manner, according to his will and pleasure; as now a man can no more be independent of the woman than she of him, both being equally necessary and useful to one another, and mutually obliged to study and promote each other's comfort and advantage; and both, without any alteration of their natural or relative duties, being equally the subjects of Christ's spiritual kingdom, and sharers of spiritual blessings. 12. For as the woman at first was formed out of the man, so all the sons of Adam are conceived and born by women, the two sexes being thus the reciprocal means of each other's being and happiness. And it is God who makes each of the sexes what they are to one another, that they may discharge their mutual duties in the most affectionate manner. 13. I appeal then to your own unbiassed judgment, whether any inspiration from God can ever render it decent for a woman to invert the natural order of her appointment, and publicly mark herself as if equal in authority to a man. 14. Does not even nature itself, which has prompted all civilized nations to preserve an apparent distinction of the sexes, teach you, that, according to the custom of your country, it would be reckoned effeminate in a man to wear his hair in the length and form of a woman's? 15. And that, on the other hand, it is an honour for a woman to distinguish herself from the superior sex by the length and form of her hair, as it was given her by God for this very end.—It therefore follows, that vails, or any mode of dress which betokens modesty or subjection, ought always to be worn by your women in your religious assemblies. 16. But if, after all that I have said, any of your new teachers will contend for such a preposterous practice, know that no such thing is allowed by any apostle of Christ, or used in any New Testament church, whether of Jewish or Gentile converts.—17. Meanwhile, notwithstanding my having justly commended you for following my instructions and pattern, I must, with regret, reprove your disorderly behaviour in your religious meetings, which makes them turn out to the dishonour of Christ and your spiritual hurt: 18. For I am informed, and I fear too justly, that when ye meet together for the celebration of Christ's ordinances, to the breach of order, peace, and brotherly love, ye fall into parties and unchristian divisions; 19. For, considering the depravity of human nature, and how busy Satan and his instruments are to promote everything dishonourable to God and destructive to men, there cannot fail to be offences, factions, schisms, and great corruptions of doctrine and worship, in the church, which God, by his providence, overrules for the trial and honourable manifestation of sincere believers, and the detection of hypocritical professors. 20, 21. And this factious spirit has introduced such profane disorder amongst you in the celebration of the Lord's supper, as hath transformed it into a kind of tumultuous revel, and a feast for your bodies, rather than a solemn ordinance of Christ, appointed for an affectionate and brotherly fellowship with, and commemoration of him. They who come first, bringing their provisions with them, fill their bellies without waiting for their brethren: they who bring much with them, like heathens at their idolatrous revels, eat and drink to the full, if not to excess; while the poor, who bring nothing with them, get nothing to eat or drink. 22. Think how absurd and scandalous this conduct is! If ye intend merely to satisfy your animal appetites, have ye not your own houses to eat and drink in? Or do ye aim at pouring contempt upon Christ's ordinances and church, and exposing and discouraging his poor members? 23. Ye cannot but know that it is contrary to the appointment of the Lord Jesus Christ; for, as taught by his own immediate revelation, I declared and recommended to you, that he, as sole King and Head of his church, having a right to institute ordinances, or demand obedience to them, and power to bless them for our spiritual edification, did,—for the sealing of his testament, the confirmation of our faith, and that he might show his constant affection to, and great care of, his people, and his infinite willingness and steadfast resolution to suffer for them, and that he might the more effectually engage our love to him and regard to this ordinance,—on the very night before his death, in which Judas betrayed him, take a part of the bread which they had left at the paschal supper; 24. And having prayed over it for a blessing on it, with thanksgiving to God for the riches of his love and grace, and so set it apart for the intended holy use, he brake it, and gave each of his disciples a small piece of it, requiring them to take and eat it as a token and mean of their receiving by faith, and feeding on, his person God-man, which was quickly to suffer and die in their nature for them;—and to do all in a believing, humble, joyful, thankful, and obediential remembrance of his person, dying love, extreme sufferings, the blessings thereby purchased, and of their obligations to love and duty thereby constituted. 25. In the same manner, after the passover supper, he took a cup with some wine in it, and, setting it apart to a holy use by solemn prayer and thanksgiving, he intimated that this consecrated liquor was to be a standing symbol and mean of applying his blood, or complete righteousness, by which the condition of the new covenant was fulfilled, its blessings purchased, and promises confirmed; and required them all to drink it in a fiducial, affectionate, penitential, grateful, and self-dedicating remembrance of his bleeding love, and tremendous sufferings for their redemption. 26. For as often as ye eat and drink these consecrated elements, ye publicly avow to God, to your consciences, and to the world, that ye glory in your crucified Redeemer, believe and rest upon his death as the only ground of your pardon and reconciliation with God, and of all your hopes of eternal life,—and that in the firm faith of his appearance to judge the world. 27. Whoever, therefore shall, contrary to the nature and design of this solemn ordinance, partake of it in an ignorant, irreverent, factious, uncharitable, carnal, and sensual manner, he shall be held guilty of profaning and pouring contempt upon the person and righteousness of the Lord Jesus, and, as it were, crucifying him afresh. 28. In order therefore to a safe and proper partaking of this ordinance, every person ought necessarily to examine his own state before God, his knowledge of the nature, use, and ends of the ordinance,—and his faith, repentance, love, and new obedience; and to discern the Lord's body;—and with these serious inquiries, and in the exercise of these graces, to partake of the consecrated bread and wine in obedience to Christ's appointment, and as his instituted means of fellowship with himself. 29. For he who, neglecting such preparation, eats and drinks this supper of the Lord Jesus Christ from carnal principles and views, with an unfriendly and contentious spirit, or in a hypocritical or irreverent manner, does thereby deserve, and expose himself to the just judgments of God in this life and that which is to come, as he does not spiritually discern the person and righteousness of Christ, God-man, represented in these elements, but considers and uses them as common food. 30. And it is on account of your shameful disorders in temper and practice, in the partaking of this solemn ordinance, that God has rendered many of you Corinthian professors weak and sickly, and has cut off others by death. 31. Did we indeed seriously and conscientiously search our own hearts and behaviour, and condemn and repent of whatever we found amiss, we should escape God's severe chastisements. 32. And if any of us believers be terribly afflicted on earth, we are therein wisely and mercifully chastised by the Lord Jesus Christ as our Father, that we may be thereby restrained from such sinning as would be inconsistent with a gracious state, and that our future condemnation with the wicked world may be prevented. 33. Wherefore, my dearly beloved brethren in Christ, study for the future to avoid all profanation of this solemn ordinance; and when ye assemble to partake of it, wait for one another, that ye may all communicate together at the same table, in truly Christian fellowship with Christ, and with one another as his children and brethren. 34. And if any of you be hungry, satisfy your craving appetites at home, never at the Lord's table, which was appointed not for satiating natural appetites, but for the spiritual refreshment of souls;—that so ye may no more meet to hurt and endanger yourselves by an uncharitable, carnal, and factious profanation of that holy supper.—Some lesser disorders I expect to rectify when I pay you another visit.

† A messenger, or letter, may be treated "unworthily" by neglect, contempt, or injury. The bread and wine being the representatives of Christ's body and blood are treated "unworthily," when the end of the ordinance—remembrance of a crucified Redeemer, and self-examination—are neglected.—Ed.

‡ As in the heavens the natural eye "discerns" nothing but sun, moon, and stars, while yet the intellectual eye "discerns" the glory of God, (Ps. 19. 1); so in the communion the natural eye "discerns" nothing but bread and wine, while faith in the representative, "discerns" the body and blood of the Lord.—Note. There are two sins peculiar to an unholy communicant, and to the unholy neglecter of the communion: (1) Self-unexamined; (2) Christ's body undiscerned.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—In Christ alone we find example without defect, and authority without restriction. But whatever is good in his servants or people ought to be carefully imitated; and his ordinances should be conscientiously received from the hand of his ministers. With exact care ought all to observe the natural order of things, and to study a modest decency of dress, especially in worshipping assemblies. And it is hurtful to the interests of religion when church members fall into a contentious and uncharitable temper and conduct towards one another. Great is the mercy that God overrules this, as well as the heresies, the doctrines, which Satan and his instruments introduce into the church, for the improvement of true believers, and the detection of hypocrites. In great kindness hath Jesus appointed his sacramental supper for the spiritual refreshment and mutual fellowship of his people on earth. And it ought to be observed in a simple, but judicious, obediential, believing, and devoutly solemn manner, and for the most important ends. Serious examination of our state, nature, and practice, and of our condition, frame, and ends, should always precede our approaches to it. And in a distinct discernment of Jesus Christ, as God-man, and the Lord our righteousness; and in delightful, but reverential, views of his second coming, ought we to receive it.—Heinous is the sin, and fearful the danger, of unworthily communicating. And often God severely chastises his own people for their misbehaviour in this ordinance. But how heaven-daring is it when multitudes, who have no appearance of real godliness, are readily admitted to it! And highly improper when it is used only as a test of civil loyalty.

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. Now with respect to the distinguished gifts of wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, working of miracles, or the like, which have been abundantly bestowed on some of you by the Spirit of God, I would have you to consider their true origin, nature, and end, that ye may no longer make them occasions of pride, envy, and strife. 2. You cannot pretend that you deserved them, when ye were so lately drowned in ignorance, idolatry, and other wickedness, seduced by Satan and your priests to worship lifeless images and fancied deities; nor can ye pretend that such idols could bestow such gifts upon you. 3. To check your own pride, prejudice, and envy, and that ye may discern the difference of your spiritual gifts from all delusive and magical operations, observe, that no man, who thinks or acts under the influence of the Holy Ghost, whose design and work is to promote Christ's honour, can reject or represent Christ as an impostor, abandoned of God; nor can he work a miracle to confirm such blasphemy; and that no man can heartily acknowledge Christ for the great God, and his only Saviour, Lord, and Master, Jesus accursed;* and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

5 And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man† to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

9 To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

10 To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues:

11 But all these worketh‡ that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ.

13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized§ into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink‖ into one Spirit.

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? if the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18 [d] But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 [e] And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble,* are necessary:

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be [f] less honourable, upon these we † bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there should be no ‖ schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

* The reference is either to a custom that was early prevalent among the Jews, and which, at least in some places, is still believed to exist, of calling Jesus ἀνάθεμα, that is, one so abominable as not to be endured on the earth; or else to the practice early adopted by heathen persecutors, of requiring persons suspected of Christianity to anathematize Jesus, as a blasphemous test of their heathenism.—Ed.

† Every man.—Not to every man without exception, believer or unbeliever, as some have imagined; but, as the original signifies, his peculiar manifestation of the Spirit is given "to each" believer, not for ostentation, but for the general profit of the church.—Ed.

‡ By examining ver. 6, it will appear that "it is the same God that worketh all in all; and by conjoining with it ver. 11, it will appear that "all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." Wherefore the conclusion is inevitable, that the Spirit is God.—Ed.

§ The apostle is treating of persons amply endowed with various spiritual gifts; consequently the baptism of which he speaks is not the mere "outward and visible sign" of water; but "the inward and spiritual grace" thereby represented, and conferred on the believer by the operation and gift of the Spirit of God.—Ed.

‖ That is, communicants at the Lord's supper have not merely drunk of one cup; but, by faith, have been made partakers of one Spirit—one Spirit of truth, grace, holiness, comfort, supplication, unity, and love.—Ed.

* The tenderest, and, in that sense, the most "feeble" member of the body, is the eye; yet its importance both to bodily and mental attainment and enjoyment needs no proof. So the weakest believer, with little knowledge, and with the most sensitive trembling conscience, and that shrinking piety that smites upon the breast, and dares scarcely look up to God, (Luke 18. 13), and merely ventures to pray "God be merciful (through Christ) to me a sinner," may, through grace, confer benefits upon the church equal, or even superior, to those of apparently far higher endowments.—Ed.

or preach him as such, and work any miracles to confirm his doctrine, but by the power of the Holy Ghost. 4. To manifest their true original, and also to direct you to the proper use of them, observe further, that though the kinds and degrees of the gifts bestowed upon church officers and private believers be very diversified and numerous, yet it is the same divine Spirit who bestows and enables rightly to use them all. 5. And that, though there be a great diversity of offices and services in the Christian church, yet it is one and the same Lord Jesus who has instituted all these offices, and who calls and qualifies such particular persons to execute them; and they all act under his authority, and by his influence, as their Head, Lord, and King. 6. And though there be divers miraculous operations performed in the exercise of these gifts, and discharge of these offices, it is the one divine Father who, with the Son and Holy Spirit, produces all these abilities, and the good effects thereof. 7. And to prevent your abuse of these spiritual gifts and offices, always remember, that all these demonstrations of the peculiar presence, light, and power of the Holy Ghost, and of the Father and Son along with him, are not granted to those who receive them for their own private advantage or honour, but for the instruction, edification, and confirmation of the whole church or mystical body of Christ. 8. For this common end the same Holy Spirit endows one with a clear understanding of the doctrines of the gospel, and skill duly to preach and apply them to his hearers, that they may know and believe them to their own salvation: he endows another with a deep insight into the types and predictions of the Old Testament, and an ability to explain them to others, and show how they are fulfilled in Christ, and what relates to him. 9. To another he freely grants a most assured persuasion of the truths of the gospel, an undaunted boldness in preaching them, and an unshaken dependence on Christ for that assistance which is necessary in any dangerous or difficult service. To another, for the confirmation of the gospel, he grants a power of healing all manner of bodily distempers in an instant, without the use of ordinary means. 10. To another he gives a power of inflicting plagues on notorious offenders, or of raising the dead, or of conferring miraculous powers on others. To another he grants an ability to foretell future events, which, when fulfilled, tend to the confirmation of the gospel. To another he gives an ability to discern whether other men be actuated by the Spirit of God, or by the devil; and whether their tempers, designs, and qualifications, render them fit for being employed in any public affairs of the church. To another he gives an ability to speak whatever foreign languages are necessary for the propagation of the gospel. And, in fine, to another he gives an ability to interpret, with propriety and exactness, whatever is said in an unknown tongue, to such as do not understand it. 11. But, whatever be the diversity of the gifts in their kind or degree, or of the persons to whom they are granted, or of the noble purposes for which they are designed, they are all conferred by the same Spirit of God, who, for the general benefit of the church, bestows his gifts upon particular persons, in whatever form or degree, or with whatever success, he pleases. 12. For as our head, eyes, ears, hands, feet, and other parts of our outward man, do all concur to form one body, actuated by one soul; so, in the church of Christ, all the members unnumbered, in their inexpressibly diversified stations and conditions, do, in union with Jesus Christ their Head, form one complete mystical body, or catholic church. 13. For without any regard to our being Jews or Gentiles, slaves or freemen, or any other condition of outward life, we are all, by these gifts, and by our participation of baptism and the Lord's supper, and by the renovation which we have experienced, and the spiritual nourishment we receive, divinely connected into one Christian church, and entitled to all the blessings and privileges thereof. 14. And as in the natural body, so in the spiritual body of Christ, many members, some of superior, and others of inferior, excellence and use, do all necessarily conduce to the perfection and beauty of the whole; 15, 16. How absurd were it to pretend that any particular member is not a part of our body, because it is not some other more excellent and useful member! And no less absurd were it, to pretend that those members of the church, whose gifts and graces are of an inferior degree, are of no necessity or advantage to the whole church of Christ, or the advancement of his glory. 17. If all our bodily members were fitted for one use, we must want all the senses but one; and if all the members of the church had but one sort of gifts and graces, the beauty, pleasure, and advantage of its rich variety would be lost, to the great detriment, or rather ruin, of the whole. 18. But as in the natural body, so also in the church, God has placed and connected every member to the best advantage, and furnished it with proper powers, which must be exercised for the common benefit of the whole. 19—22. Nay, there could not be either a human or a spiritual body, unless there was a variety of members fitted for different purposes, and wisely connected together, so that the members which have superior excellence or usefulness as necessarily depend on the inferior ones, as they on them.—Yea, the very weakest members of our body, such as the organs for digesting our food, or circulating our blood and animal spirits, are more necessary to the life and vigour of our body than some of the strongest; and so weak Christians are often more useful than some apparently stronger. 23—25. And as we bestow more pains to conceal and finely cover some uncomely parts of our body; so, in this imperfect state, the less graceful members of the church ought to have their infirmities covered with a mantle of love:—for as our face, hands, and other comely parts of our body, need not to be adorned or concealed, but only those which are less graceful; so in the church, while the more eminent ministers and Christians easily approve themselves to the consciences of all around, the Lord requires that others, who are weaker, but sincere and faithful, should have their infirmities tenderly concealed and borne with, and that they should be assisted and encouraged in everything good.—26. God has thus adjusted the excellency, usefulness, strength, or honour of the different members of the body, natural or spiritual, that there might be no discord, alienation, or disrespect among fellow-members, but all solicitously care for one another's welfare;—and that the union and mutual sympathy might be such, that the griefs, pleasures, honours or dishonours, of every particular member might affect the whole. 27. Now to apply all this to our present purpose:—ye, considered in your church state, are a mystical body, of which Christ is the Head, and connected in holy fellowship, not only with your fellow Christians at Corinth, but with all those who anywhere profess their union and communion with Jesus Christ; and therefore ought, in your several stations, to employ all your offices, gifts, and graces, for the good of the whole, and to sympathize with one another in trouble, and rejoice in the prosperity of others, as if it were your own. 28. And, for the edification of the church, God has appointed in her officers of many diversified forms; such as apostles, who receive their commission immediately from Christ, are infallibly furnished with wisdom and knowledge, are founders of churches, and have authority over the whole visible church; 2*dly*, Prophets, who either foretell future events, or explain dark passages of the Old Testament, by the word of knowledge; 3*dly*, Teachers, whether evangelists, who are fixed to no particular church, but are itinerant assistants of the apostles; or fixed pastors, who have particular charges; or preachers, who authoritatively proclaim Christ's messages to men; 4*thly*, Workers of miracles in general; 5*thly*, Miraculous healers of the sick; 6*thly*, Deacons, who assist church rulers in providing for the table of the Lord, the ministers, and the poor; 7*thly*, Ruling elders, who, without preaching, inspect the manners of the people, censure offenders, and govern the affairs of congregations, in sessions, presbyteries, or synods; and, in fine, speakers in foreign languages, or interpreters thereof. 29, 30. To pretend that all the members, or even all the officers of the church ought to be apostles, prophets, preachers, workers of miracles, speakers with tongues, or interpreters, would be as absurd as to pretend that all the members of our human body should be of one sort, or fitted for every use, to render all the rest needless. But God hath so diversified these stations, offices, and qualifications, and yet so connected them, that none may either neglect, despise, or envy another. 31. It is indeed laudable, with humble submission to God's will, to desire earnestly the most eminent gifts, in subordination to Christ and his grace: but it is far better to improve whatever gifts God gives you, be they more or less, with a spirit of love for each other's edification.

Reflections upon Chap. XII.—Great is the stupidity of men if left to their own hearts' lusts. And alarming was the wickedness and wretchedness of the Gentile world when God called them by his gospel and grace. Very necessary is the indwelling operation of the Holy Ghost to procure Christ his due honour and obedience. And manifest is his supreme Godhead, who supplies the whole church with furniture, miraculous or gracious. With great wisdom and sovereignty he bestowed his extraordinary influences for the confirmation and spread of the gospel in the primitive church; and continues his ordinary gifts and graces in the church till the end of the world. And all his gifts are given, not so properly for the receiver, as for the glory of God, in the conversion and edification of others. Marvellously are church members and officers connected into one body under Christ their head. And mutual usefulness, love, and sympathy, ought to spread through the whole. The very meanest member should be esteemed and honoured as dear to Christ and useful to the church. No necessary office or officer is wanting in her: and all ought to remember, that a gracious principle of love to Christ and his people is more excellent than any gifts whatever.

Chap. XIII.—Ver. 1. Such is the transcendent excellency and necessity of that true Christian love, which, from regard to Christ, and in obedience to his commands, earnestly seeks the good of others, that though I, or any other, could, by the special gift of the Holy Ghost, speak all the languages of mankind with the eloquence of angels, we should be as a mere empty noise or useless show if we were destitute of this. 2. Had we the gift of prophecy, qualifying us to foretell all future events, or explain and apply all the predictions of the Old Testament; or had we the clearest insight into the sublime mysteries of the gospel or revelation, and the greatest compass of human knowledge that ever a mere creature attained; and had we the strongest faith of miracles, that we could remove mountains at pleasure; yet, without this true christian love to God, and to men for his sake, we could not exercise these gifts for his glory and their good; nay, could have no real grace, no true Christianity. 3. And though we were so liberal as to dispose of all that we have in the world for the relief of the poor, and showed so much zeal, fortitude, and self-denial, as to suffer the most cruel martyrdom for the truths of Christ, yet if we had not sincere love to him, and his members, interests, and honours, it would be of no advantage to our spiritual or eternal happiness, but merely procure a transient and empty character among men.—4. This true Christian love of which I speak, is a most amiable, generous, and operative grace; it endures injuries, affronts, and provocations, with great patience and long-suffering; it is always courteous, affable, and beneficent; ready on every account to do good; it never grudges nor murmurs at the prosperity, riches, honours, gifts, or graces, of others: it never behaves with insolence, contempt, or scorn, towards persons of inferior rank or attainments; nor acts rashly or perversely to the hurt of others; nor does it fill a man with proud conceit of his own person, gifts, graces, or worldly privileges: 5. It never disposes men to act anything indecent, base, vile, or unsuitable to their station, age, calling, or Christian profession: it never aims at, nor pursues any private personal advantage, to the hurt of others, nor inordinately seeks after riches, honours, or pleasures, at the expense of others: it is not angry without cause, nor easily provoked with the greatest injuries, nor disposed to any unchristian resentment: it is never ready to suspect evil of others, or to put the worst construction upon their conduct; much less does it seek to find fault, to aggravate what is really amiss, or to devise mischief of any kind; 6. It takes no pleasure in falsehood or unrighteousness, either in ourselves or others, but grieves at our and their sins and failures, and rejoices in their just and regular deportment, and in our own sincere and faithful behaviour towards God or men; and delights to see the truth of the gospel, and real, vital, and practical religion flourish in ourselves or others. 7. It covers the faults of others, as far as can be done without sin; bears their infirmities, and suffers many injuries, rather than requite them. It is inclined to believe good of every one, till it have convincing evidence to the contrary; and even where things look suspicious, it hopes the best as long as it can, and that, by the grace of God, what is wrong may be afterwards amended; and it continues steadfast, patient, and Christianly brave, under all the hardships and ill usage it meets with. 8. This super-excellent grace of love to God, to Christ, and to his people, is never utterly lost out of the heart, and is of perpetual use in every circumstance of life in this world: and in the other it will be perfected, and shine forth in all its glory: whereas the gifts of foretelling future events, speaking with divers tongues, or of immediate inspiration in the mysteries of the gospel for the instruction of others, are only useful for a little while in the church on earth, and will be of no use at all in the eternal state. 9, 10. The apostle, therefore, intimates, that spiritual objects are now seen, as natural objects through a dim or dingy glass, but that they soon will be seen as distinctly as those who see each other "face to face."—Lord hasten the time of this blessed vision!—Ed.

the best and wisest of us have here but a very imperfect knowledge of the divine mysteries or future events represented to us in the word of God: but when we arrive at the heavenly state of perfection, for which we are looking, hoping, and longing, all the defects which attend our own knowledge, or communication of it to others, will be removed, and we shall have as plain and extensive views of things present and future as the most perfect happiness of the most exalted creatures can require. 11. For as, when we grow up to manhood, we put away our childish, weak, confused, crude, and mistaken notions, and our silly and trifling manner of speaking of things; so, when we arrive at the state of perfect men in Christ, we shall correct multitudes of our present mistakes, and shall have inexpressibly more just and clear apprehensions of divine things than in our present state of childhood on earth. 12. For in this mortal state of imperfection, we obtain no more, through the word and ordinances of God, than an obscure, confused, and perplexing view of the mysteries of his nature, perfections, purposes, and works of creation, providence, and redemption; but, in the state of glory above, we shall know these matters in the most immediate, clear, distinct, perfect, and satisfying manner;—like to that in which we are now known by our most familiar friends, or shall be known by God, angels, and glorified saints. 13. Not only is this Christian love preferable to every spiritual gift, but even to every saving grace; for in this present life, faith, hope, and love, constantly reside in us, and ought to be exercised by us, as all absolutely necessary in our salvation; but love is the most excellent, as it relates not only to God and ourselves, but also to our neighbours: it is the evidence of true faith and hope: it is our brightest conformity to God, who is love: and when faith and hope shall, as it were, give place to immediate vision, and full enjoyment, love to God, to Christ, to saints, and holy angels, will for ever flame with the most disinterested and delightful ardour, as a great part of our happiness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIII.—Men may make splendid and pompous appearances in the church, and yet be destitute of real principles of grace. No gifts, however miraculous; no liberality, however extensive; no sufferings for the cause of Christ can avail, unless they be connected with a principle of saving faith in Christ, and love to him and to his people. Marvellous is the excellency and usefulness of true evangelical love. What benevolence, meekness, patience, humility, forbearance, candour, willingness to believe and hope the best; what disinterested sympathy and generosity; what tender and friendly care it produces! It is much more durable than all spiritual gifts, and, in some sense, than its sister graces of faith and hope, which are so useful in this world. And thrice happy will it be when saints arrive at a perfect knowledge of God; and when love, for the promoting of which faith and hope were but means, shall eternally flame in all our breasts to JEHOVAH, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as our ALL and in ALL, and towards our fellow-sharers in happiness on his account.

CHAP. XIV.—Ver. 1. Let me therefore earnestly entreat and charge you to cultivate, improve, and exercise this important grace of Christian love; and in subordination to it, be zealously concerned to abound in spiritual gifts, provided it be with a view to glorify God and edify your neighbour: and I recommend to you chiefly the gift of prophecy, by which, under the direction of the Holy Ghost, ye may explain and apply the oracles of God, for instructing, edifying, and confirming one another upon the principles and in the exercise of Christian love. 2. For as to the gift of speaking unknown languages, which some of you are so fond of, it is much less useful; for let a man deliver the most important and seasonable truths, under the immediate direction of the Spirit of God, in a language which his hearers understand not, they are nothing instructed or edified by all that he says. 3. But he who explains the Old Testament types or predictions, or publishes articles of gospel truth, in plain language, speaks to his audience in a manner calculated to enlighten their understanding, awaken their conscience, warm and comfort their heart, and direct and excite them to the duties of holiness. 4. He who speaks to an audience in the now disused Hebrew, or any other unknown language, or in a style above their capacity, may express what tends to his own spiritual edification; but he who explains the Scripture, and makes known the will of God relative to the salvation of men, not only profits his own soul, but becomes instrumental in the conversion of new members to the church, or in promoting the knowledge, faith, love, and holy obedience of those formerly converted. 5, 6. I could heartily wish that ye could all speak foreign languages, but much rather that ye were skilful in explaining and applying the doctrines of divine revelation; for it is of far greater use and importance plainly to explain the mysteries and predictions of God, than to discourse of his most wonderful works in a language which the hearers cannot understand. 7—9. For (to illustrate the point by similitudes) as a pipe or harp cannot excite the different passions, or direct different motions in mourning or mirth, unless the sound be made distinct and answerable to them; nor can a trumpet direct the march, the charge, or retreat, of soldiers in war, unless it be distinctly and answerably sounded; so your words are all lost, unless you speak in intelligible language; and ye might as well speak to the wind, if your hearers do not understand you. 10. There are perhaps as many different languages in the world as there are different nations in it, and all of them useful to convey ideas to such as understand them, but to none else. 11. If I then should meet with one who talks in a language which I do not understand, and who understands nothing of mine, neither of us could instruct, or be instructed by, or even sensibly answer one another, any more than if we were wild savages of different nations: and this will be the very case with you, if ye deliver divine truths to others in an unknown language. 12. Let me then beseech you, who are so zealous to obtain spiritual gifts, to be less careful in speaking strange languages, and more earnest for such gifts as may increase the number, and promote the knowledge, faith, and holiness of your fellow-Christians. 13. And if any be still fond of a miraculous speaking of foreign languages, let him supplicate God for ability to interpret what he says to his hearers in their mother tongue, that they may be profited by the discourse. 14. For if I, or any other, should pray as the mouth my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.[o]

15 What is it then? [n] I will pray[†] with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.

16 Else, when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say [o] Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, [p] I speak with tongues more than ye all:

19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding,[‡] that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

20 Brethren, be [q] not children[§] in understanding: howbeit in malice [r] be ye children, but in understanding be [s] men.

21 In the law it is written, [t] With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say [u] that ye are mad?

24 [x] But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that [y] God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, [z] every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. [a] Let all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 [b] Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge.[*]

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace.

31 [c] For ye may all prophesy[†] one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 [d] And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.[‡]

of a company who understand not my words, my own heart might be engaged in the prayer, but the impression of what I say, on my own mind, could be of no use to them who know not the meaning of my words. 15. It is therefore manifestly proper, that, in leading the prayers and praises of a congregation, not only I myself should understand and be affected with what I utter, but that my language should be plain to all who profess to join with me, that they may with understanding heartily join in the work. 16. Or else, if any of you, under the immediate direction of the Holy Ghost, offer thanksgiving and praises to God in a public assembly, in an unknown language, he who understands nothing but his mother tongue, and comes to learn by your administrations, can never give his assent or consent, either in heart or voice, because he knows not the meaning of your words. 17. You may have performed this part of worship in a very judicious, spiritual, heavenly, and affectionate manner; but the hearers, who do not understand what you say, cannot be profited by it. 18, 19. For my part, I thank God that, in the extensive course of my ministry, I have been enabled to speak, as occasions required, in many more foreign languages than any, if not all of your teachers. But instead of priding myself in this talent, I had rather utter a few plain words, calculated for the instruction and edification of my hearers, than make ten thousand discourses in a language which they do not understand, and so cannot be profited by them. 20. Never, my brethren, show yourselves weak and childish in affecting novelties or pompous appearances; as, for instance, the speaking of unknown languages. Be like children in the meekness, harmlessness, and humility of your disposition and behaviour; and in freedom from all malicious, proud, and envious designs; but in knowledge, judgment, and discretion, especially in your apprehensions and management of spiritual things, it becomes you to think and act like men grown up to ripeness of understanding. 21, 22. To make you less fond of speaking in unknown languages, and that you may use them only in a proper manner, remember that God threatened to punish his incorrigible people by nations whose language they understood not, as well as to enable his ministers to speak in divers languages, without any happy effects.—The being spoken to in unknown languages is therefore but an occasional mean of punishing obstinate unbelievers, or a miraculous mean of converting heathens to Christ at first, by manifesting the power of God;—whereas the explaining and applying the doctrines of the Old Testament is, by the ordination and blessing of God, a standing mean of gaining sinners to Jesus Christ, and of building up saints in holiness and comfort through faith unto complete salvation. 23. If then, while ye or other churches are met for worshipping God in your public assemblies, and every one that speaks in preaching, prayer, or praise, is using an uninterpreted language, which the audience does not understand, some heathen, who knows not a word of what is said, should come in, would your use of unknown languages be a likely mean of convincing or converting him; or would he not rather contemn you, as a number of frantic enthusiasts, or men possessed by the devil, rather than conducted and influenced by the infinitely wise Spirit of God? 24, 25. But if, where every minister preaches or prays plainly in a well-known language, a heathen or ignorant person come in, he has, in every discourse, a fair opportunity to be, by the Spirit of God, effectually convinced of his sin and misery, and made to condemn himself as guilty. Thus his state and secret dispositions, thoughts, and actions, being exactly laid open to his conscience by the preachers, struck with a reverential awe of God's majesty, he will be constrained, with brokenness of heart, to a deep humiliation for sin and supplication for mercy, and will report to his friends that God attends his ordinances among you with extraordinary power and influence. 26. How absurd is it, brethren, that, in your meetings for public worship, one of your public teachers should raise a psalm, another tender an instruction or exhortation, another speak in an unknown language, another deliver some immediate inspiration, another interpret what is delivered in an unknown tongue, perhaps all at once, or as if each were fond first to display his talents! Let these gifts of the Spirit, and everything else, be used in such an orderly and seasonable manner as to prevent all confusion, and as may be most effectual for enlarging the church of Christ, and promoting the spiritual growth of every member of it. 27. And if, after all that I have said, some of you will use foreign languages, let it be at suitable times, and in a regular manner, so that there may not ordinarily be above two or three speakers at a time, and they one after another; and let one faithfully interpret what they have said in the vulgar tongue, that all may receive instruction. 28. And if no one present can interpret it, let none use his gift of tongues, as the assembly cannot be profited by it; and let him be contented to use it in his own secret devotions.—29. And with respect to the gift of prophecy, let but two or three of them who have it speak at one of your public meetings, and that in an orderly manner, without interrupting or interfering with one another: and as many false prophets are gone abroad in the church, let everything uttered by one prophet be carefully examined and tried whether it agree with the tenor of Old Testament predictions and New Testament revelations. 30. And if any important intimation of God's mind be made to another prophet, who is in the assembly as a hearer and judge, let the speaker, upon a proper signal given, stop, and give him an opportunity to declare it. 31. In this orderly manner all your teachers may have successive opportunities to declare the truths of Christ, for the instruction and comfort of one another and of the whole church. 32. And it is certain that no inspiration of the Holy Ghost can render men frantic or disorderly, as diabolic influences render the heathen priests: but it leaves every one to govern himself becomingly, either as to the matter, manner, or time of his discourse. 33. For that infinitely wise God, who inspires them, can never be an author, abettor, or encourager of any disorderly

* This prohibition seems to contradict chap. 11. 5, 13, where the prophesying of women appears to be taken for granted. The simplest solution of the difficulty seems to be—that the speaking here prohibited is not praying or prophesying, but asking questions and entering into discussions in the church (see ver. 35,)—a custom that prevailed in the Jewish synagogues between the Rabbis and the people; which had been thence transfused into the Christian church, and which, under the proper management of humility and love, seems still well calculated for the public edification.—Ed.

5 [d] And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: †

6 After that, he was seen * of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.

7 After that, he was seen of James; [e] then of all the apostles.

8 [g] And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.‡

9 For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.

10 But [h] by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.

Acts 1. 26. & 2. 14). Grotius and others suppose, that "the twelve" having been the original name of the apostles taken collectively, they still retained it when their number was reduced to eleven, as a centurion, ruler of a hundred, would still retain his title were his company reduced to a few, or altogether cut off: and this mode of speech is certainly common in history. But this supposition is not necessary; for Matthias, who was subsequently numbered with "the eleven," may have been actually present with them when our Lord appeared. This view is rendered highly probable, if not certain, by Luke 24. 9, 33.—Ed.

unseasonable, and tumultuous conduct in his worship; but, as the God of peace and order in all the assemblies of sanctified believers, he is the commander, approver, promoter, and author of everything regular, pacific, and edifying. 34. And as for your women, let them never, except in extraordinary cases of inspiration, speak at all in your public assemblies, but learn, according to the law of God, to discover the utmost humility, and modest subjection to the other sex. 35. And if they want more thorough information about anything said in public, let them ask their husbands at home concerning it; for it is unbecoming the modesty of women, except when inspired, to presume to discourse or debate in public religious assemblies. 36. Why should ye indulge practices different from those of all other Christian churches? Ye cannot pretend that ye are the only, or even the first planted church, from which the truths of the gospel, and an original pattern of conduct, were conveyed to others. Are ye not then equally tied down to the institutions of Christ, the common King and Head both of you and them? 37. If any of your high pretenders to an uncommon share of spiritual gifts think himself authorized to give laws to your church, let him know that the directions which I have given you were communicated to me by the Spirit of Christ, and are founded in the general rules which he laid down in his personal ministry. 38. And if any one will perversely persist in his ignorance, contempt of, or opposition to, these rules, let him do it at his peril before God, whose mind I have declared. 39. On the whole, I advise you to be most desirous of the gift of prophecy, which is most useful for general edification: and, nevertheless, I do not forbid nor discourage the regular use of the gift of tongues. 40. But, in everything, carefully avoid all appearance of childishness, frenzy, or other indecency, in the public worship of God; and labour to perform it in a manner exactly answerable to the commands now given you from Christ, which will most glorify God, honour his doctrines, ordinances, and ways, and edify the souls of his people.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIV.—What diversified gifts God bestowed upon his Christian Church in her infant state! And those gifts which are most useful and edifying ought to be chiefly prized and sought after. What is most showy is ordinarily least useful. And every gift ought to be improved for the good purposes for which God bestows it upon men. It is absurd to preach or pray in a language which the assembly do not generally understand; and both absurd and criminal to preach in an uncertain general manner, that can neither distinctly inform the mind, nor closely impress the conscience. Those discourses are best which are calculated to penetrate into the hearts and consciences of hearers, the most ignorant not excepted.—The envy, malice, and self-conceit of members, especially of preachers, are highly injurious to any church. But it is very becoming and happy when all are humbly inclined to learn, careful to keep their own station, and zealous in their exact adherence to all the ordinances of God, without any mixture of human inventions.

CHAP. XV.—Ver. 1, 2. Moreover, with respect to the resurrection of the dead and the certainty of a future state, I will again set before you the great fundamental truth—which I preached unto you, and which ye were convinced of, and embraced as the foundation of all your hope towards God; and in the profession and faith of which the generality of you still persevere, notwithstanding all the pains of false teachers to corrupt you; and by means of which, all of you who truly believe were brought into a state of salvation, having already the beginning and earnest, and a full security for the complete perfection of it:—3, 4. This great and fundamental truth, which I received from God by immediate inspiration, and first and chiefly delivered unto you in my preaching as a most sacred and valuable trust, to be inviolably kept by you, was, that Jesus Christ, the Son of God in our nature, according to the manifold types and predictions of the Old Testament, died in our stead, to make atonement for our sins and reconcile us to God, and was buried by Joseph of Arimathea and other friends; and by his own, his Father's, and the Spirit's almighty influence, rose from the dead on the third day. 5—7. And that, to manifest the absolute certainty of his resurrection, and instruct his apostles concerning the form of his New Testament church, he continued on earth forty days, and appeared, on several occasions, to the most unexceptionable witnesses, who could neither be deceived themselves, nor were under any temptation to deceive others.—Thus, on the very day of his resurrection, he appeared to Peter, and at night to ten of his disciples, and that day seven-night to eleven of them. Some time after he appeared to five hundred of his followers in Galilee; most of whom still live to attest it, though some of them have, by death, fallen asleep till the general resurrection. After that he was seen of James the son of Alpheus, his kinsman according to the flesh, and then of all the apostles, if not also the seventy disciples, just before his ascension to heaven.—8. And after all these repeated and undoubted appearances to his friends, several years after his ascension, he appeared to me in an extraordinary manner, that, as an eye-witness, I might be able to attest his resurrection; though, alas, I was not among his followers during his life, but was converted and called to the apostleship out of the ordinary time, and by an uncommon extension of free grace! 9. For however remarkably Jesus Christ has enriched me with qualifications for, and success in, the apostolical work, I was utterly unworthy of that office, or even of the smallest mercy, because, during my ignorance of Christ, instigated by a furious zeal for the Jewish religion, I outrageously persecuted the Church, which God had formed for a peculiar people to himself, and which he owns and blesses, and in and by which he will be for ever glorified.—10. But by the free, sovereign, infinite, and transcendent favour of God, I, a blasphemer, persecutor, and injurious person, am made a believer and apostle, qualified with every proper endowment; and that grace and apostleship, freely bestowed upon me, was not unprofitable: for under a deep sense of his marvellous grace, I have unweariedly, and amidst difficulties and sufferings unnumbered, exerted myself and all my gifts and graces, for his honour and the good of souls, more than any other apostle did. I mention this to confute my reproachers; but do not attribute my diligence and success to any excellency or care of mine, but wholly to the determining and assisting grace of God:—11. But whether ye ascribe your conversion and edification to me, or to 12 Now, if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you [k] that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13 But [l] if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen:

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

15 Yea, and we are found [m] false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

16 [n] For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised;

17 And [o] if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins.*

18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

19 [p] If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

20 [q] But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.

21 [r] For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

22 [s] For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.†

23 But [t] every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits,* afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom† to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power.

25 [u] For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

27 For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

28 And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.‡

29 Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

30 And why stand we in jeopardy every hour?

any other instrument, the doctrine of the death and resurrection of Christ is what we all preached, and ye always professed to believe and depend on, as the sole ground of your eternal salvation. 12. Now, if the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to immortal life and glory, as the Head of the church, has been so uniformly preached, with undoubted evidence of its certainty, how absurd is it for any, who bear the Christian name, to pretend that there neither is, nor can be, a real and proper resurrection of men's dead bodies to eternal happiness or misery! 13. For if there be no resurrection of the dead, then, contrary to the most abundant and incontestible evidence, Christ himself cannot have risen from the dead, as the earnest, pledge, pattern, cause, and first-fruits of them that sleep in him. 14. And if Christ be not risen as the public Head of his people, the whole gospel of salvation, which we apostles and others preach, is a mere fable, unworthy of regard, and your faith in it and in him is a mere empty conceit. 15, 16. Nay, if Christ be not risen from the dead, we, who have testified his resurrection at the hazard of all that was dear to us in the world, and with the greatest simplicity and integrity, must be the most impious and abandoned miscreants, who have forged lies for God, and have wilfully published a damnable falsehood in his name, as if he had raised up Christ from the dead;—when it is certain he neither did nor could raise him up, as a public person and Head of his church, if his members are not to rise after him, and in virtue of his resurrection. 17. And if it were true that Christ still continues in the state of the dead, your faith in him is quite useless, and it is absolutely foolish to expect any benefit from his crucifixion. For unless he has not only satisfied justice for your sins, but risen again for your justification, ye must remain for ever under the guilt and power of your sins, condemned and exposed to the eternal wrath of God. 18. And in this case, they who have died in the closest union to, and fellowship with him, and in the most assured hopes of eternal life through him, or who have even suffered death for his sake, must for ever perish without remedy, disappointed of all their hopes in and from him. 19. And if, after all our faith in Christ, and dependence on him, and all the self-denial, mortifications, and sufferings, to which we have submitted for his sake, we have no prospect of happiness from him beyond this present life, we Christians, and especially ministers, must be the most silly, deluded, and wretched creatures on earth, who, for nothing real in time or eternity, part with all the conveniences, delights, and advantages of this world, and submit to calamities unnumbered. 20. But we have sufficiently proved that Christ, in consequence of his full satisfaction for our sins, is actually raised from the dead, and become not only the first, in order of time, who rose to an immortal life; and the chief, in respect of dignity, who, as Head of his church, rose by his own power; but also the earnest, pledge, and security of the resurrection of all his people. 21. And since, by the first Adam's eating the forbidden fruit, death and ruin were brought upon all mankind; therefore God, in infinite wisdom and mercy, has appointed the happy resurrection of elect men to eternal life, to be brought in by Jesus Christ, the second Adam or new-covenant Head. 22. For, as in the first Adam, as their common parent and covenant head, all men by sin are subjected to death, temporal as well as spiritual and eternal; so in Christ, as their new-covenant Head, who fulfilled the law for them, and communicates all vital influence to them, all elect men are, by the merit of his death, and power of his resurrection, quickened to life eternal as well as spiritual, that, in their bodies as well as their souls, they may for ever reign with him in glory—and as all who were in Adam die, so all who are in Christ shall be made alive.*——23. But indeed he, and each of his members, must partake of this life, in their proper rank, time, and order; he, as the first-fruits, who is already risen as their public Head, Representative, and Pattern, to ensure their resurrection, and sanctify them to the service of God; and then they whom the Father has given to him, and whom he has purchased by his blood, conquered by his power, taken possession of by his Spirit, united to his person, and furnished with his grace,—at his second coming to judge the world. 24. Then shall come the end of this world, and of all the changes, temptations, sins, and snares, under which believers now groan, and of all the instituted means of grace, and of those ministerial assistances of angels and men, which they now need. And Christ, having finished the whole work of his administration of providence and grace in its present form, and having abolished every form of civil and ecclesiastical government, and all the usurped powers of men and devils, shall solemnly deliver up his commission, trust, and charge, to God the Father, from whom he received it,—and present all his members together, as one glorious church. 25. For, according to the purpose, covenant, and promise of the Father, Christ, as Man and Mediator, must sit at his right hand, and reign over all persons, causes, and things, till all his enemies, temporal and spiritual, be placed in absolute and actual subjection to him, as captives of war, trampled under his feet. 26. And the last enemy, which, for the sake of his people, he shall utterly destroy and abolish, is death, which now prevents the complete happiness of their persons, and must be destroyed by the raising of their dead bodies to immortal life. 27. For Christ must reign till all, except JEHOVAH himself, who delegated to him his mediatorial power and authority, be manifestly subdued by, or subjected to, him. 28. And when his mediatorial methods of government have had their full effect, in the conversion, sanctification, and complete glorification, of his mystical body, and the conquest of all his incorrigible enemies, he shall lay aside the present forms of administration as the appointed mediatorial governor of the world, and shall surrender up himself as such, and his whole church, to his Father, to be for ever honoured and blessed, each in their due order, with the full and immediate enjoyment of the Godhead, as their ALL and IN ALL. 29. Moreover, to return to the point in debate, if there be no resurrection of the dead, to what purpose are professed believers baptized in the name of Christ, in hopes of a happy resurrection through him? Or why are they induced to it by what they have seen and heard of martyrs dying triumphantly for Christ in the assured hopes of such a resurrection? Or why are the children of the deceased baptized on their parents' account, in order to fill up their room in the church? 30. And if the dead rise not, how weak and absurd is it for us Christians and ministers continually to expose ourselves to the greatest losses, hazards, and troubles, for his sake, in hopes of an eternal life and reigning with him in glory? 31. I solemnly protest, that, as really as the blessed Comforter dwells in our hearts, and makes us to rejoice in God through Christ in hopes of eternal life, I am daily exposed to, and stand ready for, sufferings of every form and degree, for Christ's sake. 32. Now to what purpose have I struggled with men, outrageous, malicious, furious, and unreasonable as beasts, or been exposed to, or am ready to encounter, devouring wild beasts for the sake of Christ and his cause, if there be no future blessedness, no resurrection to eternal life? I had much better act the epicurean, indulging myself in sensual pleasures, as I know not how soon death may deprive me of every opportunity.—33. But let no seducer thus decoy you from the faith of the first principles of all Christianity, nay, and of morality.—Frequent and familiar conversation with persons of an atheistical and luxurious turn, will insensibly and deeply corrupt your minds and morals, and destroy every principle of religion and virtue. 34. Be therefore sober, and rouse up yourselves to serious and just consideration, and to a righteous and holy life; and beware of being seduced into delusive errors and sinful practices: for, by their denying the resurrection of the dead, I perceive that some of your teachers are ignorant of God and his perfections manifested in the gospel. And this hint ought to make them ashamed of themselves, and you ashamed of countenancing them. 35. Perhaps, indeed, some of your self-conceited doctors will ask me how men's dead bodies can be raised to life, after rotting into dust, and being scattered and intermingled with bodies unnumbered? Or in what form, power, or capacity, they will be raised, answerable to the happiness of the glorified souls reunited to them? 36. How foolish and absurd is it to set up your weak notions in opposition to the power and wisdom of God!—Even in common things, do we not see that seeds cast into the earth spring not up till they first rot and die under the clods? 37, 38. And do we not see, that however many forms God causes the bare grains of wheat, &c., to assume in their growth and ripening, yet they at last produce a body answerable to the seed? 39—41. And is it not evident, that out of the same original dust God forms animals, whose flesh and qualities are extremely different; and that of the same matter he hath formed bodies, some grosser, others more refined; and that the properties and glories of the heavenly luminaries, though all sprung from one original, are extremely different? 42, 43. In like manner the wisdom and power of God operate in the resurrection of the dead, particularly of the saints, rendering their bodies fit companions for their souls in the glorified state. In this world their bodies are frail, mortal, and, by death, subjected to putrefaction; but they shall be raised free from all corruptibility, dissolution, or decay, and rendered immortal, never more to die. In this world they are mean, contemptible, liable to deformity and defilement, and feeble and weak, liable to sickness, pain, weariness, fainting, and death, incapable of defending themselves from surrounding evils;—and being laid in the grave, become loathsome carcasses, an easy prey to the weakest worm; but they shall be raised, beautiful, glorious, and shining as the sun or stars; and with such vigour, health, and strength, as will enable them to keep pace with their glorified souls in every operation. 44. In this world they must be maintained by food, sleep, and air, as the bodies of brutes, and in the grave they are quite destitute of sensation: but in their resurrection, the Holy Ghost dwelling in them shall so refine them, as to make them need no animal refreshments, and render them inexpressibly light and active. 45. Thus the diversified conditions of our bodies will answer to our two different covenant heads; the first Adam being made a living soul, which could communicate sensitive life to his own body, or that of his seed; whereas Christ, the second Adam, is a quickening Spirit, who conveys spiritual and immortal life to the bodies of his saints at the resurrection, by his Spirit dwelling in them. 46. Nay, these conditions of our bodies will answer to the very order in which Adam and Christ stand connected with us; that which is natural, and less excellent, according to God's ordinary method, preceding that which is spiritual and inexpressibly excellent and glorious. 47. For the first Adam was formed out of the dust, and was of an earthly constitution; whereas the second Adam is the eternal Son of God, who, descending from heaven, assumed our nature into a union with his person, and who will, at the last day, descend from heaven to raise the dead bodies of his saints, and receive them to himself. 48. They who descend from the earthly Adam derive from him an earthly, animal, and mortal body, such as he had in his fallen state: and they who are spiritually begotten by Christ, born from above, and formed with heavenly dispositions for heavenly enjoyments, shall derive a spiritual, heavenly, and immortal body from him, such as he has in his exalted state. 49. And as we believers bear the debased image of our first father and covenant head, in the earthly, animal, sickly, and mortal state of our bodies, and in their putrefaction and corruption in the grave; so, by virtue derived from Christ our new-covenant Head, our bodies, at the resurrection, shall be conformed to his immortality, strength, glory, and honour, that we may for ever bear his image in our whole person. 50. And indeed this great alteration of our bodies is absolutely necessary, as, in their present gross, animal, sluggish, and corruptible nature, they could neither share the visions and pleasures, nor join in the services of the heavenly state, where God is ALL and IN ALL. 51—54. And, to inform you of a thing never before plainly revealed, the bodies of all believers shall not die or rest in graves, but some shall undergo a surprising and glorious change, equivalent to dying and rising again. For in that moment in which Christ shall awfully and efficaciously call up the dead bodies from their graves, the living ones shall be changed from corruptible and mortal, to incorruptible and immortal, answerably to the everlasting glories designed for them.—And when our bodies shall be thus glorified and immortalized, death, that formidable tyrant, who had so long conquered and reigned over the believers' outward man, shall, with respect to every one of them, be finally conquered and totally abolished. 55. In the view of these things, all real Christians may now, by faith, triumph over death and the grave, as things which can do them no real hurt, and which shall be obliged, by Jesus Christ, to restore them back with inexpressible advantage, 56. It is the unremoved guilt, power, and pollution of sin, which renders death either hurtful or painful; and it is the holy law of God, which, by condemning to death, spiritual as well as temporal and eternal, in a mysterious but awful manner, founds and fortifies the reigning, enslaving, and destructive power of sin. 57. But thanks be to God, who, through the merits and power of Jesus Christ as our new covenant Head, gives us deliverance from the guilt, power, and pollution of sin, and a complete victory over death and the grave, and every other opposer.—58. In the views then of all that has been taught you concerning the death and resurrection of Christ, and our glorious resurrection to eternal life through him, let me beseech you, as beloved of God, and dear to my soul, to excite, animate, and encourage yourselves to a firm and constant steadfastness in the faith, hope, and holy profession of the gospel, and to be invariably increasing and abounding in every good work towards God or men,—fully persuaded that your almighty, gracious, and faithful God, will, through Christ, assist you in your obedience and suffering, and freely reward you with endless life and glory.

54 So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

Reflections upon Chap. XV.—How fully confirmed, and infinitely important and delightful are the doctrines of Jesus' atoning death and glorious resurrection, and of our resurrection to eternal life through him! The Scriptures of the Old Testament, and the witnesses of the New, join to attest them.—God's grace can make a most wonderful change on the most perverse transgressors. And many sorrows do they escape who are the earliest partakers of it. All true ministers harmoniously determine to know and preach nothing but Christ, and him crucified and glorified. And wonderful are the methods of God's grace; that, as by a sinning man came death, so by a dying and rising God-man came the happy resurrection of the dead! It is highly absurd to deny these fundamental principles of our Christian religion; for if these be false, all apostles are downright deceivers; Jesus' death, and all our faith and hope, and all our services and sufferings, are in vain; yea, all morality and religion are an unavailing farce. But certain is his glory and high exaltation; and no less certain our resurrection and future glory together with him. Wonderful are the works of God in creation and providence, and much more in redemption, of which the former are but emblems. And marvellous is the change that shall be made on our bodies to qualify them for their heavenly glories. With what joy may we even now, through Christ, triumph over death and the grave! And the believing views of our future, our eternal glories, should animate our hearts to unremitting activity in Christ's service.

Chap. XVI.—Ver. 1. As to the charitable collection desired of you for the Christians in Judea, who, through persecution, and the public calamities of their nation, have been reduced to great poverty, I give you the same directions which I gave to the Christian brethren of Galatia, whose ready compliance therewith will, I hope, excite you to benevolence, who are much their superiors in temporal wealth, as well as in spiritual gifts. 2. Upon every first day of the week, when you, as other Christians, assemble for public worship, in commemoration of our Saviour's resurrection, let every one of you, according to his income, or the success of his business, lay by him a certain proportion, and put it into the common stock for the poor, that when I come to visit you, and receive it, everything may be ready. 3. And whomsoever of your brethren ye think most proper, prudent, compassionate, and faithful, I will readily concur at their being appointed to carry it to our brethren in Judea: 4. And if it be thought of any advantage to that benevolent and pious design for me to accompany them, I shall readily grant them all the assistance and encouragement I am capable of. 5. Now, if the Lord will, I am determined to visit you whenever I have finished this tour through Macedonia, which I intend to begin as soon as I can have finished my present work at Ephesus. 6. And I hope that, after I have continued among you a considerable time, for our mutual edification and comfort, some of you will kindly and respectfully accompany me to some other place. 7. For such is my ardent affection towards you, and concern for your welfare, that I cannot think of paying you only a transient visit, but wish and expect, through the sovereign disposal of the Lord, to continue some time to assist you in your spiritual affairs. 8. But I find it needful for me to stay here at Ephesus till I shall have but just enough time to go up to Jerusalem at the feast of Pentecost, which I purpose to attend, that I may make known what I have preached, and with what success, to the multitudes of Jews and proselytes who assemble there on such occasions. 9. For here at Ephesus the Lord has given me a great opportunity of boldly and successfully preaching the gospel; and I am called to make a resolute stand against the subtle and furious enemies of my person and ministrations. 10. Meanwhile, if Timothy, my dearly beloved and faithful fellow-labourer, whom I have sent to you, arrive safe, see that ye receive him and treat him in a friendly, peaceable, and orderly manner, and let him not be discouraged or insulted by any of your factious preachers; for he comes to you upon the same important business, and with the same temper and sincere affection for you, as I wish to come. 11. Let none of you think or behave disrespectfully towards him, or slight what he delivers to you in the name and authority of Jesus Christ, because of his youth or bodily infirmities, but use him kindly: and when he returns to me, which I long for, I expect that you will furnish him for his journey, and some of you attend him for his protection. 12. I entreated our dear and eloquent brother Apollos, whom some of you admire, to come to you with the bearers of this letter, in hopes of his exerting himself to extinguish your party divisions; but being afraid that his presence might rather encourage the party which is zealous for him, or be interpreted as an attempt to ingratiate himself, he absolutely refused to come just now, but intends to see you whenever it may appear more seasonable. 13. And to conclude my directions at this time, I beseech you to keep a watchful eye upon all those that would, either by craft or terror, seduce you from the truth or holiness of the gospel: watch over your own deceitful and inconstant spirits; watch unto prayer, and every other duty; stand fast in the knowledge, faith, love, profession, and practice of the important truths which have been preached unto you, living by faith on them, and appearing zealous in their defence. Notwithstanding all opposition or danger, prudently, boldly, and resolutely cleave to the truths and ways of the Lord, resisting sin, and every temptation thereto, and performing duty like men ripened in judgment, strong in grace, and firmly established in Christ. 14. And see that whatever ye do in the maintenance or practice of the truths of Christ, be done with meekness and love, for promoting the peace, holiness, and edification of others, as well as your own. 15. And I earnestly beg that you will show a particular respect to the family of Stephanas, which were the first converts to Christ in your country, and a pledge and earnest of the great multitudes which have since been converted, and which have all along behaved themselves as the sincere disciples and faithful servants of the Lord Jesus, and have, in an orderly manner, devoted themselves to assist and supply his ministers or poor members. 16. Instead of being carried away by new upstarts, take your direction or pattern in a respectful manner from such as have already signalized themselves in faithfulness to Christ and his church, or in the laborious spread of the gospel. 17, 18. I am extremely glad that ye sent me your letter by such prudent and worthy brethren, who gave me a more clear and comfortable account of your church affairs than your letter did, and who, to your honour, by their Christian behaviour, as well as by their candid and charitable representations, exceedingly quieted and refreshed my spirit. I hope that ye will show to such valuable, faithful, and affectionate brethren the highest regard. 19—21. The Christians here, in Lesser Asia, particularly Aquila and Priscilla, and their pious family, along with me, send you their Christian good wishes of all temporal or spiritual prosperity: and see that ye, in every pure, tender, and affectionate manner, express your regard one to another. 22. Meanwhile remember, that if ye, or any of your new preachers, persist in enmity to the person, offices, grace, doctrine, and commands of our dear Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, or obstinately apostatize from your profession of faith in, and love to him, ye not only deserve to be esteemed as execrable and abominable by the church, and cast out from their fellowship, but shall be monuments of God's distinguished and almighty vengeance, both here and hereafter. 23. But to prevent this, may the free favour of Jesus Christ, our common Lord and Saviour, be extended to, and continually abide with you, in all its abundant manifestations and blessed fruits, for your present establishment and edification in faith, comfort, and holiness, and for your eternal salvation! 24. And notwithstanding my severity in reproving you, which indeed ought rather to be considered as a kindness, my best wishes, and most ardent affection, attend you all in Christ, and for his sake, and on account of your relation to him, and the privileges ye have received from him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—Charitable relief of our poor brethren is a duty of great importance: and ministers ought to encourage and promote it, and see that the liberality of churches, under their care, be duly applied. And in proportion as God succeeds our temporal affairs, we should join in it, and even beforehand provide for it; yea, all ought cordially, and from love to Christ, to vie with one another in it according to their ability. And as a part of worship, collections for the poor should attend our public devotions.—Ministers ought to go or stay wherever Christ in his providence calls them; and to rejoice in great opportunities of preaching the gospel, whatever opposition from adversaries attend them. Devoid of jealousy or envy, highly should they honour one another, and readily receive such as appear faithful and heartily devoted to the service of Christ. Inexpressible need have real Christians to be always watchful and steadfast in the faith, profession, and practice of the gospel. And it is delightful, when in all their conduct they appear closely united in cordial affection one to another, and when the gracious influences of Christ qualify them for every necessary duty. But, alas, dreadful is the vengeance which awaits those who, under the gospel dispensation, continue enemies to our gracious Redeemer! And most terrible to such is his second coming.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

IT is impossible to read the foregoing Epistle without remarking how early self-will and heathenish customs began to deform the Christian ritual, and error to infect the apostolic creed.

The invasion of the ritual may be seen most remarkably in the case of the Lord's Supper (chap. 11. 17); in which case a heathenish custom had expelled the holy ordinance of the Lord, and obliterated the instructions of Paul as to its origin, order, and intention. The Corinthians, like some other Greek cities, had been accustomed, during their heathen state, to celebrate frequent public festivals; to which every family brought their own provisions, and in which the will or taste of individuals was the only check upon indulgence. At these feasts, it would appear, the poorer citizens were originally provided for by the rich. But, as luxury soon begets selfishness, and selfishness soon extinguishes charity, it also appears that while the custom of feasting was continued, the provision for the poor began to be neglected. Accordingly, it is recorded of Socrates, that when, at a public feast at Athens, he saw the rich citizens feasting, and the poor neglected, he distributed among them all the provisions he had brought for himself and his friends, and reproved his fellow-citizens for their inhospitality. The custom of the Corinthians seems to have been exactly similar; and to the same level they appear to have reduced the Lord's supper:—"Every one took before others (not the Lord's, but) his own supper: and one was hungry, another was drunken." To this downward tendency there is no competent restraint beyond a strict adherence to apostolic example and simplicity. The moment human will and national or local customs are permitted, in the smallest degree, to encroach upon and model Christian ordinances, that moment a principle is admitted that, while it pretends merely to accommodate itself to prejudice, and render Christianity more acceptable, must, in the end, overwhelm it in superstitious rites, or heathen principles and practices.

The infection of the apostolic creed may be seen in the fifteenth chapter: whence it appears that the plainest and most palpable of all Christian doctrines, the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the final resurrection of his saints, was cast aside by the authority of a vain philosophy. And yet few things can appear more unlikely than that any doubt should arise concerning this doctrine. Nothing could be more conclusively attested as a fact—nothing could appear more necessary as an evidence of life and immortality—nothing more analogous to the annual resurrections (as they may justly be called) which an observant philosophy must have witnessed through so many departments of nature. Yet some among the Corinthians utterly denied the resurrection of the dead—a heresy the existence of which would be scarcely credible were it not attested upon apostolic authority. Its origin, however, is easily accounted for.—Some of the systems of heathen philosophy had pronounced material substance to be essentially evil, and incapable, by any process, of being rendered good; and relying upon this dogma of philosophy, they rejected the authority of the word of God, which foretold the resurrection of Christ, and the testimony of apostles, who had witnessed it. This fact stands forth as a beacon light to all who study the Scriptures. How near was the Corinthian church to making total shipwreck of the faith! And why? The admission of one single unsupported dogma in opposition to a fact, implies such a surrender of sound judgment, as breaks down the walls of truth; and opens the way for the introduction of any and every error. Christianity lays its foundations in facts, not in dogmas. These facts can never be historically gainsayed or rationally disproved—upon these facts, as precious stones, it builds its temple of doctrine; and rejects "the wood, hay, and stubble," of a fanciful and arbitrary philosophy. Not that philosophy is to be underrated, despised, or rejected. On the contrary, philosophy rightly defined is, in all its departments, the handmaid of Christianity. But philosophy, the love of wisdom, is not the love of one department of knowledge, but of all departments; it does not seek its lights from one source of evidence and truth, but from all sources: above all, it does not set up human dogmas in opposition to divinely attested facts; and, in depths which it cannot fathom, and in heights to which it cannot soar, it thankfully acknowledges the aid of that "wisdom which cometh down from above," which has God for its author, and salvation for its end.—Ed.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[Informed by Titus, chap. ii, vii. of the good effects of his former epistle upon the generality of the Corinthians, Paul, about a year after, wrote them this second letter, probably from Philippi, after his return from Troas in Lesser Asia, and while Timothy was with him; chap. ix. 2; and i. 1; and ii. 12, 13; with Acts xix. 22; and xx. 1—4.——After a preface, he apologizes for delaying his visit, and recommends the restoration of the penitent incestuous person to church fellowship; i, ii:——boldly exhibits his apostolic character, labours, success, sufferings, and encouragements, for the confutation of their false teachers; iii—vi: and shows himself every way superior to those proud calumniators; x—xiii. 4: inculcates practical holiness, evangelical repentance, cheerful collection for the poor, self-examination, and other necessary duties; vii—ix, xiii.

PAUL, [a] an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and [b] Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

2 Grace be to you, and peace, [*] from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 [c] Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, [d] the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4 [e] Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For [f] as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 [g] And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which [†] is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer; or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation.

7 And our hope of you is stedfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant [h] of our trouble which came to us in Asia, [*] that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life:

9 But we had the [†] sentence of death in ourselves, that [‡] we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead:

10 Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us;

11 Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that, for the gift [‡] bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

12 [k] For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1, 2. I Paul, whom Jesus Christ has immediately called to the high office of apostleship, according to the sovereignly gracious appointment of his Father;—and Timothy, my beloved and faithful fellow-Christian, and minister of the gospel,—to all those at Corinth, and the places adjacent, that appear effectually called, graciously regenerated and sanctified, and set apart to the holy services of Christ,—wish the most abundant manifestations and fruits of God's free favour and mercy through Jesus Christ. 3. Magnified, adored, admired, loved, and praised for ever, be that infinitely great and gracious JEHOVAH, who, from eternity, in an inconceivable manner, begat our Lord Jesus Christ, who constituted him our Mediator, and prepared for him his marvellous manhood; and who, in and through him, appears full of the most tender compassion, and is the author of all pardoning and relieving mercies, and bestower of all comfort, temporal, spiritual, or eternal;—4. Who, by his word, Spirit, and providence, supports, assists, and comforts us ministers and Christians in all our painful and pressing troubles, outward or inward, particularly in such as we endure for adhering to his truths;—and that not merely for our own benefit, but that we may be thereby experimentally taught, disposed, and qualified, to sympathize with, and administer suitable and seasonable encouragement and comfort to others, in their afflictions, for animating their faith and hope to expect the like refreshment and deliverances. 5. For as we have been uncommonly troubled and persecuted for the sake of Christ; so, through union to, and intimate fellowship with him, we have been proportionally filled with spiritual comforts to balance it: 6. And all these things are divinely intended and ordered for your unspeakable advantage. If we be pressed with troubles, it is that ye, beholding us enabled to bear them with Christian courage, patience, and joy, may be imboldened to persevere in your holy profession and practice unto complete salvation, and to undergo similar troubles on Christ's account. 7. And from what I have heard of my former epistle, I rest assured that, as God has made you willing to sympathize with, and share in our sufferings for Christ, he will, in his rich grace and faithfulness, make you partners with us in our abundant comforts, as your condition shall require it.—8. Passing over many other afflictions which we have met with, ye perhaps have heard that we were so terribly persecuted and cruelly abused for preaching the gospel in Lesser Asia, that we had scarcely any hopes of escaping with our life. 9. But God reduced us to this apparently desperate extremity, that we might learn to live by faith on him, and have no dependence on our own wisdom or strength, or the favour or influence of friends, but only upon his life-giving, preserving, and restoring power, goodness, wisdom, and faithfulness, for our protection and deliverance. 10. And we firmly trust that this God, who, by marvellous interpositions, did, and still does, preserve us in life amidst the greatest dangers, will continue to deliver us from doing evil ourselves, or being hurt by the wickedness of others, and preserve us safe unto his heavenly kingdom: 11. And that, in answer to your prayers, as well as our own, such marvellous preservations and deliverances, procured by many prayers, and intended for the spiritual edification of multitudes, may issue in abundant thanksgivings of many to God. 12. For whatever reproaches and troubles I and my faithful fellow-preachers of Christ have met with, we have in our own breasts the heart-ravishing and triumphant testimony of our consciences, in every reflection upon our principles, tempers, motives, views, and conduct, that with an ingenuous undisguised sincerity and singleness of heart, and with the most upright aims to promote the glory of God,—not with any cunning artifices of carnal policy, or selfish or secular designs or motives; but by a governing principle of grace, which God hath wrought in our hearts, and by the gracious directions and assistance which he, in free

13 For we write none other[a] things unto you than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end;

14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, [l] that we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 [m] And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second [†] benefit;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judea.

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness?[‡] or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea, yea, and nay, nay?

18 But [n] as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay.[§]

19 For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, [o] and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay,[‖] but in him was yea.

20 For all the promises of God in him[*] are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us.

21 Now he [p] which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God;

22 Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest[†] of the Spirit in our hearts.

3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love[†] which I have more abundantly unto you.

favour, continually affords us,—we have conducted ourselves in the whole of our ministerial and personal behaviour, and in a particular manner towards you. 13, 14. What I have now hinted is nothing more than ye have read in my former letter, and which I understand ye generally acknowledge to be true: and I hope that, by the grace of God, ye shall never have occasion to think otherwise; even as the better part of you have already, with great pleasure, honourably acknowledged me and my fellow-preachers to have been the instruments of your conversion and spiritual comfort:—and we have rejoiced on account of the gifts and graces bestowed upon you, and expect to see you presented, as the seals of our ministry, before our Lord Jesus Christ in the last judgment.—15. And being satisfied of our having mutual comfort in one another, I truly intended to have made you a second visit before now, that, by my preaching and conversation, ye might be further refreshed and built up in Christ, and others converted to him. 16. I intended not indeed to visit you on my way to Macedonia, as then I could have merely seen you, but to continue with you some considerable time after my return from thence, and that some of you should help me forward in my way to Judea with the collection for the saints there. 17. In forming this design, which has not yet been accomplished, I did not, as your new preachers pretend, act inconsiderately or lightly, regardless of what I said or did; nor was it a compliment to flatter and deceive you; nor did I alter my resolution without sufficient ground, or as influenced by any carnal and secular considerations: nor did I, like a wicked man regardless of his word, affirm and deny the same things by turns. 18, 19. No: I dare appeal to the infinitely true and faithful JEHOVAH, that in my whole conduct I have acted consistently with truth and sincerity, and that the subject of my own and my brethren's ministrations are the stable and unchangeable truths of God:—for with uniform evidence of certainty we preached Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, in his person, offices, and benefits, which are for ever invariably the same; 20. For in him, the faithful and true Witness, all the great and precious promises of the new covenant, given forth by the unchangeable God, and clearly exhibited under the New Testament dispensation, are infallibly and invariably the same;—all established and put in force by his death, that they may be effectually and completely fulfilled in their proper time and order to his people, to the praise and glory of God's truth, faithfulness, and grace, by our ministrations. 21, 22. And it is this great and unchangeable God who establishes and strengthens us, ministers and people, to abide in the truth through virtue of our union to Christ,—and by his Spirit furnishes us with all necessary gifts and grace; who has also graciously distinguished, marked, and secured us for his own,—confirmed his covenant with us, assured us of our interest in it, and imprinted his holy image upon us, and has given us his Spirit to dwell, and shed abroad his love and influence, in our hearts, as a pledge and earnest of our eternal inheritance.—23. And I dare appeal to him, in the most solemn manner, that I delayed my visit to you merely from tender affection to you, that I might come, not to exercise my power in censuring and reproving you, but in kind and meek encouragement and comfort. 24. Not that I, or any other minister of Christ, have any right to domineer over your faith, by requiring you to believe or practise anything in religion which is not required by Jesus Christ, the only Head of the church: but we are authorized by God, and sincerely desire and endeavour, to promote your spiritual comfort, by recovering you from what would hinder it, and by establishing your faith in Christ, and the promises which are confirmed in him; for it is by such a divine faith, founded on God's own authority and faithfulness, that ye have stood, and must continue to stand, in your state of grace to eternal salvation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—An unbounded source of mercies and blessings is a reconciled God in Christ. And delightful is it to have the God and Father of Christ ours also. Faithful ministers and Christians may expect to meet with great troubles on earth. But it is enough if God proportion their comfort to their tribulations, and make all to issue in the edification of his church. Yea, thus God often delightfully prepares his ministers by their own trials and comforts, to comfort others. It is happy to see all our troubles and comforts wisely ordered by God, to draw us off from resting in creatures, to a sole dependence on himself; and to be enabled so to live amidst reproaches and persecutions, as our consciences cannot but attest our uprightness and holiness.—Joint fervent prayers bring down remarkable blessings upon ministers and others. And if God answer our prayers in remarkable benefits to many, abundant thanks should be rendered to him for his kindness. Happy is it when ministers earnestly pray, faithfully preach, and prudently vindicate their own character, in order to promote the remarkable edification of the church. And wonderful is the blessed provision which God hath made in promises and spiritual influences, for the instruction, comfort, establishment, and eternal salvation of his people.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. From a tender and affectionate regard to you, I chose rather to delay my promised visit; that your having rectified your disorders before I came, might render it more welcome to you and agreeable to myself. 2. For if by sharp reproofs and censures I had grieved any of you, nothing but the deep repentance, and remarkable reformation of those very persons, could have turned my sorrows into joy. 3. And for this reason, I did, and do now again, write to you, that all your disorders may be rectified before I come, that I may not have my mind burdened with grief by you, whose steadfastness in the faith, holiness, and order of the gospel, should be a comfort to me; and I hope that everything relative to the glory of Christ, and the good of his church, will be your joy as well as mine. 4. For it was in great distress of spirit, on account of their deplorable and dangerous condition, that I directed you to excommunicate the incestuous person, or other manifest apostates from Christ. And I mention it now, not to awaken and renew your grief, but to manifest my deep concern for you and other Christians, and for the repentance and salvation of the most notorious delinquents. 5. But if the incestuous person, or others notoriously scandalous, have, by their drawing upon themselves that awful censure, given uneasiness to me, or to such of you as are conscientiously concerned for the glory of God or good of their soul; (for I did not intend, in my former epistle, to charge you all as connivers at his

Yet now, when the censure passed upon him by your church rulers, according to my direction, has been blessed by God to render him deeply penitent, ye ought to regard him as pardoned by God, and to encourage, comfort, and restore him to your church fellowship, and behave towards him in the most compassionate manner, lest, through the overwhelming distress of his mind, he sink into utter despair. 8. And by your restoring, as well as excommunicating him, you will give full proof of your submission to my apostolic authority, which indeed was a part of my end in writing to you. 10. And to encourage you to this restoration of him to church fellowship, I, who concurred in his excommunication, hereby declare myself satisfied with his repentance; and to testify my concern for his and your order, peace, and comfort, I do, in the name, and as in the presence of Jesus Christ, declare him forgiven by God, and fit to be restored to the communion of the church. 11. And I am the more concerned for his being kindly and speedily restored, lest Satan, who envies the success of my ministry, the recovery of offenders, and the edification and increase of the church, should take occasion to prejudice any against us, as if we were of a rigid and unforgiving temper; or to discourage other offenders, and hurry them into despair or apostasy: for we have had much experience of his malicious designs and subtle stratagems to hinder the success of the gospel, and the peace and prosperity of the church. 12. The remarkable opportunity of preaching the gospel, which has Christ for its author, matter, and end, with the great success which the Lord gave me at Troas, helped also to retard my visit to you. 13. Yet amidst that comfortable success which I had there, such was my anxiety for the return of my dear brother Titus from you, to inform me of your spiritual concerns, and what effect my former epistle had upon you, that it made me set off and travel into Macedonia to meet him; where, to my great satisfaction, I found him, and received from him a comfortable account of your affairs. 14. Now blessed be the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, that, notwithstanding all the opposition, trouble, and vexation, which have befallen me and my fellow-labourers in the gospel, he enables us always to rejoice in what Christ is to us, and hath done and will do for us; and that by our ministrations he spreads abroad his precious, heart-captivating, and delightful declarations and offers of redeeming grace, and makes our labours acceptable to himself through Christ. 15. For in the faithful discharge of our commission, we are well-pleasing to God on Christ's account, and through the reference which our doctrines and services bear to him, whether our hearers be effectually wrought upon by it to the salvation of their souls, or whether they obstinately reject it to their everlasting damnation,—he favourably accepting our labours in his Son, not according to our success, but according to the right principles, motives, and ends, diligence and integrity, in fulfilling them. 16. As to some, indeed, our preaching of this pure, precious, and heart-ravishing gospel of Christ is altogether disagreeable to their carnal and corrupt heart; and through their obstinate rejection and perverse abuse of it, eventually increases their spiritual death, condemnation, and everlasting destruction: but to others it conveys, with inexpressible delight, spiritual quickening, pardon, and comfort, and issues in their complete enjoyment of eternal life.—What man, then, without the special assistance of Christ and his Spirit, is able to discharge this important work in a duly humble, holy, disinterested, zealous, faithful, earnest, and affectionate manner? 17. For we are not like your judaizing or upstart preachers, who adulterate and debase the pure and glorious gospel, by mingling with it legal observances and human inventions, to serve their own pride and avarice, but with the utmost integrity and plainness we preach it true and genuine, without any additions, alterations, or secular views; as by the authority and direction, and in the presence and view of God himself, and looking for all assistance and acceptance through Christ, who is the great subject of our ministrations.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—What tender love and deep concern ministers ought to have for the edification of their people! And great is the sympathy and charity they ought to exercise towards them. With grief and pain should they observe their faults, or proceed in necessary censuring of them, uniting therewith an earnest care to promote their repentance and restoration to church fellowship. And church censures ought to be taken off whenever the proper ends for which they are inflicted are gained. To deny our forgiveness to such as we have ground to hope God has forgiven, is a disobedience to Christ, and gives Satan an opportunity of rendering the persons censured desperate or profane, and of representing Christ's followers as odiously rigid. For many are the wiles of Satan to dishonour Christ's cause, and prevent the salvation of souls. But God, to the joy of his servants, makes the gospel of his grace gloriously triumphant at last, to the salvation of some, and redoubled damnation of others. How delightful then on the one hand, and awful on the other, and how important and difficult is the work of a gospel minister! Great grace from God is necessary to enable men to preach his gospel purely, heartily, candidly, and conscientiously, always dependent on Christ. And, alas, awful is the guilt, the danger of multitudes, who adulterate it with human inventions, or who preach it in an unfaithful manner, and from carnal motives and ends; or who make the work of the ministry but a secondary business.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. Do ye imagine, that by thus avowing my own and my brethren's integrity, I wish, like your vain-glorious preachers, to set forth our own praises? No; it is merely for your sake and the gospel's that I have touched on that point:—Or do we, like your false apostles, need letters of recommendation from one church to ingratiate us with another? 2. No; ye yourselves are the dear seals of our ministry. The grace of God, planted in your hearts by means of it, and manifested in your holy conversation, is, to our inexpressible comfort, a demonstrative evidence to all of our divine call to, and assistance in our work. 3. In respect of your gifts, graces, and holy conversation, ye are our recommendatory epistle from Christ, formed, through our ministrations, by the almighty Spirit of that God who has all life in himself, and is the Fountain and Bestower of it on others;—an epistle written not with ink, as is the best we could have from men; nor even on tables of stone, as Moses received the law from God, but in the tender, pliant, living, and sensible tables of your renewed hearts, made susceptible and retentive of every spiritual and holy impression. 4. And as our a THEREFORE, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not;

ministrations have had these effects upon you, we trust in the promise, power, and grace of God, that they will continue to have the like effects upon others; to their salvation, our vindication, and his own honour. 5. Not that we pretend to have any power of ourselves, to convert or edify any man, or even to think one truly good and spiritual thought; but all our fitness and success are wholly and only of God, by the operation of his Spirit; 6. On him alone we depend for it, and to him we ascribe the glory of it, who has graciously furnished us with every needful qualification, and gives us all seasonable assistances, to render us faithful and successful ministers of the gospel, which holds forth the covenant of grace in its utmost evidence, freeness, and fulness, as now confirmed by the death of Christ; —not ministers of the law, which God wrote on tables of stone, and which, in its long continued dispensation, was comparatively weak and dead, condemning men to death and destruction;—but ministers of the gospel, which, by the marvellous agency of the Holy Ghost, is made effectual for the quickening, converting, comfort, and eternal life of multitudes, Gentiles as well as Jews. 7, 8. Now if the law, the ministration of which tended to condemnation, death, and destruction, and which was written on tables of stone, was delivered at Sinai with so much glorious pomp and awful majesty, and attended with a transient impression of glory on the face of Moses, who conveyed it to the people, how much greater glory, and that of a spiritual nature, must there be in the delightful dispensation of the gospel, by which the Holy Ghost conveys his enlightening, quickening, sanctifying, and saving influences into such multitudes of souls; and how much more excellent that abiding glory which it imprints upon the duly qualified, authorized, and faithful ministers of it? 9. For if the ministration of the law and legal ceremonies, which left men under a sentence of condemnation and death, was attended with such awful glory and majesty, the ministration of the gospel, in which the righteousness of God for the justification of believers is revealed and offered, and by means of which, the faith, whereby we believe unto righteousness, is wrought in our heart, must be much more abundantly transcendent in its endearing excellency and honour. 10. Nay, the legal dispensation, which was introduced with so much glorious pomp at Sinai, has no glory at all when compared with the glory of the gospel dispensation of light and grace. 11. For if that legal dispensation, which is now abolished and set aside as weak and imperfect, was so glorious, much more must the New Testament dispensation, which is so excellent in itself, and abides till the end of time unalterable in its privileges and ordinances, be truly, emphatically, and beyond all comparison glorious! 12. Being therefore, upon such considerations, fully persuaded of the superior worth and excellency of the gospel above the legal dispensation, and humbly trusting to the Lord to make it effectual for the salvation of souls, we are imboldened to use great freedom, openness, and plainness, in our preaching this word of his grace, without any reserve, fear, or disguise, on the one hand, or any embellishments of human art on the other. 13. We do not wish in any manner to conceal its intrinsic native beauties, as Moses covered his shining countenance with a vail, to hide it from the Israelites; intimating that, partly through the obscurity of his dispensation, and partly through the carnal blindness of their own minds, they could not distinctly, by faith, behold the true scope and design thereof in Jesus and his work, thereby typified. 14. And indeed both the ancient and modern Jews have been generally so blinded and hardened in their hearts, that they did not conceive the proper meaning of the Old Testament types and predictions: Yea, it is only by the manifestation of these things in the gospel and in the heart, that those things can be understood. 15. And even to this day most of the Jews, when they read the law of Moses and the prophets, do not discern their true reference to Christ any more than their fathers discerned the glory of Moses' face through the vail that covered it. 16. Nevertheless, as Moses took the vail off his face when he went in before the Lord; so, when the generality of that nation shall be converted to the Lord Jesus Christ, the vail of ignorance shall be removed from their hearts, and their understandings shall be enlightened to discern how all the types, figures, and predictions of Scripture have their complete and glorious accomplishment in Christ and his work of redemption. 17. Now the Lord Jesus, who will thus remove their vail of ignorance, is a divine, a quickening spirit, and the words which he speaks are spirit and life. He is the spirit and substance of all those ancient laws and ceremonies, and he conveys the Holy Ghost to all his members, to make their dead souls live, by means of the gospel; and wherever the Spirit of Christ dwells, and operates savingly in the heart, there is enjoyed a blessed freedom from natural ignorance of spiritual things,—from the bondage of the legal dispensation,—from the law as a covenant, and from the guilt and power of sin,—and a holy and delightful freedom of access to God and communion with him. 18. And all of us who are endowed with this Spirit, and brought into the open light and full liberty of the gospel dispensation, do now, by faith, in a manner far more clear than under the law, and yet far short of the heavenly vision, behold the unvailed glory of the Lord Jesus, in whom the law is fulfilled, and all the divine perfections illustriously displayed and harmoniously exalted;—and are, by these views, gradually and effectually rendered more and more like to him in grace and holiness, in a manner answerable to the love, grace, power, and influence of the Holy Ghost, who is himself a divine Person, and is sent by Jesus Christ to convert and sanctify his people.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Thrice happy are those ministers whose remarkable success in the conversion of sinners attests their call to their office; whose care is not to please men's humours, but to awaken the conscience and touch their heart; and who, in proportion to the success of their ministry, become more humble and sensible of their insufficiency for their work! And happy are those hearers whose hearts are by the gospel powerfully conformed to Christ! It is a mercy that we live in that period in which the terrible, the servile, the dark, the deathful, the figurative, and legal dispensation of God's truths is exchanged for the amiable and glorious, the lightful and liberating, the quickening, the substantial, and lasting ministration of the gospel. The vail of ignorance and error has been already in part removed by the influence of God's Spirit; and a time is coming when it shall be more fully removed from both Jews and Gentiles, and they be converted by multitudes to Christ. And thrice happy are they who, by believing views of him in the gospel, are gradually conformed to his image, till at last they become perfectly like him by seeing him as he is.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. Since therefore this dispensation of the gospel, which is so glorious in itself, and so efficacious and transforming in the hearts of true believers, is committed to me and my fellow-labourers, we are animated by the grace of God bestowed on us, and his mercy towards us, amidst all our weakness, tribulation, and reproach, to discharge our important trust without despondence, cowardice, or shrinking. 2. And notwithstanding manifold temptations, we have with abhorrence kept at the remotest distance from all secret and dishonourable artifices and contrivances, and all overreaching and insnaring the souls of men by sly, subtle, and false pretences; and all attempts to corrupt or falsify the word of God, or to accommodate it to the depraved taste of our hearers; and have endeavoured to preach the gospel, and nothing else, with the greatest simplicity and upright freedom, answerably to every one's case and conscience, as in the sight of that all-seeing and heart-searching God, to whom we must at last give an account of our conduct. 3. But if, notwithstanding our plain and faithful publication of the gospel, any of our hearers still remain ignorant of its attracting glory and saving power, it is merely because, by their wilful obstinacy and unbelief, they continue in their natural, lost, and perishing estate, in which, if they persist, they must be inevitably undone for ever; 4. And because the devil, whom the idolatrous Gentiles worship, and carnal men everywhere serve and obey, has, by the malignant influence of his allurements, terrors, and delusive suggestions, increased and confirmed the natural blindness and stupidity of their minds, and led them into wrong notions concerning the things of God, and their eternal interests, that so the bright discoveries of the glory of Christ, who, as the Son of God, is the express image of his Father's person, and as Mediator, God-man, is the representative image of God, in which all his perfections appear harmoniously exalted and illustriously displayed, may not, by this gospel, penetrate through their natural ignorance and error, enlighten their hearts, and dispose them to abandon the slavery of Satan, and receive Jesus Christ by faith. 5. For in preaching the gospel, we do not conceal the glory of it, by attempting to promote our own honour or interests, authority or inventions, passions or prejudices, but labour plainly to exhibit the person, offices, relations, righteousness, grace, and government of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of lost sinners, and Lord of all, and to represent ourselves as no more than servants, who are called by him to consider your weakness, wants, temptations, and dangers, and to labour, by all means to promote your spiritual and eternal welfare, to the praise of the glory of his grace. 6. For God, who in the creation of the world did, by his own powerful and efficacious word, cause light to shine out of the dark chaos, has graciously enlightened the minds of us apostles and ministers, and even ordinary believers, with discoveries of his own being, perfections, purposes, and will, relative to our eternal salvation, as they are displayed, with the most endearing lustre, in the person, offices, relations, states, and work of Jesus Christ our Redeemer. 7. And he has committed the ministration of this infinitely precious and enriching truth and grace of the gospel to us, who are but frail, contemptible, mortal, and sinful men like yourselves, that the transcendent excellency and infinitely powerful influence which attend it for the conversion, comfort, and sanctification of men, may appear to be wholly of God, and in no respect or degree from us the preachers of it, who, on account of weakness, persecution, and trouble, need his almighty power to support and preserve us. 8. We are oppressed with manifold afflictions from all quarters, and by all means that men or devils can invent; yet neither straitened in our minds, oppressed with anxiety, hindered from preaching, or irrecoverably entangled.—We often know not what course to take in present dangers, or how to avoid further trials; but are never left to distrust or despair of God's wisdom, power, goodness, and truth, to uphold us under, carry us through, and in due time deliver us from all our troubles, and make them work for his own glory and our good.—9. We are persecuted for righteousness' sake in our persons, characters, liberties, and properties, by every method of reproach and violence; but never left to ourselves, abandoned by our God, or deprived of his acknowledgment, assistance, and comfort.—In our wrestling with sinful lusts, seducing devils, unreasonable men, or even our own infirmities, we are sometimes dejected, foiled, and cast down; but by faith we rise again, and neither we nor our cause are slain or defeated.—10. In these daily and severe hardships and sufferings, which we endure for Christ, we carry about an external resemblance of those which he endured for the salvation of men: while, by our fellowship with him in the virtue of his death, resurrection, and eternal life, we are enabled to bear them with faith, patience, constancy, and courage. 11. For we who live spiritually, by quickening influence derived from him as our vital Head, and in conformity to him as our great Pattern, and who, by his marvellous providence, are still preserved in our natural life, are perpetually betrayed and delivered up by our restless enemies into the hands of secular powers or outrageous mobs, and are always surrounded with dangers, and exposed to death for preaching and professing our faith in Christ as the only Saviour,—in order that our wonderful preservations and deliverances, and our continued boldness in preaching the gospel with divine energy, may be an evident demonstration of the great power and glory by and to which our living Redeemer was raised from the dead, and that his holy and heavenly life may be conspicuously exemplified in our holding fast our faith, and holding on in our ministrations and holy practice with submission, patience, and undaunted resolution, amidst all the infirmities and oppressions which attend our abiding in mortal flesh.—12. Thus we ministers are exposed to distress and danger in the most hideous forms, while ye, my Christian friends, dwell in safety, and enjoy all the comforts of life; and all the troubles which we endure in preaching the gospel, and for the confirmation of it, are, by the power and wisdom of Christ, made means of promoting your spiritual and eternal life. 13. But whatever difference there be in our outward circumstances, yet, being animated by the same lively principle of faith, wrought by the Holy Ghost, as you and the Old Testament saints were influenced by, we, after their example, having firmly believed the gospel revelations, and experienced them to be faithful and true, do persist in boldly preaching them, and openly avowing our hopes of complete deliverance, and eternal life according to them; 14. Being fully assured that God, who raised up Jesus Christ from the dead, as an evident testimony of his having perfectly fulfilled his law, and satisfied his justice for the sins of his people, will, for and through Jesus Christ, by his Spirit, raise us up to a blessed immortality at the last day, and will solemnly approve and present us faultless before an assembled world with exceeding joy: 15. For all the labours and sufferings of Christ's ministers or people, and everything else relative to the gospel dispensation, yea, all the providential dispensations of God, are by him intended, ordered, and made effectual, for your spiritual edification and eternal salvation, that the overflowing streams of his grace and mercy might, through Christ, issue in abundant grateful acknowledgments, thanksgivings, and praises of converted multitudes to himself as the Father of mercies, and God of salvation. 16. And these realizing views and contemplations of the blessed fruits

4 For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed [*] up of life.

5 Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

of our ministrations bear up our spirits amidst every danger or distress; and though, by numberless fatigues and hardships, our mortal bodies and outward enjoyments gradually decline and waste, yet our immortal souls, as regenerated by the grace of God, are daily revived and strengthened in holiness and comfort by fresh supplies from Christ's fulness of grace, and gradually increase in desire of, and meetness for, the heavenly perfection. 17. For however burdensome and tedious our multiplied tribulations may appear to carnal men, yet to our faith, and in comparison of that important and endless happiness which we look for, they appear extremely light and momentary; and meanwhile, by the all-gracious management of Providence without us, and the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost within us, they all, in a marvellous connexion, issue in, and prepare us for an incomparable, inexpressible, inconceivable, and everlasting glory and happiness, in the full enjoyment of God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL. 18. While, in order to promote this astonishing co-operation of our troubles, we, by faith, overlook the visible and transient things of this world, as altogether unsuitable and insufficient to be a portion for our souls, and intently look at, desire after, and hasten towards, the invisible things of heaven, which, like God himself, shall for ever endure in their glory and delightful usefulness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Happy are they who are divinely called to, qualified for, supported under, and rendered faithful in the gospel ministry! It is not enough to begin well, but they must courageously persevere unto the end. And in all things they must recommend themselves to the gracious approbation of God, and to the consciences of their hearers, by a candid and open publication of truth. Not themselves, but Christ in his new covenant characters, must be the matter and end of their preaching; and they must take pleasure in serving the spiritual and eternal interests of his church for his sake. How excellent is the gospel treasure, which is put into weak, despicable, mortal, and sinful ministers, for the enriching of themselves and others! And wisely hath God thus ordered it, that all the good found in, or done by them, may appear to be of himself. With great subtlety, labour, and force, Satan strives to hold fast his slaves of mankind through their ignorance of the gospel. And nothing can more clearly discover men in a lost and perishing estate than obstinate ignorance of gospel truths. Thrice happy then are those who have had its illustrious, amiable, and penetrating light shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost! Like Christ, their sufferings may be great and many, but they shall be supported and honourably carried through them all. If, like the ancient prophets and saints, they stand fast in the faith, no tribulation shall overwhelm or cause them to faint. While bodily troubles waste their outward man, Jesus' Spirit makes their inward grace increase, and their souls to advance in spiritual strength and ripeness for glory. Never should saints murmur at their troubles, when they are so light and transient, and yet so inexpressibly useful. But how inconceivably delightful and glorious is our eternal felicity! And the more we set our eyes and affections on things above, the more remarkably will our troubles prepare us for, as they bring us nearer to, this eternal happiness.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1. What encourages us thus to look at things eternal, and to bear up cheerfully and labour diligently under our innumerable afflictions, is that, from the testimony of God's word, and the witnessing of his Spirit with our spirits, we are assured that, whenever this frail, mean, and changing body, in which our soul dwells during our present state of pilgrimage and warfare, shall be dissolved by death, our soul shall immediately enter into a far more fixed, lasting, glorious, and happy state, prepared by God, in his infinite wisdom, power, and grace, in his own immediate presence in heaven; and at the last day our body, being raised in glory, shall be rendered immortal, that, in union with our soul, it may be for ever with the Lord. 2. And in the believing views of this inconceivable happiness, we, being oppressed by manifold troubles and indwelling corruptions, do often, in extreme anguish, sigh, mourn, and groan under them, and vehemently desire and long for our heavenly home, in which we shall be clothed with light, holiness, and joy, and our body at last put on immortality and honour; 3. And the rather, because, being then surrounded, adorned, and rendered safe and happy, with this glory, we shall never more be exposed to any want, misery, defilement, or shame. 4. For in our present mortal state we cannot but earnestly long to be fully delivered from all our burdens of trouble, and especially our sinful corruptions, which so offend our gracious God, and hinder our fellowship with him: not that we would be rid of our body, or chiefly desire to get out of this evil world, but that we may enter into the full possession of perfect holiness and happiness; and that all our natural and sinful infirmities may be, as it were, drowned and lost in the transcendent and undefiled felicities and glories of the future state. 5. Now, for the further confirmation of our faith and hope, God hath not only revealed and promised this future blessedness, but, by his regenerating and sanctifying grace, hath formed in our hearts spiritual and holy dispositions and desires, to make us meet for it; and by the inhabitation, comforts, and witnessing of his Spirit in us, hath given us an earnest, pledge, token, and foretaste of it, to ascertain our speedy entrance on the full enjoyment of it. 6. And in the views, and under the influence of these things, we are always enabled to face our trials, sufferings, or death, with undaunted courage, and unshaken hopes of a glorious deliverance from them; knowing that, while we continue dwelling in these mortal bodies, we live like persons in a state of pilgrimage and warfare, at a great distance from the immediate presence of our dear Husband and Lord, Jesus Christ. 7. For in this present mortal state of afflictions, we live and regulate all our behaviour by faith in Christ and his promises, which overcomes this world, and is the evidence of things not seen; and not by the immediate sight and enjoyment of God, any more than by carnal sense or spiritual feelings. 8. But bearing up under all our hardships and dangers, and having unshaken hopes of their happy issue, we would be glad to leave our present mortal body and life, with all the natural and sinful infirmities attending them, in order to enter into the immediate presence of Christ, and be perfectly transformed into his image, by seeing him as he is. 9. Having therefore these satisfying hopes of, and earnest desires after, the heavenly blessedness, we zealously labour, that, whether we die or live, all our services and sufferings, as well as our persons, may be graciously accepted by Christ, through his own righteousness, at his tribunal. 10. For in a little time, all of us, ministers or people, Jews or Gentiles, must personally appear before him at the last judgment, when our whole state, qualities, and works, shall be impartially laid open before the world and our own consciences, that every one of us, saint or sinner, may have the eternal gracious reward of our good deeds, or the just punishment of our sins, assigned to us, in proportion to the degree of the habitual and governing turn of our thoughts, words, or actions, in which we lived and died. 11. Being therefore convinced, from the word of God, and our own experience, of the inexpressible terribleness of that future judgment to hypocritical and unregenerate men, we compassionately labour to beseech and persuade men to flee from their natural, sinful, and dangerous estate, by receiving Jesus Christ the Judge for their full and everlasting salvation; and whether they hear or forbear, we can appeal to God that we have been sincere and earnest therein; and can appeal to many of your consciences, who have observed our preaching, sufferings, and conduct. 12. Indeed, after the experimental knowledge which ye have had of our faithfulness and diligence, we have no need to 13 For whether we be [k]beside ourselves, it is to God; or whether we oe sober, it is for your cause.

14 For [l]the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead:†

15 [m]And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 [n]Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh:‡ yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.§

recommend ourselves to you; but we suggest these things, that ye may have occasion to rejoice and glory in the favour which God hath vouchsafed to us, and may thereby silence the vain boasts of your judaizing teachers, who, without any just consciousness of their own sincerity, talk proudly of their mere appearances of religion. 13. For in my own, and my faithful fellow-ministers' zealous vindication of our character, and fervent contendings for the equal admission of believing Gentiles, as well as Jews, to all the privileges of the gospel church; and in our self-denial, and calm instructions and entreaties, we have only aimed at manifesting the riches of God's grace, and promoting men's eternal salvation, particularly that of the Gentiles. 14, 15. For the faith and sense of the exceeding greatness, freeness, and endearments of Christ's dying love, powerfully draw, excite, incline, and oblige us, as it were, by a holy and delightful constraint, to do all that we can, in imitation of, and obedience to, him, for the glory of God, in the salvation of Gentiles as well as Jews: for we thus think and judge, that if, according to the gospel revelation, Christ, the only Saviour, died in the stead, and for the salvation, of sinful men, Gentiles as well as Jews, then both parties were, by nature, equally condemned in law, and dead in trespasses and sins, none having more right to, or fitness for, gospel privileges than another; and that he died for sinners of all nations, that all they who are adjudged to life in justification, and spiritually quickened by the Holy Ghost, should no longer pursue their own carnal, selfish, or secular aims, nor indulge their own lusts and passions, nor make their own honour, ease, or pleasure, the chief end of their living in this world, but wholly devote themselves to the service and glory of their great Lord and Saviour, who died to atone for their sins, and rose again for their justification and eternal life. 16. For this reason, we, faithful ministers of the gospel, think ourselves bound to preach it to all nations, Gentiles or Jews, poor or rich; nay, though some of us once viewed and valued Christ as a circumcised Jew or temporal Deliverer, being now enlightened by the gospel, we view and value him only as the spiritual, the divine Prophet, Priest, and King of the new covenant of grace, for men's spiritual and eternal salvation. 17. It is therefore the principal point of the Christian religion, that if any man, Jew or Gentile, be in Christ by vital union, as well as by external profession, an entire change of his state, nature, and practice, hath been effected in him, by the almighty creating power of God; his former habitual principles, inclinations, motives, ends, and course of conversation, are mortified and laid aside, and others, directly contrary to them, and conformed to those of Christ, are implanted and fixed in their stead. 18. And God, the Creator and Preserver of the world, is the Author of all things respecting the new creation and redemption of men, Jews or Gentiles; and hath, by the incarnation, obedience, and death of his Son, effectually destroyed sin, and restored friendship between himself and all his people; and in infinite condescension and grace, hath honourably intrusted us apostles and ministers to preach and hold forth this method of reconciliation to men. 19. The sum and tenor of which is, that God, from all eternity, entered into a new covenant with Christ, and, in prosecution thereof, hath, through his mediation and atoning sacrifice, manifested himself a God of peace, pardoning all the iniquities of them that believe, Gentiles as well as Jews, and for conquering and converting sinners, hath appointed us apostles and ministers to preach the glad tidings and offers of reconciliation through the whole world, as we have opportunity. 20. Wherefore, as his highly dignified messengers, sent to deal with you in his stead, we do, in the name and authority of Christ and his Father, beseech and entreat you, by everything endearing or awful in heaven, earth, or hell, and in time or eternity, to consider and accept of God's graciously prepared, dearly purchased, and freely offered peace, favour, and friendship, and to surrender up yourselves to him, to be espoused to Christ, saved by him, and entirely and heartily devoted to him and his service. 21. For in justice to himself, his law, and government, and in rich mercy and grace to Jews and Gentiles, God the Father hath imputed our sins to his own perfectly holy and only begotten Son, as our Surety, and hath fully punished them on him, that, in consequence of our spiritual union to his person, his complete righteousness of obedience and suffering, which for ever resides in him, but was contrived, fulfilled, and accepted by God for us, might be imputed to us, to render us perfectly free from guilt, and righteous unto eternal life before him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Frailty, sinfulness, and sorrows, attend the best of men on earth. But happy they who have a blessed assurance of eternal fellowship with Christ in heaven! No wonder they long for it, and groan to be delivered from their present pressures and plagues. And happy they who are fitted for it, and have the Holy Ghost dwelling in their hearts as an earnest of it, and who are, by faith, daily walking forward to it, and diligently finishing the work which God hath allotted them in this life! How tremendous will be the last judgment, in which all men that are, have been, or shall be, must appear together before Christ, and have their eternal state publicly and irreversibly fixed, according to their qualities and works!—In a most conscientious and active manner ought ministers and others to behave in the view of it. And slumbering sinners must be awakened by these terrors of the Lord. But it is most delightful to be constrained, by the faith and sense of Jesus' love, to live and labour always for his glory and the salvation of men. And never ought he or his blessings to be viewed in a carnal manner. No profession or practice, without new principles of grace in our heart, can prove us united to him; and nothing less can answer the design of the gospel, or of God's substitution of his Son as our Surety in our stead. Now think, my soul, what God hath done, and doth, and speaks, and is to me: and let me not persist a moment longer in opposition to, in rebellion against, such amazing kindness and condescension.

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1. We gospel ministers being therefore joint labourers with God, and uniting with one another in this great work, under his direction and influence, earnestly exhort, entreat, and beseech you, Corinthians and others, that ye do not lightly esteem these glad tidings and offers of reconciliation with God, or receive them only in notion and profession, and so render them ineffectual for conveying God's blessings, gifts, or graces, to the saving of your soul, and unfruitful for the production of true holiness. 2. But as God, according to his ancient promise by Isaiah, hath, in answer to the requests of his Son, seasonably assisted him in his work of purchasing our redemption, and accepted his sacrifice, in the room of Gentiles as well as Jews, let me beseech you, in this noted period of Christ's publishing, offering, and applying his salvation, to make sure your interest in and enjoyment of it. 3. In fulfilling this our infinitely important ministerial work, we have been divinely enabled to behave with such circumspection and caution towards all men, as to give no just offence even to our enemies, and have done nothing tending to draw reproach on our office, dishonour on Christ, or to mar the success of his gospel; 4, 5. But in all things have approved ourselves to Christ, and the consciences of his people, as diligent and faithful ministers, who have our commission from God, and are employed and owned by him in his service, and pursue the great designs of his glory, by our abundant meekness and patience towards men, and calm resignation and submission to the will of God, in the manifold tribulations which we suffer for Christ's sake, and in a Ch. 6. 16—18. Rom. 5. 20, 21. & 6. 1—23. 2 Pet. 1. 4—9. & 3. 11—14. Luke 1. 74, 75. 1 John 3. 1—3. 1 Pet. 2. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 20. Tit. 2. 11—14.

[a] HAVING therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

our extreme want even of necessary provisions, and the great straits and perplexities to which we have been often reduced—in our enduring ignominious and painful scourgings; in hard imprisonments under the custody of cruel officers; in outrageous insurrections of insulting and furious mobs;—and in the want of ordinary sleep and food. 6. Which patience hath been promoted by, and carried on in, great integrity, in preaching the gospel with a single eye to the glory of God and the good of precious souls; and in a modest and chaste behaviour, and purity of doctrine and manners; in a believing acquaintance with gospel truth, and a spiritual wisdom and understanding answerable to it; in such lenity and forbearance as to put up with affronts, and bear calmly every provocation; in such kindness of temper as makes us to delight in doing good to all, and rendering good for evil; and by the special assistance of the Holy Ghost, in his gifts and graces, which furnish us for, direct and animate us in, the work of the Lord: 7. By the light and comfort of the gospel, which God, who cannot lie, hath published; and which we believe without doubting, and preach without any mixture of error; and by the almighty power of God, which assists and supports us under all our trials and labours; and, in fine, by the whole armour of God, by which we are completely furnished, to war valiantly, acceptably, and successfully against all our spiritual enemies, of every kind, and on every side. 8. And being thus fortified against all our trials, we, with steadiness of temper, go through every change and form of our much diversified lot; through the good esteem of some, without being puffed up: through the contempt and abuse of others, without being dispirited: through hard speeches and slanders, without being discouraged: and through commendations and applause, without being proud of them. For, in the holy providence of God, we are represented as hypocritical impostors, who seduce mankind; and yet as true servants of Christ, we are sincere and faithful in preaching the gospel in all that we say or do. 9. Some, ignorant of our true character, represent us as mean, worthless, and obscure; others, from their own experience of our powerful ministrations, holy conversation, and unshaken patience in suffering, and from the information of such as have experienced the like, know us to be highly honoured of God. We are in perpetual jeopardy, as persons in the jaws of death, and yet God wonderfully preserves us in life and comfort. We are severely chastened by the hands of both God and men, and yet both our lives and hopes are maintained. 10. In outward appearance we are in a very melancholy and miserable condition; and yet we are inwardly full of the joys of faith and of a good conscience, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. We are indeed poor with respect to this world, having none of its affluence or accommodations; and yet we are instruments in Christ's hand of making many rich towards God in faith and good works, and heirs of his kingdom, along with ourselves. We scarcely possess any earthly enjoyments, and look down upon them with holy indifference; and yet we have all things spiritual, temporal, and eternal, in Christ our Head, who hath received them for our use. 11. My dear Corinthians, we thus freely open our mind to you, that ye may be encouraged by thus hearing of our behaviour, supports, and consolations, under all our sufferings for Christ; and be able to vindicate our character against those who reproach us; and our hearts are so full of affection to you, and concern for your spiritual edification and eternal salvation, that we think nothing too much for promoting them. 12. There is no want of love in our heart, or of zeal in our work, to promote to the utmost your establishment and growth in light, faith, love, comfort, and holiness; nor is there any deficiency in the gracious doctrines, promises, and privileges which we preach: but there are some of you, whose hearts, through the working of unbelief, carnality, and coolness of affection, are shut against us, and against the consolations which are in Christ for you. 13. But now, in return for our great love to you, and our earnest desires and labours to promote your spiritual welfare, I beg that ye, as loving children, would enlarge your affection towards us, and cheerfully receive the truths and blessings of the gospel, which we recommend to you.—14. And I earnestly insist, that ye never intermarry with such as appear destitute of the knowledge and grace of the gospel; never cultivate any unnecessary familiarity with them; and, above all, never join with them in any of their idolatrous worship, which would amount to a practical renouncing of your communion with Christ. For what holy and delightful friendship can there be between one who is renewed and sanctified, and one who remains under the dominion of sin? What religious fellowship can there be between a savingly enlightened Christian, and one who knows nothing of God, of Christ, or the gospel, but is plainly a subject of Satan, the prince of darkness? 15. What harmony can there be between the true members of Christ and the manifest children of Satan, that lawless arch-rebel against God? Or what comfortable joint portion can one who believeth in Christ have with one who, in profession and practice, rejects him? 16. And what proper agreement can there be between you who are the divinely consecrated temples of God, and, according to his promise, honoured with his special presence, as your God, Master, and Lord, and them who are the temples of idols, and devoted to their service? 17. Remember therefore, that as God required his ancient people the Jews to improve their distinguished privileges, in abstaining from all unnecessary connexion with idolaters; so he requires you, and other Christians, whose privileges are much more glorious, to renounce all the unfruitful works of darkness, and have no fellowship with idolatrous or profane persons beyond what the civil duties of life require. 18. To encourage you to which, he promises to make up all your losses, by allowing you the most familiar fellowship with himself here and hereafter, and with all the kindness of a divine Parent blessing you, as heirs of himself, with all spiritual blessings in Christ.

Reflections upon Chap. VI.—It is very honourable to be a faithful minister, a worker together with God, in that glorious cause which is founded on Christ's acceptance with the Father, that sinners might be accepted in him. And earnestly should we improve present opportunities, in receiving Christ and his fulness, since they may quickly be irrevocably ended and gone. Ministers have need of much grace in them, and much prayer for them, that they may approve themselves faithful to God in all their labours, and under all their manifold sufferings. And it is shameful when their affectionate regard to their hearers is rewarded with neglect and contempt. Great care is necessary in Christians to keep at a proper distance from wicked persons and things. And if God graciously become ours, and make us his, and dwell in and with us, no idol ought to be harboured in our heart.

Chap. VII.—Ver. 1. Having therefore an interest in, and in some measure the possession of, all these exceeding great and precious promises, let us, my dear brethren, in a dependence on God's promised grace, and in hopes of his promised glory, by believing applications of Jesus' word, blood, and Spirit, and by careful watchfulness over our hearts and lives, and impartial mortification of our indwelling corruptions, labour to purify ourselves from all uncleanness, drunkenness, intemperance, and other fleshly lusts, which render us like to brute beasts; and from all falsehood, pride, malice, and other vices, which immediately polluto our

6 Nevertheless [h] God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us [i] your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 [k] For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: [*] for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

10 [n] For godly sorrow [a] worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: [o] but the sorrow of the world [†] worketh death.

11 For, behold, this self-same thing, that [p] ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness [‡] it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, [§] yea, what indignation, [‖] yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, [*] yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! 12 Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, [q] I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, [r] because his spirit was refreshed by you all.

14 For [s] if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

souls, and render us like devils; and let us press after universal perfection in holiness, under the influence of a holy and filial reverence of God, in his greatness, majesty, and mercy.—2. And to return to the point in hand, see that ye receive us, faithful ministers, into your most cordial affection, embrace the doctrine which we preach in Christ's name, and submit to the authority which we have received from him; for God and your consciences know that we never wronged your persons, characters, or estates, nor ever corrupted your minds, by errors, flatteries, or bribes, nor ever over-reached you for our own secular advantage. 3. I do not mention these things as if I thought the better part of you had ever reproached us with them; for as I have already hinted, such is our ardent affection to, and entire confidence in, most of you, that we could venture our character and life in your hands; and if God did not call us to labour in other places, we could willingly spend and be spent for you, and cheerfully live and die with you, as our beloved and affectionate friends. 4. It is from a tender concern for you that I so plainly warn you against every disorder; and it is from the firm confidence that I have in the generality of you, that I so rejoice in, and glory of, you as my obedient children in Christ: and amidst all my reproaches and sufferings, it is an inexpressible comfort to my spirits that things are much better among you than I feared. 5. For when I came in great anxiety from Troas to Macedonia to find Titus, and be by him informed concerning your spiritual estate, the anxiety I felt from not finding him, the fears I had concerning you, and the contests I endured with surrounding adversaries, rendered me, for a time, restless in both body and mind. 6. But at length our gracious God, the Father of mercies, who always takes a peculiar pleasure in comforting those who are dejected and distressed, greatly comforted me by the seasonable and happy arrival of Titus; 7. Not so much indeed by his safe return, as by the delightful accounts of his satisfactory reception among you; and how earnest ye were to comply with the injunctions I sent you, and of your deep lamentations over the offences which had happened among you, and of your affectionate zeal for, and regard to, my person, character, and authority, as an apostle of Christ. 8. For though it was with no small concern that I wrote my former reproofs, and not without great fear lest some might abuse them to their own hurt, and the dishonour of Christ; yet, now that they have produced such happy effects, I do not repent the freedom which I used; for though it pained you at first, it nevertheless quickly influenced you to rectify your disorders. 9. I therefore now heartily rejoice, not in your vexation and grief, but that it issued in an ingenuous and sincere repentance for the evils amongst you; for, like true penitents, ye mourned with a self-abasing and heart-broken sense of your sin as against God, and with hatred and humble confession of it, and a full purpose to turn from it to him, by the assistance of his Spirit, and to the glory of his name. Thus, instead of being either provoked or discouraged by my letter, ye were greatly profited by it. 10. For spiritual brokenness of heart, like yours, which is produced by apprehensions of the mercy of God in Christ, affects persons with a sense of their sins, as committed against God and his law, and works that thorough change of mind, heart, and life, which issues in, and gradually prepares for, a complete deliverance from sin and misery, and advancement to perfect and eternal holiness and happiness; and so ye will never need to repent of it, but to rejoice in and bless God for it:—but the anxiety, trouble, and vexation of spirit, which unregenerate men have on account of their worldly losses and troubles, or on account of apprehended wrath and damnation for their sins, promote spiritual death, prepare for eternal death, and even hasten natural death, by methods more or less violent. 11. But think what blessed fruits demonstrate the gracious and acceptable nature of your repentance, what care and diligence to rectify what was amiss! what concern to manifest your aversion at the least fellowship in sin! what hatred of, and warm resentment against, everything sinful, and what loathing of yourselves on account of it! what holy awe of God and his righteous judgments! what earnest desire to have your hearts, lives, and church, purged from everything sinful, and to perform whatever tends to the glory of God, or your own or others' edification! what holy zeal for the honour of God, and the purity, peace, and order of his church! what holy resentment against yourselves, or the scandalous offenders! Thus ye have manifested that your hearts are purged by the blood of Christ; and that, as a church, ye are no more chargeable with your former disorders. 12. This cannot but exceedingly delight me; for, though I wrote unto you with some sharpness, particularly about the incestuous person, I did it from no angry resentment at him, or partial regard to his father, who had been so horribly injured; nor was it barely to reclaim the one, and do justice to the other, but principally from a deep concern that God and Christ might be honoured, and your church preserved from that infection and reproach which his continuance among you might have occasioned. 13. We were therefore greatly refreshed to hear, that, for your own peace and comfort, ye had in an orderly manner excommunicated that heinous transgressor, and rectified your other disorders, and to find that Titus, your most affectionate friend, had been so greatly revived, cheered, and delighted with your reformation and Christian behaviour. 14. And as I always, in the greatest sincerity, preached to you the pure truths of the gospel, I am now extremely glad that your conduct hath answered to the high commendations which I had given of you to Titus; 15. Whose very heart and bowels of love are warmed as often as he thinks on your ready obedience to my injunctions, and on my deep concern that he might not meet with anything to grieve his spirits in any contempt of his faithful, kind, and tender advices to you. 16. It is therefore an inexpressible pleasure to me, that instead of being disappointed in my expectations concerning you, I have now further evidence that ye will pay a dutiful respect to my character, and religious regard to my apostolic injunctions, when I shall be permitted to visit you.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—Gospel promises afford abundant assistance and encouragement for daily progress in true holiness of heart and life. MOREOVER, brethren, we do you to wit * of a the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia;

2 How that b in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abounded unto the riches of their liberality.

3 c For to their power, (I bear record,) yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves;

4 Praying us with much entreaty d that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 * And this they did, not as we hoped,† e but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God:

6 f Insomuch that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same g grace also.

7 Therefore, as ye h abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace ‡ also.

8 i I speak not by commandment,§ but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For k ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 l And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be * forward a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For m if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 n For I mean not that other men be eased, and you burdened;

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance † also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, o He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack.

16 p But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 q For indeed he accepted the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have sent with him * the brother, ‡ whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this † grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind:

20 r Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

their spiritual welfare. But it is painful to be obliged to distress those whom we wish to comfort. And it is a great honour to Christians, when they are manifestly and evangelically penitent for their sins, and are an honour to Christ, and comfort to his ministers.

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 1. Being thus confident of your distinguished love and regard, I must again recommend to your Christian compassion the poor saints at Jerusalem; and for your excitement inform you, that the powerful influence of God's grace hath determined the Christians of Macedonia to make a very liberal collection for them. 2, 3. And that, notwithstanding their own grievous persecutions and deep poverty, they have, with uncommon generosity and gladness, bestowed their part, not only answerable to, but even beyond their ability: 4. Yea, so far were they from needing any excitement from me or my fellow-ministers, that they importunately urged us to accept their free-will offering, and take the trouble of conveying and distributing it to their poor brethren; 5. And this they did with the greatest cheerfulness and generosity that could be expected, and not merely so, but acting herein upon truly religious principles, before they put their contributions into our hands, they made a joint and solemn surrender of themselves, and all that they had, to the honour, service, influence, government, and disposal of the Lord Jesus Christ, as their Head, Saviour, and King; and then, according to the will and directing influence of God, to us as his servants, to conduct them in their spiritual concerns according to the rules of his word. 6. This their excellent behaviour made us to entreat Titus, our fellow-minister of Christ, who had been so acceptable among you, and had begun your charitable collections, to return to you, and, by his advices and encouragements, to complete them. 7. And as many of you, by the grace of God, are remarkable in the knowledge and faith of gospel-mysteries, in eloquence of speech, in earnest endeavours to reform your church, in your affectionate regard to faithful ministers, and in other excellencies, I beg and hope that ye will proportionally abound in this grace of Christian benevolence. 8. And as I mean that it should be wholly a free gift, I lay no command upon you, nor impose any particular sum; but wish that, by showing yourselves equally forward with your poor brethren of Macedonia, ye may give further proof of your love to me and to the saints, and especially to Christ, in imitation of, and thankful return for, his unparalleled and endearing love towards you. 9. For by infallible information, and your own experience, ye know the astonishing favour, love, and bounty of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who, though he was the eternal Son of God, possessed of all the riches, glory, and blessedness of the Godhead, and rightful Proprietor of all the riches of the universe; yet, to effect your salvation, assumed our nature in a most debased and impoverished condition, veiled his divine glory, and submitted to poverty, meanness, and suffering, that by this means ye might be enriched with all the abundant blessings of grace and glory, and even with those temporal benefits which ye enjoy in a new covenant state. 10, 11. Affected with his engaging example, I expect that ye will now complete and put into one sum the collections which ye began to lay by you about a year ago, when ye received my former epistle. 12. For wherever there is a cheerful and determined inclination to acts of benevolence, and sincere contrivances and endeavours to be able to distribute somewhat to the glory of God, and the necessities of his people, it is acceptable not only to ministers and churches, but even to Christ himself, be it more or less, if answerable to men's circumstances and abilities. 13. For I do not wish that ye should reduce yourselves to poverty by giving too largely to the enriching of these poor saints in Judea, nor that the whole burden of supplying them should fall on you to ease or excuse other churches that are able to assist in it; 14. But I am desirous, that at this time ye, out of your abundance, should supply their extreme necessities, that if ever, by the providence of God, ye should be reduced to like straits, they or others may be able and inclined to supply your need: 15. Of which brotherly communication we have an agreeable example in the Israelites' distribution of the manna, giving whatever they gathered more than enough for themselves to such as, through age and infirmity, could not gather what was sufficient for their daily support. 16, 17. And blessed be God, that he hath inspired our beloved brother Titus with the same fervent zeal as myself to engage you in this excellent service, for your own profit as well as the relief of the poor Jews: and indeed such was his abundant affection for you, and zeal for this work, that he scarcely needed to be urged to promote it. 18, 19. And I and my brethren, who are concerned in it, have sent along with him, on the same errand, another eminent minister, of great repute in the churches for his insight into the gospel, and his zeal, faithfulness, and diligence, in promoting the interests of it; and who hath been chosen by the churches here to attend and assist us in distributing their collection to the poor Christians in Judea, to the honour of Christ, and of all the cheerful contributors; 20, 21. (1) Why the apostle sent Titus and the brethren: 1—5. (2) He stirs them up to liberality, as a seed that shall return an abundant harvest, and offered a great sacrifice of thanksgiving: 6—15.

FOR as touching [a] the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

2 For I know [b] the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready [c] a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 [c] Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 [d] Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not you) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they [e] would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your [f] bounty, [g] whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

6 [h] But this I say, [i] He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

7 [k] Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

8 And [l] God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, [m] He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness [*] remaineth for ever.

10 [n] Now, he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your [o] righteousness:[†])

11 [p] Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.

12 For the administration of this service not only [q] supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;

13 Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they [r] glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men;

ing these large collections, that none might have occasion to suspect we had embezzled or misapplied any part of them; for we wish to execute this important trust in such a manner as may approve itself not only to God, who knows our hearts and ways, but also to the consciences of all mankind, whether friends or foes, who may observe our conduct. 22. And with these two brethren we have sent a third, of whose activity and faithfulness we have had the strongest proofs; and who, from the commendations of you, which he hath heard from me, will exert himself to the utmost to complete your honourable liberality. 23. If any strangers desire to know the character of these three brethren, let them understand that Titus is my assistant in everything relating to your comfort and edification, and that of other Christians; and that the other two are approved messengers of the churches here in Macedonia, who also have been greatly instrumental in promoting the glory and honour of Christ. 24. Receive them therefore in such a respectful manner, as will manifest to them and to the churches your love to Christ, to them and to me, and to the poor Jewish saints; and show that my boasting of you, as a generous, faithful, and kind people, hath been perfectly just and well-grounded.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—What an excellent virtue is Christian benevolence! Wrought in us by the power of divine grace, it proves the sincerity of our love to Christ, and to his members for his sake. It is a delightful imitation of him in his redeeming kindness, and never fails to turn out to men's own advantage. But it is shameful to be outdone in it by persons poorer than ourselves.—It is highly honourable for professors, first, solemnly to give up themselves to Jesus Christ as his members and subjects, and in consequence thereof, to the direction of his faithful ministers.—And happy is it when everything in charitable benevolence, or other church matters, is managed with such prudence, faithfulness, and disinterestedness, as leaves not the least ground for a suspicion of fraud, partiality, or selfishness; and when ministers and saints so behave as to be generally beloved and extensively commended.

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1. But the pious generosity and compassion of your own tempers, renders it altogether superfluous to suggest any other arguments for enforcing your liberality on this occasion. 2. For I sufficiently know your forward inclinations to it, which made me boast to the Christians of Macedonia, that ye, and your neighbours in Achaia, had begun your collections a year ago; and the fame of your fervent zeal herein hath raised a noble emulation in the breasts of many. 3, 4. But notwithstanding my confidence in you, I thought proper to join in sending Titus and his two brethren to you, that your money may be collected and just ready for us whenever we call for it, lest, if any of the Macedonian brethren come along with me, and find your collection not completed, it should expose both you and me, who have boasted of you, to shame and reproach. 5. I therefore thought it necessary, for your and my own honour, and the common credit of Christianity, to entreat these brethren to come beforehand, and inform you when ye may look for us, who are to receive, carry, and distribute it, that your bountiful contribution may be fully ready, and appear a grateful acknowledgment of God's kindness to you, cheerfully given, without any importunate instigation on our side. 6. And though the quantity to be given must be left to your own consciences, yet remember that, in allusion to the niggardly or plentiful sowing of seeds in the earth, God will ordinarily proportion his kind blessings to the straitness or liberality of your charitable contributions. 7. In view of this, let each of you give what he thinks proper in his circumstances, and that cheerfully, not like persons who grudge to part with it, or wish to be excused; for the infinitely bountiful God takes pleasure in them who give with an open hand and heart, and cheerfully improves every opportunity of making their condition comfortable. 8, 9. And this all-sufficient God, who delighteth in mercy, is able to make a liberal disposition, as well as all other gifts and graces, to abound in you, that ye, being content with what ye have, and plentifully supplied with everything pertaining to life and godliness, may be still more and more engaged in such charitable work, and thus attain to the inspired character of the merciful man, who, by his liberal distributions to the poor, procures himself lasting honours before God and men. 10. May therefore God, whose blessing maketh rich, and who multiplies grain to the sower, and supplies the necessity of liberal persons, and inclines them to supply others, give you always whatever is needful, restore your present liberality a hundred fold into your bosoms in both spirituals and temporals, and enable you more and more to abound in all the fruits of righteousness! 11. May he plentifully enrich you with every blessing of time and eternity, and make you more and more inclined and able to abound in such disinterested liberality, as may engage many souls in thankfulness to God for raising up, by our means, such instruments of supplying their wants! 12. For the proper distribution of this collection will not only be an ample relief to the poor Christians of Judea, but will redound to the honour of God, through the manifold thanksgivings of those who are supplied, and other friends of Christ; —13. While, by this experimental proof of your brotherly affection, the receivers of your charity, and even they who hear of it, will adore and bless God for your

CHAPTER X.

(1) Paul sets before the Corinthians his apostolic authority: 1—6. (2) Assures them that, at his coming, he will be found as mighty in word as by letter: 7—11. (3) He condemns those who compare themselves with themselves, and boast themselves in other men's labour: 12—16. (4) The only true glorying is in the Lord: 17, 18.

NOW I Paul myself beseech you [a]by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who [*b] in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you:

2 But I beseech you, that [c] I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence wherewith I think to be bold against some, which [†] think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.[‡]

3 For [d] though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:

4 ([e]For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds:[§])

5 Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity[‖] every thought to the obedience of Christ;

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.

7 Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? [f]If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

8 For [g]though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, I should not be ashamed:

9 That I may not seem [h] as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters (say they) are weighty and powerful; but [i]his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible.

11 Let such an one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters [k]when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present.

12 For [l] we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, [*] are not wise.

13 But [m] we will not boast of things without our measure, [†] but according to the measure of the [‡]rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 [n]For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you; for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the [o]gospel of Christ:

unfeigned submission to the authority of Christ in the gospel, and your affectionate and liberal love to his poor members. 14. And it will even turn to your own advantage, as the receivers will pour forth their prayers to God, that he may abundantly recompense your kindness with all blessings, spiritual, temporal, and eternal: 15. Yea, indeed, my own heart joins in their praises as well as their prayers. Blessed be God for this free and bountiful alms, which turns out so inexpressibly to his glory, and your own and others' good, and for the unutterable gift of his grace in making you both able and willing to honour him with your substance, and in filling the receivers with such abundant gratitude to him and to you: and, above all, thanks be to God for Jesus Christ, to whose authority ye have thus shown such subjection, and through whom all the rich blessings of grace and glory come to you, and who, in his person, offices, relations, fulness, and work, is such a transcendent and all-comprehensive gift of God, that no created heart can conceive, or tongue express its contents, excellencies, extent, or value.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—It is honourable to be so forward in acts of charity as to need no excitement. But the most liberal may need directions relative to the extent, time, or manner of their donations; and whatever charity we give should be with prudent consideration and bountiful cheerfulness, without any grudging. It is the most advantageous method in which we can dispose of our wealth. It honours God, and entails his gracious favour and rich recompense, secures the prayers of the relieved, and thus brings lasting profit and honour to ourselves. It is a mercy for our world that God gives some ability and inclination to give, and others a heart, in a Christian manner, to acknowledge their kindness; but unspeakably gracious that God thus loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son for and to sinful men!

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1. But that I may return to my self-vindication, I, who am reviled by them, as an abject, pusillanimous creature, of low stature and despicable appearance, when present, but very assuming, magisterial, and severe, when absent, beseech you, by all the kindness and love that appeared in Christ our Saviour, and after the example of Christ, with all that lenity, calmness, and benevolence of temper, wherewith his Spirit hath endowed me, to regard my admonition. 2. And I beg, that such care may be taken to rectify every disorder, that I may not, contrary to my own inclination, be obliged to rebuke and censure some of you, when I come to you, for their maliciously reproaching me and my faithful brethren, as if we conducted our ministrations by carnal views or motives. 3. For though we still remain in our mortal bodies, and are liable to the common infirmities and troubles of this life, yet we can appeal to God, that, in the manner of our struggling against manifold opposition, we do not act under the influence of sinful principles, nor by carnal means, nor to carnal ends, but with simplicity and godly sincerity, by his grace. 4. For in our difficult and dangerous work of preaching the gospel, we make use of no external force; of nothing furnished by carnal wisdom, or calculated to promote carnal interests; but merely of the truths of God, dispensed with light, zeal, and courage, in their native simplicity, which, by the almighty influence of God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, are made effectual to demolish the strongest forts of sin, Satan, and the world; all the ignorance, pride, prejudice, unbelief, sensuality, stubbornness, and enmity, which lie fortified in the hearts of men against God; 5. And to confute and overthrow the corrupt reasonings of Jews and Gentiles, and every proud conceit of self-wisdom, righteousness, and strength; and all the power and policy of earth and hell, which stand in opposition to the light, grace, and holiness, of the gospel, and the discoveries of the divine perfections made therein; and to reduce all the powers, faculties, and actions of men, to a cheerful and obedient subjection to the authority and commands of the Lord Jesus Christ. 6. Yea, I am furnished with apostolic powers, to censure or even inflict temporal punishments on such as shall obstinately continue to contemn and vilify my office,—whenever I see how many of you return to your obedience to Christ and to his authority in me.—7. But if my inveterate opposers conceive disadvantageously of me, from the meanness of my aspect, my poverty, or the humility of my behaviour, will ye also inconsiderately judge of me by outward appearances? If even the chief of your factious preachers be confident that he is a member and minister of Christ, and owned by him as such; let him, for his humiliation and caution, seriously remember that I am every whit as much Christ's, and as much owned by him, as he can pretend to be. 8. For if, in my present circumstances, I should even boast of the apostolic power with which the Lord Jesus hath intrusted me, for promoting your conversion, faith, holiness, order, and repentance, I should have no reason of being ashamed as though I had gone beyond either truth or decency. 9. But I will not say what I might, lest it should be pretended that I am desirous of terrifying my opposers by my letters, while I dare to say nothing face to face. 10. For they have already reproachfully derided me, as if I wrote letters in a high, solemn, authoritative, and threatening strain, while, when personally present, I appear most weak and contemptible, and my discourse quite despicable, without either elegance of language, or a graceful utterance. 11. But let these mockers know, that if God bring me again among you, they shall find me every whit as severe in the practical execution of my apostolic authority against impenitent offenders, as I appeared in my letters. 12. While they think me quite unworthy to be compared with themselves, my conscience restrains me from imitating them in self-conceit, and in groundless and indecent boasting to the decrying of everybody else.—And indeed it but manifests their weakness and folly, to form their opinion of themselves from their own fancied excellencies, or comparison with some of their own party. 13. For my part, I abhor assuming to myself the honour of other men's labours, or of doing that which God never appointed or directed me to in my ministrations;—but merely mention what God really did by me in the exercise of my apostolic office, all along from Jerusalem to your city. 14. I did not, like your factious preachers, hasten

5 For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest [*] apostles.

6 But though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence [c] in abasing myself [†] that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

8 [d] I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

from place to place where I might best gain honour or wealth to myself; but came all along gradually, and was the first who preached the gospel to you. 15. And as I abhor boasting of anything done by others, or done out of the line prescribed me by Providence, I hope, that when your faith, which has been shaken by these false teachers, is re-established and strengthened, I shall be encouraged and assisted by you to preach the gospel in places where it has not been heard; 16. I mean, to preach in the countries to the north and west of you, for the conversion of the heathens to Christ, without encroaching on the province of any other, or taking the honour of any man's labours. 17. But, after all, instead of boasting of our own accomplishments, labours, and success, or of claiming the honour of other men's works, let every one of us glory in the Lord Jesus, by whose gracious direction and influence we act for the honour of God or good of souls. 18. For it is not he who has a high conceit, and boasts of his own abilities and performances, but he whom the Lord honours with his gifts, graces, presence, and blessing, and bears witness to, as sincere, humble, and faithful in his work, that is now, or shall at the last day be approved by God.

Reflections upon Chap. X.—The best of men, and especially ministers, may expect malignant traducers. But with meekness and condescension they should endeavour to gain the unreasonably prejudiced, and yet with authority vindicate the honour of Christ in rebuking the obstinate. And though they have their natural infirmities and passions, they must never be governed by carnal principles or aims in their work.—Alas, how fixed is the power of sin and Satan in men's hearts! and yet the gospel, attended by the influence of God's Spirit, effectually triumphs over all opposition, and subdues men to Christ. It is necessary that ministers sometimes vindicate their conduct, and show the integrity, self-consistency, and order of it. But as ever either ministers or Christians would be approved by God, they must beware of pride, and glory only in Christ.

Chap. XI.—Ver. 1. But as a little glorying, in opposition to these pretended apostles among you, is necessary for my vindication, and for enabling you to silence their proud boasts, I beg and hope that ye will bear with me a little in this, which without necessity, would be extremely foolish. 2. For with a holy and religious fear I am deeply concerned, lest any of you be drawn off from Christ and his gospel, or even a due regard to me his apostle, and the instrument by which ye were savingly turned and united to the Lord Jesus Christ; and that I may have the honour and pleasure of presenting you to him, as a pure, uncorrupted, and faithful spouse. 3. But considering the artifices of your new teachers, I am afraid lest the devil, who, in the form of a serpent, beguiled our first mother Eve, to the general ruining of mankind, should pervert you in your principles, tempers, and practices, and turn you aside from the purity of doctrine, and sincerity of manners, becoming persons vitally united to Christ. 4. Indeed, if any of your new preachers exhibit to you a more excellent Saviour than I and Apollos preached to you;—or if, by their ministrations, ye have received a more excellent spirit, and more eminent gifts and graces, than ye did by ours;—or if their gospel be more worthy of God, or more answerable to the condition of fallen men, than what we preached;—ye may very justly own them, and prefer them to me. 5. It is nevertheless certain, that I am not inferior to any of Christ's inspired apostles, no not to Peter, of whom some of you boast. 6. And though my style be plain and simple, and my pronunciation less graceful than that of Apollos, my knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, which I received by revelation from Christ, is inferior to none; the efficacy of which, with respect to all the principal points of faith and obedience, ye experienced with such power of the Holy Ghost, when I was among you, that I need only appeal to your consciences to attest it. 7. Is it reasonable to upbraid me, that, to show I had no mercenary views upon you rich people of Corinth, but merely desired that you might be enriched with the blessings of salvation, I humbled myself to labour for my daily bread, and preached to you for nothing? 8. Nay, in pursuit of my studious concern for your spiritual advantage, I took gifts from other churches, that, for your greater edification, I might minister freely to you. 9. Accordingly, I never complained to you when I was straitened for the necessaries of life, nor became less diligent; for whatever I needed more than what I gained by my own labour, my friends in Macedonia supplied; and as I have preached, so I hope I shall ever preach the gospel to you without putting you to any charge. 10. And this conduct I am so far from being ashamed of, that I reckon it my honour; and I solemnly resolve, that neither reproaches nor kindnesses shall stop my continuance in it among you Christians of Achaia. 11. And I can appeal to God, that this refusing to take subsistence from you is not because I have taken some disgust at you. 12. But I have preached, and will preach, the gospel freely to you, to stop the reproachful revilings of your false teachers, and to induce them to oppress you as little as I do. 13. For whatever they pretend, they are not real apostles of Jesus Christ, sent and commissioned by him, but falsely claim that high character, and deceitfully corrupt the word of God, and serve themselves instead of him. 14. And it is no wonder they labour to impose upon you by specious appearances, when even the devil, their master, often pretends holiness and kindness, in order to perpetrate the greatest mischiefs. 15. It is therefore nothing strange or impracticable that his servants and emissaries should dissemble their true character, as if they were singularly holy, and taught men the of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.

16 I say again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool [x] receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord,[†] but as it were foolishly, in this confidence of boasting.

18 Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly,[‡] seeing ye yourselves are wise.

way of righteousness to eternal life. But God will quickly judge and reward them according to their hypocrisy and wickedness. 16. Considering therefore how these pretenders to apostleship set off themselves to the deceiving of multitudes, I hope that ye will indulge me in a little necessary, though foolish, commendation of myself. 17. I do not pretend any express command or example of Christ in it, but their selfish boasting of themselves, and mean insinuations against me and what I preach, oblige me to cry up myself in their foolish manner. 18. For if they boast of descent from Abraham, or of circumcision and other external privileges, I have as much ground to boast on these heads as any of them. 19. And I hope that ye, who are so wise in your own conceits, and can bear so much with their false and foolish boasting, will bear a little with me. 20. For if they attempt tyrannically to enslave your consciences, and subtilely to make a prey of your substance, and exalting themselves, insolently contemn and abuse you, ye can patiently put up with it all. 21. Let them then invidiously paint me out as a despicable wretch, incapable of apostolic powers and privileges, as they will, I dare boldly compare myself with them in everything worth mentioning. 22. In external Jewish honours, I am a Jew who speak the Hebrew language;—a descendant of Jacob, the prevalent wrestler with God, by his beloved Benjamin;—a descendant of Abraham, the friend of God, to whom and to his seed he promised to be a God in all generations. 23. In the honours of the gospel church, I am a minister of Christ, a distinguished apostle, who have laboured, and suffered more scourging, imprisonment, and imminent dangers of death, in his cause, than any or all of them. 24, 25. Five times the enraged Jews have scourged me, to the utmost degree of severity allowed by their law. At three different times I have been whipped according to the Roman law. At Lystra I was, at the Jews' instigation, stoned by the mob till I was accounted dead. Thrice I have been cast away at sea, and once tossed about a whole day and a night by the waves, lying on a part of the wreck. 26. Great and many have been my labours in preaching the gospel, and great my dangers from floods or rivers in the way.—Often have I been in danger of falling among robbers, who infest the road; of being murdered by Jews or Heathens;—and of being killed by outrageous mobs in cities.—In travelling through desolate places, I have been often in danger of being attacked by ruffians, or devoured by wild beasts, or of falling into other mischiefs.—At other times I have been in danger of perishing by storms, or of being taken by pirates;—or have been insulted, abused, and nearly betrayed, through the treachery of Jews or pretended Christians. 27. In prosecuting my ministerial work, I have undergone the most fatiguing and painful services by day, and been deprived of proper rest and sleep by night. At other times I have been distressed for want of necessary food, and have spent much time in religious fasting. I have been often exposed to the severities of the weather, without sufficient clothing to keep me warm. 28. And besides all these bodily troubles, my anxious and careful concern for the spiritual welfare of all the Christian churches, and my grief on account of their corruptions or calamities, have not a little distressed my mind. 29. For there is not a member of the church, to my knowledge, afflicted in body or mind, or weak in gifts, graces, or attainments, whom I do not sympathize with, and endeavour to relieve. There is none in danger of falling from the faith, hope, or holiness of the gospel, but my heart burns with grief, godly jealousy, and holy zeal, to encourage, confirm, and recover him. 30. But since my enemies make a kind of boasting necessary for me in the present circumstances, I rather choose to glory in the hardships, persecutions, and reproaches, which I have met with to humble me, and afford Jesus Christ an opportunity to manifest his strength in my weakness, than in my high privileges, and the great things which he has done by me. 31. And however ignorant ye be of many of my forementioned trials, or even ready to suspect them as incredible, I dare appeal to the ever-blessed God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose I am, and whom I serve, and who has graciously supported me under, and carried me through them, that I have said nothing but the truth. 32, 33. Nay, I had not long begun to preach the gospel, when the governor, whom Aretas king of Arabia had placed in Damascus, resolved to gratify the Jews in murdering me, and shut up and strictly guarded the city to prevent my escape.—But, by the directing providence of God, my Christian friends let me down from one of their houses, which was on the wall, and thus I got out of their hands, to preach the gospel in other places.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—With great care should ministers endeavour to prevent their hearers being seduced by Satan or his instruments, and to promote their spiritual espousals to Christ. To gain those ends, what temporal claims ought they not to forego! And what labours, dangers, and sufferings, ought they not cheerfully to undergo! The devil and his preachers will turn themselves into diversified shapes in order to deceive men. And it is common for seducers to boast of their piety, learning, labours, and sufferings; yet how insignificant are all when compared with those of a faithful minister of Christ!—Seducers will always love the world in some shape or other, and embrace all opportunities of engrossing its riches, honours, or powers; and the world, in return, will always love its own.

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. In ordinary cases, it is indeed neither proper nor profitable to boast of my privileges and enjoyments; but since your judaizing teachers have, by their reproaches, forced me to it, I shall further add, that I have as much ground to boast of immediate intercourse with God as any of them can pretend to. 2, 3. 3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth,) 4 How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not †lawful for a man to utter.

5 Of such an one will I glory: *yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a [b]thorn in the flesh,‡ the messenger of Satan§ to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

8 For this thing [c]I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, [d]My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities,* in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for *in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing.

14 [h]Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you: for I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And [i]I will very gladly spend and be spent for †you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless, being [k]crafty, I caught you with guile.§

The apostle was right in forbearing to receive their aid, because he acted out of regard to their weakness and his own apostolic disinterestedness; but he admits he did wrong, because, while acting so disorderly, he was depriving them of the superior blessedness which lies in giving rather than in receiving. was in a vision wrapt up to the highest heaven in his apprehensions; but whether his soul was separated from his body, or whether his whole man, soul and body, was carried up, I cannot determine, but must leave the matter to God. 4. But certain I am, that this man had such clear manifestations of the glory of God, such clear, intelligible, and transporting revelations of heavenly things as no words on earth can justly express. 5. Of this man, as so highly dignified, carried out of himself, and favoured with the immediate discoveries of God's glory, I may and will speak honourably; but I will not speak a boasting word concerning myself, except it be of what plainly marks my weakness, and exposes me to the contempt of others, and thus tends to keep me humble, even while, for promoting the ends of my ministry, I seem to vaunt of them. 6. I could mention many other things, in consistence with good sense and strict truth; but I will say no more, either of my sufferings or revelations, lest some of my friends should be tempted to look upon me as more than a man, or greater than I really am. 7. Nay, lest, through the unwatchfulness, vanity, and treachery of my own heart, I should pride myself in these extraordinary revelations, as if I were better than other men, the Lord very graciously permitted Satan and his instruments to afflict me in a very painful and debasing manner. 8. Almost overwhelmed with this trouble, I frequently and earnestly besought the Lord, by solemn prayer, that, if consistent with his will, he would rebuke and restrain the tempter, and deliver me from his violent assaults. 9. And though he did not grant me the very thing which I submissively asked, yet he graciously answered my requests, more to his own honour, and my real advantage, by assuring me, that his favour and love, and the gracious aids and comforts which he would afford me, would be every way sufficient and effectual to support me under, and carry me through, and bring me off with great improvement, victory, and triumph; and that his almighty power should be illustriously manifested in these effects, in proportion to my utter inability to produce them.—In the assured faith of this promise, I will rather rejoice and glory in reproaches, persecutions, and troubles, than be discouraged by, ashamed or afraid of them,—that the all-sufficient power and grace of Jesus Christ, to whom I have committed myself, may surround, cover, and defend me, sanctify my tribulations, and enable me to bear them with all-becoming submission, patience, humility, and hope, and at last bring me out of them more than a conqueror. 10. In this view, I take pleasure in all the afflictions which come upon me for professing and preaching Christ and his gospel; for when, by these means, I most see and feel my own weakness, and appear most contemptible in the eyes of others, I find myself most sensibly strengthened in the Lord, by the influences of his Spirit in my inner man, courageously to bear up under, and obtain glorious victories over them.—11. In mentioning so many things with an air of self-commendation, I have, with reluctance, for the glory of God, the credit of the gospel, and your establishment and edification, done what in other circumstances would have been weak and foolish; but your culpable neglect to do my character justice, according to what ye had experienced under my ministrations, and your taking part with those who reproached me, made it necessary: for I appeal to your consciences, if, by the grace of God, I did not, however insignificant in myself, in conversation, sufferings, ministrations, miracles, and success, far exceed any of your new preachers, and even equal Peter, or any other of Christ's apostles. 12. The unquestionable marks of a true apostle of Christ have been manifest in my ministrations among you, in my patience and meekness under my labours and sufferings, and in the miraculous operations and marvellous success which attended them. 13. Have not ye yourselves, by my ministry, been enriched with all spiritual gifts and privileges as much as any other Christian church, whether planted by me or by any other apostle? Wherein have I been wanting to you; unless that, for your benefit, and the honour of the gospel, I took no maintenance from you? and if ye will have this to be a wrong done to you, or to any other church, I hope ye may easily forgive it.—14. I have now thrice intended and prepared to make you a visit. The first time I had the pleasure of accomplishing my purpose, and planted the gospel among you. On the second occasion, I deferred my coming till it might better promote your honour and comfort. And now, when, for the third time, I am prepared to come, I am determined to give you my labours freely;—for I do not aim at procuring your temporal good things for myself, but at edifying and saving your souls. Since I have been instrumental in begetting you to Christ by the gospel, I resolve, like a parent, to exert myself to the utmost for your spiritual benefit, without expecting a reward of your worldly substance. 15. I could be glad to spend my time, strength, and labour, and all my temporal ease, honour, and advantages, or even to wear out my life itself, for the good of your souls, even though I were to be slighted, reproached, and abused, by you in proportion to my kindness to you. 16. Your new preachers, indeed, pretend, that though I took nothing from you myself, I hereby craftily decoyed you to give more liberally to my partners. 17. But I dare appeal to yourselves, if there is the least evidence that I ever made the least advantage of you for myself by means of any of my brethren, whom I sent to promote your comfort, rectify your disorders, and excite your charity to the poor saints in Judea. 18. I appeal to you, if Titus, or the respectable brother who attended him, took anything, either for their own labours or my subsistence, and if we did not all act upon the same disinterested plan to promote your spiritual welfare. 19. Nay, as a believer in, and apostle of Christ, I can appeal to the all-seeing God, that I did not send them to make any apology for me or my faithful brethren, or to excuse the delay of my visiting you;—but that all my conduct towards you has been intended to support my apostolic authority, in order that my ministrations might the more effectually promote your edification. 20, 21. I formerly hinted, I am much afraid, that when I shall pay you my intended visit, I shall not find you so orderly and obedient to the authority of Christ in me as I wish, and that I shall be obliged to exercise my power in a manner more severe than ye will relish. I fear lest, through hearkening to seducers, there should be among you fierce and uncharitable disputes, envious tempers and talkers, warm and angry passions, carnal contentions, and revilings of others behind their backs, proud haughty boastings, and disdainful insults, and a tumultuous carriage towards one another;—and lest my gracious God and Master should call me not to glory of you, or rejoice in beholding your faith and order, but to shame and grief, on account of Christ being so much dishonoured, and my labours so much lost among you;—and sharply to censure such as I find continuing impenitent in their scandalous sins.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—Great are the changes which take place in the comforts and troubles of saints. God often lifts them up, and casts them down again. The most ravishing manifestations are succeeded by sharp and fearful trials and temptations: but all is necessary to keep down pride and animate fervent prayer. And though God does not always answer the prayers of his people as they wish, he always does it in that manner which is best calculated to promote their spiritual benefit. If he secure to us his own powerful presence and grace, we may well glory in troubles, as giving him opportunities to perform his promises. And it is delightful to see the greatest ministers the most humble, and behaving in the most prudent and self-denying manner, in order to turn souls to Christ. But how shameful is it for people to break the hearts of their faithful and successful ministers, by reproaches and impenitent continuance in scandalous enormities! And with deep impressions of the dishonour done to God and hurt to souls, ought the unruly to be warned, and offenders to be censured.

CHAP. XIII.—Ver. 1, 2. As I am now for the third time preparing to visit you, ye may be assured, that, if I find any obstinately scandalous notwithstanding my former admonitions, I will immediately proceed against them with high and solemn censures; 3. And that, in vindication of my sacred office, and for the honour of Christ, of whose commission to me, and speaking and acting in me, some of you insolently demand a proof,—yet whose working by me to youward has not been weak, but with mighty power and energy, in your effectual conversion, and in the gifts and graces bestowed on you, and miracles wrought among you, and in inflicting sickness and death on some of your disorderly walkers. 4. For though, through the weakness of his manhood and voluntary subjection to death, he was crucified, as if merely a weak and mortal creature; yet by virtue of his own and his Father's divine power, he rose from the dead, and now lives in his exalted state, to exercise all authority in heaven and on earth: even so we, his faithful servants, are, in the opinion of our adversaries, weak and contemptible, and are exposed to manifold sufferings for his sake; but, connected with him, we show, by the same power, in remarkable effects, that the life of our risen Redeemer animates us in our vigorous actings towards you, and that, in due time, we shall live and reign with him in glory. 5. Instead therefore of censuring and reproaching me and my faithful brethren, Timotheus, Sosthenes, or others, seriously and thoroughly examine your own hearts and practices, by the standard and touchstone of God's word, whether, from a principle of faith implanted in your hearts by the Holy Ghost, ye really believe in Christ, and live on him through the word of the gospel. What! amidst all your pretences to knowledge, and all your contentions and disputes, are ye strangers to what has passed between God and your own souls, and to your state, condition, and behaviour, before him? Know ye not, that if Jesus Christ, the only Saviour, does not dwell in your hearts by faith, with powerful influence and dominion, ye are but mere hypocrites, and very unfit for the approbation of God? 6. But whatever ye may prove upon trial, I hope that, by the power and gracious influence of Christ, ye shall have full evidence of his owning us as true believers and faithful ministers of the gospel. 7. Yea, my earnest prayer to God for you is, that ye may be preserved and reclaimed from every evil way. For I would gladly be without the opportunity of exercising my apostolic powers against scandalous persons, even though some should thence take occasion to suspect me, as disapproved of God, and destitute of such power. 8. I have neither inclination nor authority to do anything but what is right and fit, nor to do anything against them that walk orderly according to the gospel, any more than against the gospel itself; but am only authorized and inclined to reclaim backsliders, and to encourage and promote your soundness in the faith, and integrity in heart and life. 9. Gladly would I, by your repentance and reformation, be entirely restrained from severe censures: happy should I be, were ye so strong in faith and holiness, as to need no reproof; and that all things in the state of your church, the temper of your soul, and course of your life, were brought to the highest perfection. 10. It is with these kind views that I have wrote you these warnings, cautions, advices, and encouragements, that when I come, I may not be obliged to make use of any awful methods, in exercising that authority which Christ has given me for establishing and increasing the faith, comfort, holiness, and order of his church; and not for the hurt, discouragement, or final destruction of any member of it. 11, 12. But to conclude; may all prosperity and happiness attend you, whom I esteem as my brethren in Christ! Rectify everything amiss or disjointed in your church, heart, or practice. Encourage yourselves, and one another, in the Lord your God; and labour to do whatever is truly excellent, that ye may be filled with the joys of faith and of a good conscience. Unite heartily in your views of gospel truths, in your zeal to promote their influence, and in a Christian temper one towards another. Study what makes for peace and brotherly love, that there may be no more party strifes and angry contentions and schisms among you:—and in an attention to these things, ye may expect that God, the Fountain, Author, Giver, Commander, and Supreme approver, of all love and peace, will take up his gracious and complacential abode with you, manifest his special favour to you, and bestow his best blessings upon you:—in token of which, let even your common salutations be truly chaste, holy, and affectionate. 13. To set you an example of mutual kindness and respect, all the holy brethren here send you their most affectionate salutations, wishing above all things that your souls may prosper. 14. And for this end, as well as to mark my apostolic authority, and testify my respect to you, I conclude with solemnly blessing you in the name of the Lord. May the free favour, gracious presence, and influence of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whose merits and mediation all spiritual and eternal blessings are procured and conveyed to men;—may the self-moving love of God the Father, which is the original source of all new covenant blessings;—and may the richest communications of the Holy Ghost, by whom these blessings are effectually applied, and we are brought into peculiar fellowship with the Father and Son, and into a participation of their love and grace in all their happy effects—be continually with and abound towards you as a church, and every individual member of it!

Reflections upon Chap. XIII.—Professed Christians are often more given to censure and reproach their neighbours, and especially their ministers, than to try and know themselves. But very important is the certain knowledge whether we be really united to, and hold fellowship with, Jesus Christ by faith: and it is shameful for us to live ignorant of it. It is very desirable that offending church members should be reclaimed by gentle methods. But if they continue obstinate, they must be sharply dealt with to bring them to repentance. What an honour is it for ministers to employ all their power, care, and labour, to promote the edification and comfort of souls! It is only for this purpose they received their authority and commission from Christ: and if he approve them they need care the less what men think of them. If in conformity to him, and for his sake, they be exposed to suffering and death, it is enough if he support and crown them with a share in his glory. Happy is the church whose members, under the gracious influence of a reconciled God, live together in unity of sentiment and affection, and who hold distinct and intimate communion with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. And transcendently wonderful is it, and ravishingly sweet, that these divine Persons should so harmoniously concur in unceasing mercy and grace to mean and sinful men.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

"The most remarkable circumstance in this epistle is, the confidence of the apostle in the goodness of his cause, and in the power of God to bear him out in it." He was evidently opposed by a powerful faction who rejected his apostolic authority. Yet, with the utmost intrepidity, he appeals to the miraculous works he had done in presence of his opponents, and to the gifts he had instrumentally conferred on the people, whom his opponents (whom he boldly denominates false apostles, and agents of Satan,) were endeavouring to turn against him.

It cannot be denied that divisions in the churches of Christ are deeply to be deplored; for they are the evidence, at once, both of Satan's working and success. Still out of every evil the Lord can extract good: and here there is furnished an incontestible evidence both of the apostle's integrity and divine inspiration. Had there been anything hollow or rotten in the principles of the apostle—had there been any imposture to be detected or exposed—this conflict of parties—this terrible assault of the apostle, must have provoked his adversaries to the disclosure. Nothing, however, of the kind appears. His miraculous powers could not be denied; and, upon that head at least, opposition was hushed into silence. He visited Corinth again as he had originally purposed (Acts 20. 2, 3); was received as an apostle; remained for several months; and had the contributions for the saints at Jerusalem brought to him from the surrounding districts, (Rom. 15. 26). Of the false teachers no more is heard—their memory and their name are blotted out; and this epistle abides, a monument of apostolic integrity and courage, and an additional and irresistible evidence that Christianity is no "cunningly devised fable."—Ed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE GALATIANS.

Galatia was a province in the north-east of Lesser Asia. Here, as in many other places, the apostles had scarcely planted the gospel of Christ, when some judaizing teachers contended that the Gentile converts should be circumcised, as a token of their obligation to fulfil the whole law of Moses, in order to their justification before God; and as Paul's instructions greatly thwarted their schemes, they insinuated that he had no apostolic authority. To confute these pretensions is the scope of this epistle. Here Paul (1) Represents his apostolic authority as in nothing inferior to that of Peter, or any other apostle; chap. i; and ii. 1—15. (2) Reprehends the Galatians for their sudden apostasy from the faith of the gospel, and establishes the doctrine of justification by faith in the imputed righteousness of Christ; chap. i. 6—9; ii. 16—21; iii, iv. (3) Directs to the right improvement of the doctrines and privileges of gospel grace; chap. v, vi.

[The Galatians or Gallo-Grecians, were the descendants of a colony of Gauls or Celts, who migrated from their own country under Brennius, and, after a series of disasters, obtained possession of a considerable district of Western Asia, to which they gave the name of Galatia. They are represented by historians as a tall, athletic, and warlike people, who went nearly naked, and used for arms merely a buckler and sword; and who, by the impetuosity of their attack, were nearly irresistible. Before their conversion to Christianity, their religion was so corrupt and superstitious, that they are said to have offered human sacrifices of the prisoners taken in war. They spoke the Greek language in common with all the inhabitants of Western Asia; but, according to Jerome, retained their original Celtic also down to the fifth century.

Among this semi-barbarous people, it appears that Paul planted, not one, but several churches (Acts xvi. 6, and xviii. 23); and, being now a prisoner at Rome (chap. vi. 17), some false apostles had, after his departure, seduced his converts from the simplicity of the gospel, and persuaded them to conjoin with it the observance of the Jewish ceremonies as necessary to salvation (chap. vi. 13); that justification was a compound of faith and works (chap. iii. 2, and iv. 21); that Paul was no authorized apostle, and, (as may be inferred from chap. ii. 9,) in no wise to be compared with others who had seen Christ in the flesh. Under these circumstances the apostle wrote this epistle, wherein he labours to counteract these "deceitful workers," and their false doctrines, and to bring the Galatians back to the perception and acknowledgment of the simplicity of the gospel. This he endeavours to effect, (1) By asserting the authority of his apostleship, and the truth of the gospel he had preached (chap. i; and ii. to ver. 15). (2) By illustrating and vindicating the true doctrine of justification by faith, proving the temporary character of the Levitical institutions and of the entire legal dispensation, to the end of chap. iv. (3) By instructing his converts how to use their Christian liberty, and pressing upon them the necessity of exterminating the lusts of the flesh, and of cultivating the fruit of the Spirit.—Ed.]

8 But [k]though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you [l]than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For [m]do I now persuade men, or God?† or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 But I certify you, brethren, [n]that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man:

12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that [o]beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted* it;

14 [p]And profited in the Jews' religion above many my [t]equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

15 But when it pleased God, who [q]separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

16 To reveal his Son in me,‡ that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia,§ and returned again unto Damascus.

18 Then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1. Whatever your false teachers suggest to the contrary, I avow myself an inspired messenger of Jesus Christ, appointed to plant Christian churches in the world,—who indeed have received my commission by the instrumentality of no man, but immediately from Christ himself, and by the express commandment of God, who raised him up from the dead, in testimony of his having completely satisfied the demands of the broken law, and brought in an everlasting righteousness for the justification of all that believe in him. 2, 3. And with the hearty consent of my fellow-preachers and Christians here, I send this admonitory letter to your lately planted, and yet sadly degenerated Christian assemblies in Galatia,—earnestly wishing that the riches of his free, undeserved, and forfeited favour, may be extended to you; and all the blessings of spiritual peace and prosperity be bestowed upon you from God the Father, the first mover in the whole method of our redemption, and from Jesus Christ, the only Mediator between God and men, and the purchaser and dispenser of all the benefits of grace and glory to us. 4. Who in his infinite condescension and love, freely surrendered his soul and body, as personally united to his divine nature, to be an atoning sacrifice for our sins, who deserved nothing but eternal destruction; that by his righteousness as the price, and by his power as the efficient cause, he might pluck us as brands out of the burning, and rescue us from the men, the vanities, sins, and tribulations of this evil world, and from all the dangerous snares and depraved customs of this present age, and even from the now exceedingly corrupted Jewish constitution, and in due time transport us to the heavenly state; and all according to the eternal appointment and good pleasure of God our reconciled Father in him, who, on his account, loves and deals with us as his children; 5. To whom be all possible and highly exalted honour, glory, and praise, through all the ages of time or eternity, for his unparalleled work of redemption, in which infinite wisdom, power, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth, shine forth with the most united and endearing lustre.—6. When I reflect on the delightful and transcendent glory of this scheme of salvation, and on its suitableness, high importance, and absolute necessity, to lost sinners, I cannot but be amazed, and pained to hear, that some of you, who but so lately were instructed in the truths of the gospel, and seemed to receive them into your hearts, should be already carried away in your sentiments, affections, and practice, not only from me, who was instrumental in calling you to the fellowship of the gospel, but from God and Christ, who by me called you to partake of all the gracious benefits of redemption, which are discovered and freely offered in the gospel; and that even to quite another system of doctrine, representing the justification of sinners as, at least in part, by the works of the law; 7. Which indeed really is no gospel, no glad tidings of acceptance and salvation at all, as it represents them obtainable only upon impracticable and impossible terms; but your judaizing teachers, who are verily a plague to you, set themselves to overturn that blessed gospel, of which Jesus Christ is the author, subject, and end, and to transform it into a new covenant of works, in which our own obedience must be the necessary condition of justification and eternal life; and they even pretend that Peter and other apostles are of their mind. 8. But I am bold to aver, that if any apostle, or even an angel from heaven, could preach to you any other system of doctrine, relative to the salvation of sinful men, contrary to, or even different from, that which I, by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, delivered to you, he should, as an accursed person, be rejected of God, and devoted to eternal destruction. 9. I deliberately and solemnly repeat it, as a matter of infinite importance, and infallible certainty, that if any man or angel preach any other scheme of doctrine concerning the salvation of sinful men, than what ye, when I was among you, professed to receive in faith and love, he is to be disdained and rejected, as one abandoned by God, and richly deserving of excommunication, nay, of everlasting damnation. 10. Can you imagine, that after being so long converted and employed in the ministry, and suffering so many things for Christ, my great aim is to persuade people to embrace the doctrines of men rather than the gospel of God, or to ingratiate myself with the Jewish zealots, or any others of mankind? No; I abhor the thought. Did I, as in the days of my unregeneracy, seek the favour of men, and study to serve their corrupt humours or designs, I had never enlisted in the service of Christ, nor could I be his faithful servant, as I profess and labour to be. 11. And by all the signs of apostleship, I manifest that the gospel of men's salvation, through the imputed righteousness of Christ, which I have constantly preached, is neither formed according to the natural taste or tempers of men, nor originates from their authority, contrivance, or dictates, nor tends to promote their carnal honours or interests. 12. For I neither received my knowledge of it, nor my commission to preach it, by the instrumentality of apostles, or any other mere men, but by immediate revelation from Jesus Christ, God-man, some time after his exaltation to his heavenly kingdom. 13, 14. For ye cannot but have heard that I was once a furious zealot for the Jewish manner of worship, and outrageously persecuted the Christians, and compelled them to renounce their Lord, under pain of imprisonment, banishment, or death; and that, having an uncommon knowledge of the Jewish rites and ceremonies, I observed them with the greatest strictness, and with uncommon zeal propagated them everywhere. 15, 16. It cannot therefore be supposed, that without some extraordinary call and influence, I should abandon my darling and deep-rooted sentiments, tempers, and manner of life, to embrace Christ and the gospel, in direct opposition thereto, and to all my secular interests; but when God, who, of his mere good pleasure, without regard to any foreseen merit of mine, had set me apart to his service before I was born, did, by an extraordinary miraculous appearance and voice from heaven, and by a powerful and efficacious illumination on my heart, make to me a clear and full discovery of Jesus Christ, his dear Son, in all the glory of his person, offices, relations, righteousness, and grace,—that I might know and embrace him for the salvation of my own soul, and preach him to Gentiles as well as Jews,—I did not stand to consult the inclinations, ease, or comfort of my outward man, nor the dictates of human policy, relative to honour, interest, reproach, or danger; nor did I advise with any mortal about my duty, which was so plainly prescribed me by God; 17. Neither did I so much as go up to Jerusalem to receive further instructions or authority from them that had been called to the apostleship before me;—but, fully satisfied with the instructions and commission which I had immediately received from Christ, I began to preach the gospel at Damascus in Syria, where I had been converted and called. Thence I went into the adjacent parts of Arabia, and preached it, where no apostles had ever been, and where I had no opportunity of conversing with them; and thence I returned back to Damascus. 18, 19. Three years after my conversion I took a journey to Jerusalem, not to receive any further instruction or commission, but merely to make a brotherly visit to Peter, that great apostle of the Jewish converts, that we might confer together of what the Lord had done by our ministrations. And being introduced by Barnabas, I was readily received as a faithful minister of Christ, and abode with him about fifteen days, without seeing any other of the apostles except James the Less, a kinsman of our Lord according to the flesh. Thus I received no instruction nor commission from the apostolic college there. 20. And as these hints are of great importance for vindicating my doctrine and authority, which have been traduced among you, I solemnly appeal to God himself, who knows all things, and to whom I must give a final account, that all 10 [l]Only they would that we should remember the poor; [†] the same which I also was forward to do.

11 But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

that I have said is strictly true. 21. Returning from Jerusalem, I travelled northward into the provinces of Syria and Cilicia, attended by some brethren from Jerusalem as far as Cesarea, from whence I was sent to Tarsus, in Cilicia, my native city. 22. But all this time I remained personally unknown to most of the Christian assemblies in Judea, which had joined together in the faith and fellowship of the gospel before me, and so could receive neither instruction nor commission from them. 23. All that they knew concerning me was, that Saul, the furious persecutor of Christians, had become a noted preacher of that very gospel which he had before laboured to suppress, and a helper of that very faith for which he had endeavoured to destroy others;—24. Which made them heartily praise and thank God for his marvellous grace to me the chief of sinners, and for the rich advantages that accrued to the church by my remarkable conversion.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—With entire satisfaction may we receive the gospel delivered by the apostles, since they received it immediately from Christ. And delightfully, jointly and equally, all church authority and spiritual blessings proceed from him and his Father. Infinitely important and beneficial is his death for us: and his resurrection clearly manifests the acceptableness and efficacy of it. And what deliverance from sin, Satan, and an evil world, and what grace and peace may we not pray and hope for through it? It is detestable and dangerous to apostatize from, or pervert the gospel of Christ. And it is no wonder that the doctrine of men's justification by their own works never reforms the world, but increases unto more ungodliness, when it has the curse of God lying on it and its preachers. Ministers have need to be faithful in declaring the truths of God without regard to any carnal consideration. And no man nor minister can at once please Christ and the world,—serve God and mammon. Astonishing are the effects of God's grace on the hearts of sinners. Effectually it enlightens the ignorant, attracts the perverse, subdues the obstinately furious, and renders Jesus' inveterate enemies his loving friends and faithful servants. And it is a great comfort distinctly to perceive and feel its operations, and for Christians to hear of its going forth conquering and to conquer.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. Then fourteen years after, I and Barnabas went up to Jerusalem, taking Titus along with us. 2. But I went up, not to be instructed or confirmed in my office, but as a deputy from the church of Antioch to the synod which met at Jerusalem, to determine whether the circumcision of the believing Gentiles was necessary to their salvation or not. And this I did by special direction from God, to maintain the truth and purity of the gospel as he had revealed it to me; and was so far from receiving the gospel from the apostles there, that I explained it to them as I had preached it among the Gentiles, and declared what success it had obtained. This I at first did, only in a more private manner, to the principal preachers there assembled, lest, if I had given a full and plain account of it to the Christians in general, the judaizing party might have raised such furious clamours against me, as to have rendered my earnest ministrations less acceptable even to the Gentiles. 3. But to manifest how steadfastly I adhered to my principles relative to the freedom of the gospel state, and how far I was from giving the least countenance to the supposed necessity of observing the law of Moses, as a condition of justification before God, Titus, who was a Gentile, was admitted as a minister of Christ, and a member of the synod, without ever being circumcised. 4. I even took this uncircumcised minister of Christ along with me to the synod, that I might bear a public testimony against the doctrine of the pharisaical preachers, who, coming from Judea, had insinuated themselves among the converts at Antioch, that, under colour of Christian brethren, they might have the better opportunity of narrowly inspecting our principles and conduct, and of cavilling at that holy freedom from ceremonies which Christ has given us under the gospel, and of imposing circumcision and other abolished ceremonies on the church.—5. This conduct of theirs, being not a mere weakness or honestly-conceived prejudice, but a wicked attempt to reduce believers under the covenant of works, and to rob the Gentiles of the true gospel of Christ, I and Barnabas refused to yield to them in the least. 6. And let Peter, James, and John, be as great as they will, it is certain that their call, powers, and success, were wholly owing to the sovereign pleasure and free grace of God as well as mine; and that, in my conference with them, I received no correction or instruction touching either my doctrine or conduct. 7. But from the account which I and Barnabas gave them, they with great joy observed that I had been called by Christ to preach the gospel to the uncircumcised Gentiles, even as Peter preached it to the circumcised Jews. 8. For it appeared that manifold miraculous and gracious operations had manifested and confirmed my apostolic mission to the Gentiles, as well as his to the Jews. 9. And when Peter, James, and John, whom I, as well as mine enemies, account principal supporters, maintainers, and defenders of the church and truths of the gospel, saw how God had graciously qualified, called, and owned me in my ministrations, they, in the most express and affectionate manner, acknowledged me and Barnabas as their fellow-apostles, and agreed that we should principally preach the gospel to the Gentiles, while they did the same to the Jews. 10. The only request they made was, that we should stir up the Gentiles to make charitable contributions for the relief of the poor Jewish Christians, which was a work so compassionate, laudable, and necessary, that, though they had not mentioned it, my natural affection to my countrymen, my impartial love to Christ's indigent members, and my looking on the Gentiles as debtors to the Jews, from whom they received the gospel, had made me forward to engage in it. 11. But when Peter, some time after, came to Antioch in Syria, where the first noted church of Gentile Christians was formed, and from which I and Barnabas had been sent to the synod at Jerusalem, for a determination concerning the necessity of circumcising the Gentile converts, and had received an answer in the negative, I, knowing myself to be in no respect his inferior in office, sharply and publicly rebuked him for his offensively acting contrary to the principles which he had avowed in the synod. 12. For though, at his first coming to Antioch, he, according to his gospel liberty, freely conversed, and familiarly ate and drank with the believing Gentiles; yet when some judaizing zealots came thither from Jerusalem, he, for fear 13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the gospel, [q] I said unto Peter before them all, [m] If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles,

16 [n] Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.[†]

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners,[‡] is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

[§] Or, so great.

O FOOLISH Galatians, who hath [a] bewitched[*] you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes [b] Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth,[†] crucified among you?

2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye [c] the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

of offending them, withdrew from the Gentile converts, and declined all familiar converse with them; 13. Which when the Jewish Christians at Antioch, who had almost got over all their prejudices against the uncircumcised believers, observed, misled by his example, they also refrained from their wonted familiarity with them; and even Barnabas, a noted Christian, and my fellow apostle of the Gentiles, was, contrary to his own judgment, infected with their dissimulation. 14. But when I saw their conduct quite contrary to the simplicity and godly sincerity of the Christian religion, and the true spirit and design of the gospel doctrine of justification by Christ alone, filled with holy indignation, I solemnly interrogated Peter, as their ringleader, before the whole church,—how he, who, though a Jew, made no scruple on some occasions to converse familiarly with the Gentiles, and conform himself to their innocent customs, without any regard to the ceremonial law, could, in consistence with Christian sincerity, at this time, through a slavish fear of the Jews, practically seduce the Gentile believers into religious observance of the abolished Jewish ceremonies?—15. And how contrary was this to the truth of the gospel;—for Peter, Barnabas, I, and other Christians, who were by birth Jews, devoted to God, and who were trained up under the obligations of the Mosaic law, and not Gentiles, strangers to the law, and looked upon as profligate sinners. 16. Being fully convinced that no man can be acquitted from condemnation, and accepted by God as righteous, on account of his own sufferings or obedience to the covenant of works, but only on account of that perfect righteousness which Christ fulfilled in our stead, imputed to us, and received by faith alone,—have therefore believed in Christ as our only Saviour, that through our receiving and resting on him alone for our salvation, we might be justified unto eternal life;—and indeed the strict and extensive demands of God's law, and the manifold defects found in the best, render it absolutely impossible for any man, whether Jew or Gentile, to be justified by any personal righteousness of his own. 17. Now if, while we thus seek justification through the imputed righteousness of Christ, received by faith alone, we continue under the law as accursed sinners, or live as persons under the power of sin, we practically represent Christ, and his method of salvation, as leaving us under the curse and dominion of sin, and as encouraging us to practise wickedness. 18. Or if, after so earnestly renouncing the righteousness of the law for justification before God, I should again attempt to establish the method of justification by the works of the law in my doctrine or practice, I could not but grievously offend God, frustrate my own believing in Christ, and reduce myself to a state of guilt and condemnation. 19. And nothing can be more contrary to my inclination; for, by my knowledge and experience of the spirituality, extent, and strictness of the law, as a covenant of works, I am deeply convinced of my own sinfulness, and have lost all hope and desire to be justified by my own righteousness; and, by the grace of God, I am fully delivered from the broken law, that I might live in a state of favour with God, through the righteousness of his Son; and that, being divorced from the covenant of works as my first husband, and married to Christ, I might live upon better principles, to better ends, and under new obligations, in all holiness and righteousness according to the law, and to the glory of God, as my reconciled Father in Christ. 20. For having in Jesus Christ my Surety fully satisfied all the demands of this broken covenant of works, I am thereby dead to it, and it to me. Nevertheless, I am brought into a state of justification unto life, and thereby enabled to bring forth living fruits of righteousness: yet this life of justification and sanctification is not owing to anything in me, but only to Christ, who, by virtue of my spiritual union to him, lives in me, as a Head of righteousness and sanctifying influence;—and the life of pardon, acceptance, and holiness, which I live in the body, is not by the works of the law, nor after the dictates of carnal lusts, but only by that faith which carries me out of myself in every respect to the eternal Son of God, relying entirely on him, and deriving all vital influence from him,—who, in the greatness of his endearing, unparalleled, and distinguishing mercy and grace, without any desert in me, loved me, and freely gave up himself to obey the law and satisfy justice in my stead, that he might redeem me from sin and all the fearful consequences of it, and bring me to eternal life. 21. In this conduct I adhere closely to my evangelical principles, not daring ungratefully to despise or reject the gospel of grace, the love of Christ, or the free favour of God, in giving him for and to us, as they do who plead for justification by the works of the law; for if righteousness, entitling to eternal life, come by our obedience to the law in any form, then Christ's obedience and sufferings were not necessary for our justification, and must be insufficient for it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—With remarkable prudence must the gospel, even in its light and glory, be gradually and seasonably communicated. Persons of note in the church must sometimes be first addressed, that it may have the easier access into the prejudiced minds of others. Ministers have need to adhere firmly to their evangelical principles, and boldly to support the true dignity of their office. And it is comely when they highly esteem and dearly love one another, and are ready to assist each other, and when they are careful for the poor, even such as are prejudiced against them. Alas, how easily the best and greatest of men may be decoyed from their religious integrity if left to themselves! And dangerous are the examples of eminent saints when they take a wrong turn. No man's character, however great, can justly exempt him from deserved public rebuke. With care, earnestness, and accuracy, ought ministers to contend for the pure doctrine of justification through Christ's imputed righteousness, without the works of the law. And happy are they who understand it in their own experience! What a heaven upon earth it is to view ourselves delivered from the law as a covenant, and to find Christ's crucifixion for us, and dwelling in us, issuing in a life of holiness and fellowship with God through faith! But infinitely dangerous and criminal is it to apostatize from the truth, or to attempt to render the redeeming grace of God and death of Christ unprofitable and useless.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. Ye thoughtless and inconsiderate Galatians, let me, with the most tender compassion to your souls, and holy zeal for the purity of the gospel, ask you, By what artful insinuations and stratagems has Satan or your false teachers, his instruments, so far infatuated and decoyed you from your adherence to the gospel doctrine of justification through the imputed righteousness of Christ, who, in his expiatory sufferings and death, has been set before you in his ordinances in the most plain, distinct, and affecting manner? 2. Were ye made partakers of the Holy Ghost, either in his miraculous gifts, or gracious inhabitation and influences, by the ministration of the law, and by your obedience to it? Or was it not by hearing and embracing the doctrine of faith in Christ alone for justification and complete salvation? 3. Since then ye certainly received him before many of you so much as heard of the law of Moses, and had set out in your Christian course under his light and direction, and in the exercise of faith in him for your justifying righteousness, how absurd is it to attempt finishing your religion in seeking justification by sinful performances, carnal observances, or anything correspondent to your carnal wisdom or pride! 4. After ye have suffered so much 5 He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6 [d] Even as Abraham believed God, and it was [*] accounted to him for righteousness.[†]

7 Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

8 And the scripture, foreseeing[‡] that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, [e] In thee shall all nations be blessed.

9 So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law[§] are under the curse: for it is written, [f] Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

11 But [g] that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, [h] The just shall live by faith.

12 And [i] the law is not of faith;[‖] but, [k] The man that doeth them shall live in them.

13 [l] Christ hath redeemed[*] us from the curse of the law,[†] being made a curse[‡] for us: for it is written, [m] Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree;

14 [n] That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's [*] covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now [o] to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.

17 And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, [p] the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that [q] it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

19 Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions,[†] till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained[‡] by angels in the hand of a mediator.

20 Now, a mediator is not a mediator of one: but God is one.[§]

21 Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life,

§ God is one.—Winer affirms that there are 250 different interpretations of this difficult passage. But in this difficulty the volume of revelation resembles the volume of nature, having many things plain to the weakest capacity, but many things "hard to be understood," even by the most learned. The passage may be paraphrased as follows: —A mediator in a covenant is not the representative of one party only. Moses, therefore, as mediator of the Sinai covenant, did not represent Israel alone, but God also; for as there was a mediator, God must have been one of the parties to that covenant. But as God was one of the parties, and as he changeth not, therefore, the covenant of doing and living, made at Sinai, could not, at the end of 430 years after, change, abrogate, or disannul, that covenant of promise to believers, which he had confirmed in Christ the Mediator between God as the one party, and Abraham and the Gentiles (given to Christ) as the other. 1 Tim. 2. 5. persecution and reproach from your Jewish neighbours for professing the doctrine of justification through his righteousness alone, without any obedience of yours to the law, ceremonial or moral, will ye, by your apostasy, prove all your professions and sufferings perfectly absurd and groundless? 5. Did Christ, by my ministrations, communicate to you your gifts and graces, or work the miracles attesting my mission and doctrine, through my preaching, or your performing the works of the law, in order to your justification before God? Or were they not rather conferred upon you by means of your hearing and embracing the doctrine of faith in Christ? —And was not this God's testimony, that your justification is in no respect owing to the works of the law, but only to Christ and his righteousness? 6. Even as Abraham, that eminent pattern of believers, gave credit to, and trusted upon God's promise of the Messiah; and what he believed and apprehended in the promised Saviour was imputed to him for his justifying righteousness. 7. Know therefore that all true believers in Christ, according to the promise, are, in a spiritual sense, the children of Abraham, whom God owns and accepts as such, that they may be blessed together with him. 8. And to manifest that there is but one method of justification of sinners to eternal life, the Holy Ghost, who know the whole purpose of God relative to the Gentiles, intimated to Abraham, long before either circumcision or any Mosaic ceremonies were instituted, that, through the obedience and sufferings of his seed, the Messiah, all nations, Jews or Gentiles, should be justified and blessed with all spiritual blessings. 9. From whence it is evident, that all men, of whatever nation or rank they be, who are partakers of a true and lively faith in Christ, and seek justification on his account, are blessed with the same blessings, and on the same foundation of imputed righteousness, as Abraham, that celebrated believer and friend of God; 10. And that this cannot be on account of their personal obedience to the law is evident;—for all men being sinners, as many of them as remain under the covenant of works, and seek justification by their own righteousness, are fixed under the curse of God, who has expressly declared every person of mankind by law condemned to everlasting punishment, who does not personally, universally, perfectly, and perpetually, in thought, word, and deed, bear, observe, and perform whatever is demanded by his law. 11. And that no man can be justified by his own personal obedience to this law as a covenant, is further evident from God's appointment of another method of justification, in his declaring that the man who becomes righteous by faith enters into, and continues in, a state of life and salvation, and, by means of faith exercised on Christ, lives in favour, and fellowship with, and conformity to, God here and hereafter. 12. Now it is certain that the method of justification, prescribed by the law, is not of faith, but by personal, perfect, and perpetual obedience to the whole of its demands. 13. Therefore, according to these terms, none can procure himself justification, or even freedom from the condemnatory sentence of the law,—but Christ, in his infinite love, has redeemed us out of the hands of offended justice, and from all the condemnation and misery incurred by our sins, by taking them upon himself, and bearing them in our stead, particularly while he hung on the cross as a most execrable offender, forsaken by God, and devoted to death. 14. And this he did, that, instead of the curse being executed upon us, according to our deserts, we Gentiles might in him be blessed with the free justification, and other spiritual blessings conferred upon, and promised to, Abraham and his spiritual seed; and, as well as the Jews, receive, through faith in him, a plentiful communication of the Holy Ghost, as the pledge, token, and earnest of our eternal inheritance. 15. To illustrate this point by a common and familiar similitude, we know, from the very nature of a covenant of promise, like that made with Abraham, that, if it be but an engagement made by short-sighted and changeable men, yet, if it be duly ratified, signed, and sealed, none can either disannul, alter, or add to it. 16. Now to Abraham, and to his spiritual seed, were the promises made by the all-knowing and unchangeable God, who cannot lie: and to show that these were directed to one particular sort of seed, God did not use therein the term SEEDS, as if all his posterity, natural and spiritual, had been meant, but SEED, by which he signified his spiritual seed, and primarily Christ their mystical Head. 17. Now this covenant being made with, and relating to Christ, to be fulfilled and confirmed in his incarnation, obedience, and death,—and being confirmed by the repeated promise and oath of an unchangeable God, and by the seal of circumcision,—the law of Moses, which was not given till about 430 years after, cannot, in any consistency with the wisdom or faithfulness of God, make void, or disannul it, in order to introduce another method of justification and salvation. 18. And this plainly manifests that a right or title to eternal life cannot be obtained by the works of the law, but only by faith in Christ; for if a title to the heavenly inheritance, typified by the promised earthly Canaan, could be obtained by our obedience to the law, it could not be the matter of a free promise,—grace and works being, in this view, quite eversive the one of the other: but it is manifest that God gave it to Abraham and his seed, not through the law, but by an absolutely gracious and free promise, through the righteousness of faith, that it might be free to all the seed. 19. And the law of Moses was annexed to this gracious promise, not to bring in a new method of justification, but to be a mean of restraining sin, and convincing men of their pollution and danger, and of their absolute need of free justification in Christ, in whom Jews and Gentiles should be united,—and to cause them to look for him, the promised seed, as the end of the law, for righteousness to every one that believeth. Nor was even this law, like the promise to Abraham and his seed, given immediately by God himself, but was conveyed by the ministry of angels into the hand of Moses, as the typical mediator of the Israelites, to represent their absolute need of the promised Messiah, effectually to mediate between God and them. 20. Now a mediator is one that interposes between two parties, and does not merely transact for any one, to the exclusion of the other; but God, who delivered the law to the Israelites, and who is immutably faithful to his promise, was one party;—and Gentiles as well as Jews were concerned in that antecedent, free, and absolute promise made to Abraham. 21. It is therefore absolutely impossible that the law of Moses could, in the intention of God, be opposite to the design of the gospel promise made to Abraham and his spiritual seed, or that ever God should intend to justify men by the one as well as by the other; for if any law had or could have been given, by obedience to which men in their fallen condition could have been entitled to eternal life, it is certain God would have spared his Son, that singularly eminent seed of Abraham, and righteousness for justification to eternal life should have consisted in men's own conformity to that law. 22. But, on the contrary, the writings of the Old Testament have, in their general tenor, pronounced all men, Jews and Gentiles, sinners shut up under a sentence of condemnation, and absolutely incapable of making atonement for their past offences, or rendering themselves acceptable to God by any obedience of their own,—that none having any ground to seek or expect justification by their own works, the free promise of pardon, life, and salvation, through faith in Christ, might be graciously fulfilled in every believer. 23. But as we are naturally strangers and enemies to this important truth, and it was anciently intimated in an obscure manner; so, till Christ, the object of faith, and the doctrine of salvation through faith in him, came to be fully manifested in the gospel, and till we were brought to believe in him, even those of us who were educated in the Jewish religion, though preserved from heathenish idolatries by the law of Moses, were held, like captives and prisoners, under its commanding, condemning, and convincing power, and shut up on every side, that we might be ready to receive Christ as revealed in the gospel with more abundant manifestation of light and grace. 24. We ought therefore to consider the moral law as a covenant, and the ceremonial law as a schoolmaster, intended to direct, lead, and scourge us to Jesus Christ, that, renouncing all dependence on our own good works for justification, we might seek it alone through faith in his meritorious obedience and sacrifice. 25. But now under the gospel, when Christ, the object of faith, and the doctrine of justification by faith in him, are fully manifested, and we are brought to believe in him, we are no longer, like children, in a state of ignorance, weakness, and servile fear, under either the moral law as a covenant, or the ceremonial dispensation. 26. But all of you, Gentiles as well as Jews, who have believed in Christ alone for justification, according to the tenor of the gospel, are rendered adult children of God, and are admitted to higher privileges in the anointed Saviour, who has come in the flesh, and obtained eternal redemption for you. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized in the name, and into the faith, profession, and obedience of Jesus Christ; and answerable to the signification of baptism, have been made partakers of spiritual union and communion with him; have not only in profession, but by faith, put on Jesus Christ as the Lord your Righteousness and Sanctification; and hence have no need of circumcision to recommend you to God's favour, or manifest you his children. 28. There is now, under the gospel, no distinction of nations, ranks, or sexes, with respect to spiritual privileges or blessings: but by the enlargement of God's grace, all true believers are equally members of Christ's mystical body, and he is equally their Head for all spiritual and saving purposes. Circumcision therefore, which was peculiar to males, and distinguished Jews from Gentiles, is of no further use in the church. 29. And if ye be really united to Christ, and interested in, and devoted to him, ye, though uncircumcised, are the true children of Abraham, and heirs of all new covenant blessings, according to the promise made to him and his spiritual seed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Great is the folly of turning away from Jesus Christ, and the doctrine of his imputed righteousness, to rest on our own works for justification before God; and especially after clear manifestation of him and his truth, and suffering for his sake. It renders him and all his fulness, yea, all our profession of him, or sufferings on his account, altogether unprofitable; and is contrary to the oracles of God, and the observation and experience of every believer. But infinite is the mercy, that when God's law condemned us to eternal misery for the very least transgression, Jesus endured the curse in our stead, that we might receive the promise and inheritance of eternal life; and that, while the law excludes us from life on account of our sin, the gospel brings relief, and offers to us an almighty and all-sufficient Saviour. The law now cannot hinder, but is subservient to our redemption through him. Yea, Moses and all the ancient types now appear figures of our incarnate Redeemer; and we Gentiles, as well as Jews, have an equal access to him and to his church, and to all the blessings of the new covenant. Be not slack, my soul, to possess what the Lord thy God giveth thee.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1, 2. Now, to illustrate the preference of the gospel dispensation to the legal by a familiar similitude, ye know that the heir of a rich estate, during his minority, has no more liberty of enjoying the inheritance, to which he has a full right, than if he were a mere servant, but is under the direction and discipline of masters to educate him, and the government of guardians and tutors, and of trustees, to manage his estate for him, that he may be fitted to enter upon the possession of it at the time appointed by his father. 3. In like manner we, who are Jewish believers, during the infant state of the legal dispensation, were, like minors, subjected to its servile and obscure discipline, enslaved by its terrors, and tied down to its typical observances, which consisted of dim and obscure resemblances taken from worldly things, and which were in their nature carnal and earthly, little calculated to carry our thoughts, hopes, or affections, beyond the things of this world to our spiritual and eternal inheritance. 4. But when the time appointed in his purpose, and marked in his promises and predictions, was arrived; the time when men's degeneracy and wickedness, which were come to the greatest height, and their extensive expectations, rendered the superaboundings of mercy and a reformation peculiarly necessary, God, in the riches of his infinite wisdom and grace, sent forth his own eternal pre-existent Son by special manifestation into our world, that he might, in a marvellous manner, assume our nature into a personal union with his own divine nature, being conceived and born of the Virgin Mary; and that he, as God-man, might be placed under the precept of the law as a covenant of works, which we had broken, and under its curse and penalty, which we had incurred; 5. That, by his obedience and sufferings, he might fully satisfy all its demands, and perfectly deliver us from it as a covenant in its commanding and condemning power, and even from the rigorous ceremonial dispensation; and render us abundant partakers of all the privileges of the gospel state which pertain to the adult children of God.—6. And in consequence of his graciously adopting you, Jews or Gentiles, into this dignified state of sonship, he has sent forth his Holy Spirit, which proceeds from, and is communicated by, his Son, to dwell in your souls with far richer abundance of gifts and graces than were ordinarily vouchsafed under the Mosaic dispensation, to form you into the temper of his children, and bear witness with your spirits that ye are such;—and to give you a humble liberty and familiar boldness in your dealings with himself, and enable you to claim and call upon him, and stand affected towards him, with faith, love, desire, delight, reverence, filial obedience, and holy confidence in his care and kindness, and with zeal for his honour as your heavenly Father. 7. Whoever of you therefore truly believe in Christ, are no longer, as servants, kept at a distance, and subjected to severe discipline; but, as children of riper age, are entered on a large possession of your inheritance, as an earnest of your quickly enjoying the full riches and glory thereof,—yea, are heirs of the all-sufficient God himself as your portion, in the right, and for the sake of, and together with, Jesus Christ, who, as his eternal Son, is heir of all things.—Why then should ye abandon these high and sure privileges, to seek happiness by your works of obedience to the law as a covenant? 8—11. Since God, in his infinite mercy, pitied you while ye were plunged in the grossest ignorance and most shocking idolatries, slavishly worshipping stocks and stones, or other creatures real or imaginary, even the most base or abominable, instead of the true God; and, by the light and power of his gospel, found you out, brought you to the knowledge of himself through Jesus Christ, owned you as his, and rendered you accepted in the Beloved; what must be your infatuation and ingratitude if ye turn from this light and grace of the gospel, and all its holy and delightful liberties and honours, to a state of servile subjection to the dark hints and severe injunctions of the Mosaic law, which are utterly insufficient to make your peace with God, purge your conscience from guilt, secure you from wrath, procure your acceptance to life, or to enrich you with any spiritual knowledge, grace, or comfort! Has God delivered you from heathen bondage, that ye, who had originally no attachment to the Jewish ceremonies, should, in contempt of Christ's fulfilment of them, and of the gospel deliverance from them, be fond of such servitude, and be zealous to observe their sacred seasons and other rites, in order to render you accepted with God! Truly, when I think on this your conduct, I am greatly afraid that all the pains I took to acquaint you with, and persuade you to embrace the gospel, have been lost upon most of you, and will only serve as an occasion to enhance your guilt, and increase your eternal misery. 12. Let me therefore earnestly beseech you, my beloved brethren, by everything serious, solemn, or endearing, to abide in the same sentiments, relative to the justification of a sinner before God, which I, who was once as proud and obstinate a legalist as any of you, now heartily embrace; and exercise the same affection towards me as I do towards u; for I am ready to bear with you in everything consistent with the truth of the gospel, and the welfare of your souls: and indeed I have no reason to disregard you, as ye never injured me; or, if ye did, I have heartily forgiven it. 13, 14. Such, ye know, was my affection to you, that, with the utmost concern for your salvation, under great difficulties, sufferings, reproaches, and much bodily weakness and despicable appearances, I laboured in explaining and recommending to you the gospel of Christ: and such was your affection to me, that, notwithstanding these infirmities and humbling circumstances, ye neither slighted my person, nor rejected my doctrine, but entertained and embraced it, and me for its sake, with readiness and pleasure, as an ambassador of Christ, yea, as if I had been a holy angel sent down from heaven, or even the Messiah himself. 15, 16. Where are now those expressions of gratitude to me for my labours; or that happiness ye then professed to have, and hope for, in my ministrations? For such was your fervour of love and joy, that, if it could have been of any advantage to me, ye would have gladly undergone the most painful severities and inconveniences for my sake. Why then are ye now giving up those very doctrines which ye then so much esteemed? Why are ye become so cool in your affection to me, who still affectionately regard you? I appeal to your consciences, if ye ought to hold me as your enemy, because I have plainly and faithfully maintained the truth and importance of gospel doctrines, and warned you of your infinite danger in mixing the works of the law with faith in Christ for your justification. 17. As for these your new teachers, who pretend so great concern for your welfare, they act with no Christian candour or honour, but seek to decoy you from all regard to me or my apostolic authority, in order that ye may blindly submit to them, and bestow all your esteem, honour, and applause, upon them. 18. Remember, therefore, that it is a very beautiful and laudable temper to be always zealously and uniformly attached to that which is truly worthy and important, and not merely when I am among you. 19. My dear, but weak, children in the faith, whom I thought I had instrumentally begotten to Christ through the gospel, my soul is still as earnestly concerned that the pure doctrines of the gospel, and Jesus Christ therein, as made of God to you wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, may be really fixed in your minds and hearts, as ever I was to have you converted from your heathenish ignorance and idolatry. 20. Earnestly I wish that I were but present with you to confirm the truth, to answer your objections and scruples by word of mouth, and to vary my discourse into encouragement or rebuke, as the occasions should require; and gladly should I find ground to encourage you; for truly I now greatly suspect that many of you have never been really converted to Christ, and may at length utterly apostatize from his truth and ways. 21. But I earnestly beg that ye, who seem so fond of being under the law for justification by your own obedience, would seriously tell me, as before the judgment-seat of Christ, if ever ye have truly considered what the law demands, or what it denounces against the least transgression,—or what a wide difference even these writings of Moses mark out between those that seek justification by their own works, and those who seek it only by faith in Christ. 22, 23. For there it is recorded, that Abraham, the friend of God, had two sons who were typical of different dispensations, and different sorts of persons; the one Ishmael, who was born by Hagar his bond-slave, according to the common law of generation, and the other Isaac, by Sarah, his proper wife, in an extraordinary and miraculous manner, at an unexpected time of life, and as an accomplishment of God's free promise.—24, 25. Now these things were intended by God as figurative representations of the miserable condition of those who are under the law as a covenant of works, and of the happiness of those who are under the covenant of grace. Hagar represented the covenant made between God and the Israelites at Sinai, which, by its terrible manner of delivery, strictness of precepts, and severity of curses, tended to beget a servile temper of spirit, and subjected its votaries to everlasting destruction, if left without the gospel relief promised to Abraham;—and she and her son, cast out from Abraham's family, represented the Jews and other legalists, abandoned by God for their unbelief, and left in bondage to Satan and their lusts. 26, 27. But the gospel church of true believers in Christ, which is of a heavenly original, nature, and tendency, and highly privileged with the unnumbered liberties and blessings of the new covenant, and by the oracles and ordinances of which we are born to Christ, was typified by Sarah and her son:—for, in allusion to Sarah and Hagar, the prophet Isaiah foretold that the Gentile nations, after being long abandoned by God to heathenism, should at last, with great joy, afford more children to him than the Jewish nation, which in Abraham, and afterwards at Sinai, was solemnly espoused to him as his peculiar people. 28. This being the case, we members of the gospel church are, like Isaac, begotten to God by virtue of the free promises of the gospel, and are entitled to all the blessings of the new covenant. 29, 30. But as in that age Ishmael, who was born according to the ordinary course of nature, and had only temporal advantages, with his mocking and malignant tongue, persecuted Isaac, who was born by an extraordinary operation of the Spirit of God, and was heir of all the promises made to his father; so in this the Jewish zealots and self-justiciaries rage at and persecute us, who are born of God, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven.—And as Hagar and Ishmael were expelled from the family of Abraham, and deprived of the covenant blessings thereof, so shall God expel those zealots, and all self-justiciaries, from his kingdom of grace and glory, and deny them the blessings of his children. 31. Since then we, who believe on Christ alone for justification to eternal life, are not of those who shall be excluded from the gospel state and heavenly inheritance, or promised blessings of grace and glory, but are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, we have nothing to do with the Mosaic servile dispensation, nor are any of its ceremonial observances necessary to our acceptance with God.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—Great and glorious are the advantages of the New Testament church, brought in by the incarnation, obedience, and suffering of the Son of God, above the dark and servile state of the Old. What a large and firm foundation of mercy and hope is the manifestation of God in our nature, and in our law room and stead! Happy are they who are marked as his fellow-heirs of eternal life by the inhabitation and influence of his Spirit; and who are hereby enabled to enjoy the most familiar intimacy with God! Marvellous is his grace in calling gross idolaters to his favour and service! and base their ingratitude, and dreadful their danger, who, after making a fair profession of his gospel, apostatize from him, and deny the imputation of his righteousness for our justification before him. It is painful for faithful ministers to behold such events. But highly necessary at such a time honestly to contend for the truth, though it should make our kindest friends become our furious enemies. For artful are the methods, and high the pretences, of affection or piety, by which seducers alienate men from the truth, and from their faithful, beloved, and affectionate ministers.—With great concern ought ministers, by prayers and instructions, to promote the conversion and edification of their hearers. It is vain to think that Christ can be formed in the heart where self-righteousness and self-dependence habitually prevail and reign. Whatever we may wish, we ought never to think all well where what we see is evidently evil. Ministers ought carefully to explain and apply the law of God to the consciences of those who are disposed to trust to their own works. And it is needful to look further than the letter, in order to understand the scripture. It is not according to our external privileges, but according as we rely on our own works, or adhere by faith to God's free promises, that we shall be damned or saved. The true children of God are generally persecuted by legal hypocrites. But it is enough to make them a rich and everlasting amends, that they may rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

Chap. V.—Ver. 1. Since true believers are thus the children of God, and heirs of promise, and the danger of self-justiciaries is so terrible, let me earnestly beseech you to abide steadfastly in the belief, profession, and practice of that holy, happy, and delightful freedom from the law as a covenant of works, and from all obligation to its ceremonial precepts, wherewith Jesus Christ, by his finished righteousness, gospel establishment, and your effectual calling to himself, has made you free: and let love, gratitude, and obedience to him, as well as concern for the welfare and safety of your own souls, make you to avoid all further encumbrance and oppression from the servile yoke of the law or its ceremonies. 2. For, as an inspired apostle of Christ, I, who it seems am said to preach up circumcision, solemnly assure you, that, if ye receive circumcision as a thing necessary to your acceptance with God, nothing that Christ has done or suffered, or which the gospel reveals, will be of any saving advantage to you. 3. I now repeat what I have always maintained in my ministrations, with the greatest earnestness, as a most convincing truth, to every man, Jew or Gentile, who is circumcised with this view, that he is thereby obliged, under pain of eternal damnation, perfectly, without the least failure, to satisfy the whole demands of the divine law as a broken covenant of works. 4. The person, righteousness, gospel, and Spirit of Christ, will avail you nothing, who, renouncing him, seek justification before God, in whole or in part, by your own works, and thus practically renounce the gospel, and the free justification and salvation therein bequeathed. 5. For through the light and influence of the gospel, we believers, Jews or Gentiles, earnestly desire and expect, and patiently look and wait for, everlasting life, that great object of our hope, as a thing we are entitled to, and shall partake of, not for any righteousness of our own, but merely through the imputed righteousness of Christ, received by faith. 6. For with respect to our union with Christ, and justification through him, neither circumcision, nor other ceremonial observances, nor the want of them, do in the least promote or confirm our happiness; but we must have a true faith, receiving and resting upon Christ alone for salvation as offered in the gospel, and working in a sincere and ardent love to his person, offices, relations, Father, Spirit, word, ordinances, ways, and people.—7. Ye, my brethren, for a time appeared cordially to believe, and earnestly to profess, this doctrine of justification through Jesus' righteousness alone. Think seriously then what has turned you aside from your faith in, and your obediential regard to, the authority of Christ, in this leading truth of the gospel, on which all the rest depend. 8. Certain it is that your present judaizing sentiments, so directly contrary to the very foundation of the gospel, are in no respect derived from God, who called you to the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation through him alone; nor from me, who, as his instrument, preached the very contrary to you. 9. Some corrupt influence from Satan and his instruments must then have insinuated itself among you, which, unless timely prevented, will gradually infect your whole church, and whole scheme of principles. 10. Notwithstanding, therefore, my great fears about you, I would fain hope that, upon your serious consideration of what I now write, ye will perceive your danger, and the necessity of making a full and speedy stand for the truth, and of censuring the principal instruments of your present perplexity and confusion: and sure I am, that, except they repent, the righteous and terrible judgments of God will overtake them. 11. And as for myself, the furious persecution which I everywhere patiently suffer from the bigoted Jews, manifests that I never preach up circumcision as necessary to salvation, or induce any Gentile believers to receive it: for could I agree to superadd the works of the law to the merits of Christ, the chief ground of their offence at the doctrine of salvation by a crucified Saviour, and of their persecution of me for preaching it, would naturally cease. 12. I heartily wish that these new teachers, who have so grievously perplexed and disturbed you, and subverted the faith of some of you, were solemnly excommunicated from all fellowship with the church, and delivered over to Satan; or that God, in his own way, would restrain them from bringing any further reproach upon his name, church, and gospel.—13. And as ye, my Christian brethren, have been by the gospel called to a glorious freedom from ceremonial observances, and from the law as a broken liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

16 This I say then, Walk in the Spirit,* and ye shall not fulfil † the lust of the flesh.

17 For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

He preferred getting drunk; and then committed the horrible crimes from which in sobriety he had recoiled.—Ed.

covenant of works, and to a noble liberty of spirit in fellowship with God as our gracious Father in Christ, abide by it as a thing more valuable than your lives, and remember to improve it, not as an encouragement to pride, passion, sensuality, or other sinful corruptions, but as an additional obligation to the most perfect obedience to the whole law of God as a rule of life, and in all kind and brotherly affection, and friendly offices one to another. 14. For all the commands of the second table, relative to the mutual duties of life, to chastity, honesty, truth, contentment, and charity, are fulfilled in loving your neighbours, as rational creatures and Christians, with such sincere and active affection as ye owe to yourselves. 15. But if, in defiance of this great commandment, ye, like ravenous beasts, rather than men or Christians, fight and quarrel, reproach and abuse one another, ye have reason to fear that the God of peace and love will abandon you to your own lusts, that, by mutual heats and feuds, ye may ruin one another in your church state, privileges, and best interests.—16. To prevent these and other dreadful irruptions of your indwelling corruption, I charge you, in the name of Christ, to labour always, and by all means to live and act towards God and men under the influence of his good Spirit, and of that supernatural habit or principle of grace and holiness which he has implanted in your heart; which will effectually prevent your yielding up yourselves to the inclinations and practices of sinful lusts. 17. For, in regenerate persons, the remains of indwelling corruption, on the one hand, struggle against, and labour to suppress, this inward gracious principle, and all its holy actings, and even to expel the Holy Ghost from the heart;—and, on the other hand, the spiritual habit or vital principle of grace, wrought in them by the Holy Ghost, as living and acting under his direction and assistance, earnestly desires and labours to effect the entire destruction of sin. And these two inward principles, of corruption and grace, being directly opposite in their nature, tendency, and actings, ye can neither commit sin with the full and deliberate consent of your heart, nor perform duties with perfect freedom, constancy, and fervour. 18. But if, under the direction and influence of the Spirit of God, according to the rule of his word, and the inclination of an implanted principle of grace, ye, in the habitual frame of your hearts and course of your lives, be led from the ways of sin into the paths of righteousness, it is manifest that ye cannot be under the law as a covenant of works, the Spirit being received only by means of the gospel; 19—21. Nor are these principles of inward corruption and grace more contrary than the tempers and practices which proceed from them. Those which proceed from the carnal corruption of nature are manifestly odious and wicked; such as whoredom in thought, word, or deed, whether between married or single persons, with all lewd, immodest, and wanton inclinations and behaviour; all idolatrous worshipping of false gods, or by images; all enchantments, divinations, magic, and pretended or real intimacy with evil spirits; all ill will towards God or men; litigious contentions, bitter zeal, and rancour; a swelling and revengeful temper; scoldings, wranglings, and provocations to evil; a riotous and turbulent behaviour; fundamental errors obstinately persisted in; uneasy envyings at the gifts, graces, honours, or prosperity of others; malicious and wilful attempts to take away men's lives without just cause; excessive drinking of liquors; gluttonous feasting, ranting, and raving; with many others of the like nature, which, as I formerly assured you, will, if persisted in, effectually exclude you from all fellowship with God here or hereafter. 22, 23. But in opposition to these detestable and damning works of the flesh, the effects produced by the implanted principle of divine life, under the supernatural influence of the Holy Ghost, pleasing to God, and profitable to ourselves, are—universal love to God, to Christ, his words, ordinances, and people, and to our fellow-creatures; rejoicing in God through Christ, and in the happiness of our neighbours; peace of conscience, flowing from peace with God through Jesus' blood, and issuing in a peaceful temper towards our fellow-Christians and creatures; a patient bearing of affronts, injuries, and offences; an affable and courteous disposition and carriage towards all with whom we have to do; a benevolent temper and beneficent practice; fidelity to every trust committed to, or engagement made by us, flowing from faith in Christ, and in God through him; a meek, calm, and quiet frame of spirit; a regular moderation of our passions and appetites, in meats, drinks, pleasures, or the like. Against such virtues, and the persons endowed with them, there is no law to condemn them. 24. And all they who truly belong to Christ as members of his mystical body, united with, interested in, and devoted to him, are obliged earnestly to endeavour, and have been actually enabled by his Spirit, in virtue of his crucifixion, and in conformity to him therein, gradually to subdue the power and strength of indwelling corruption, that it may not reign in their mortal body, and to break the force of their base and defiling corruptions, whether of the flesh or mind. 25. And if we are indeed quickened and made alive to God by the power of the Holy Ghost, let it be our daily and earnest study, under his direction and influence, to act up to our Christian character, obligations, and advantages, by departing from all iniquity, and walking in all holy conversation and godliness. 26. And as we are indebted to him for all the good that is in us, let none of us overrate our own endowments or performances, or aim at making a vain-glorious show of them. Let us never, by our pride, passion, or self-seeking, provoke one another to angry resentments, nor stir up envious passions in or against each other.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Blessed are the liberties which saints, especially under the gospel, have in and through Christ! and in the most delightful manner they, by faith, live in love, and hope for glory. But it is dangerous to contemn, reject, or forsake, these liberties; and infinitely dangerous to turn aside from the true doctrine of justification by free grace through the imputed righteousness of Christ, received by faith, after we have professed and seemingly believed it. It is to lose all benefit by Christ, and to bind ourselves to the impossible condition of keeping the whole law. No persecution, no seduction, ought ever to draw us into this ruinous snare. And seducers to such wickedness should be esteemed as plagues of the church, and quickly cut off from her fellowship.—True Christians should carefully avoid everything tending to strife and contention, which are so sinful and ruinous. And though believers be perfectly freed from the moral law as a covenant, they continue still, and to eternity, under it as a binding rule of conversation. Yea, if we be Christ's, we must evidence it by our earnest mortification of inward lusts; and by avoiding and practically testifying against outward abominations. But in order to maintain the implanted principles of grace, or bring forth the fruits thereof in a holy life, we must live under the almighty and gracious influence of the Holy Ghost.

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1. According to the rule of Christian love already mentioned, if any one among you, through ignorance, unwatchfulness, human frailty, plausible temptations, or enticing examples, fall into an erroneous notion or immoral act, I beseech those of you, who are more advanced and confirmed in knowledge and grace, to do your utmost, in a meek, patient, and tender manner, for convincing and reclaiming him by repentance, and reducing him to his proper place in the mystical body of Christ:—and to induce you hereto, ponder seriously your own weakness and sinfulness, and the danger of meeting with, and falling before, temptations yourselves; and be not therefore too severe upon others. 2. Instead of imposing heavy yokes on the one hand, or refusing any offices of kindness on the other, sympathize with, pray for, and assist one another; and, by lightening and relieving one another under your burdens, grievances, trials, and exercises, practise Christ's great commandment of loving your neighbours as yourselves. 3. For if any of you have high thoughts of your own abilities to resist temptations, and to do great things in religion, and so despise and insult others, ye dreadfully deceive your own souls. 4. But to prevent your being forward to judge and censure others, and deceive yourselves, let every one of you narrowly search and try his own principles, motives, ends, temper, and behaviour; and if they be thus found correspondent to the truth of the gospel, and your profession of it, ye will have great matter of humble joy in what God has wrought in you, and enabled you to do, and on account of the testimony which the Holy Ghost and your own consciences bear to your sincerity, and God's acceptance of you through Christ; and you need not then regard the applause of others, your number of proselytes, or that your character is more exalted than that of others. 5. For at the judgment-seat of Christ every man will be adjudged to eternal happiness or misery; not according to what he thinks of himself, or what he is in comparison of others,—but according to what he really is, in heart and life, before God.—6. And as a standing ministry is necessary for your instruction and establishment in the truths and paths of the gospel, let every church member, who receives these spiritual instructions, cheerfully and liberally contribute of his worldly substance for the comfortable maintenance of his instructor, who spends his time and strength in preaching the gospel to him, and thus brings him blessings far better than anything temporal. 7. Never let a covetous temper, or plausible suggestion, seduce you from the faithful performance of this duty. God, who searches your hearts, and has a right to your obedience, will not suffer himself to be imposed on, or any of his commandments contemned. But (to allude to the crops of husbandmen and gardeners) your reward at his hand shall be according to the nature, quality, and extent of your work. 8. He who uses his temporal enjoyments, or spends his time and strength with selfish and corrupt views, shall have, for his reward, perishing things here, and eternal destruction hereafter; but he who, through the power of God's grace on and in his heart, employs his substance and talents for promoting spiritual purposes, in subserviency to the work and design of the Holy Ghost, shall reap glorious fruits of holiness in this world, and eternal life as the free gift of God through Christ in the next. 9. Animated by these comfortable views, let us never grow remiss and negligent, far less cease from doing good to others, by every mean in our power; for if not in this life, we shall in the next be rewarded with plentiful blessings, if we do not, through unbelief and discouragement, covetousness, impatience, or the like, desist from our duty as an irksome task. 10. While therefore God gives us abilities and proper opportunities, let us exercise ourselves in works of beneficence towards the necessitous, and all our fellow-creatures, especially to such as, in the judgment of charity, have cordially embraced the gospel of Christ, and become his children and servants. 11. I hope ye will seriously ponder those things which I have written to you in this affectionate letter, and that not by an amanuensis, as ordinarily, but with my own hand. 12. And, believe me, your new preachers, who attempt to recommend themselves by external flourishes of profession, or zealous observation of carnal ceremonies, are not actuated, in urging you to be circumcised, by any true love to you, or concern for your salvation, but merely desire that they may escape that persecution and outrage from the unbelieving Jews, to which the preaching of a free justification through Christ's imputed righteousness would expose them. 13. For, notwithstanding their being circumcised themselves, and under an obligation thereby established to keep the whole law, they are not really careful to keep that law at all, but they would have you circumcised, that they might boast of you as their proselytes, and thereby recommend themselves to the favour of the unbelieving Jews. 14. But God forbid that I should ever be ambitious of human applause or boast of, or rely on, anything as the ground of my acceptance with God, except it be the atoning sacrifice of our crucified Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by faith in, and virtue derived from, which and whom, I am in conformity to him, dead to all the allurements, interests, and honours of this world, and to all its terrors, persecutions, and reproaches, so as to be little moved by the one or the other; and on account of my preaching of which, as the alone ground of justification and eternal life, the men of this world contemn me, and would gladly crucify me. 15. For, with regard to union with Christ, and justification to life through faith in him, circumcision, and all such external distinctions, are now under the gospel entirely useless. The only thing that can effectually prove our interest in him, is the universal and almighty renovation of our heart and life, after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.—16. And to all those professed Christians, Jews or Gentiles, who, according to the directions I have given, rely on the righteousness of Christ alone for justification, and improve it in a steadfast maintenance of gospel liberties, and study of gospel holiness; and to all those spiritual Israelites whom God hath formed for himself, I earnestly wish and declare peace with God, their consciences, and one another, and all other mercies and blessings of the new covenant. 17. Let no one give me any further trouble with injurious reproaches and angry quarrels about circumcision and other observances of the law: the persecutions which I have already endured, and of which I retain the marks in my body, are sufficient proofs of my being Christ's devoted servant, and faithful preacher of justification through his blood. 18. Finally, brethren, my hearty prayer to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is, that his free love and favour, with all its blessed manifestations, fruits, and effects, may plentifully abound towards you, and sensibly rest on your souls, to lead you in the way of faith, comfort, and holiness, till ye arrive at the complete possession of eternal life.

Reflections upon Chap. VI.—With meekness, humility, and compassionate sympathy, ought Christians of superior attainments to recover their offending brethren. A sense of their own sinfulness, weakness, and readiness to slip, should induce them to it. And a regard to their deliverance from the law as a covenant, and the law of ceremonies, and their being still under Christ's law of liberty and love, should effectually animate them to it.—It is dreadful to deceive our souls through self-conceit and hypocritical mocking of that God who neither will nor can be imposed upon. But it is delightful to have our consciences attesting us as approved of God in Christ; and to be enabled to improve our worldly substance in acts of piety and charity. It is highly necessary to be active and exact in our conduct, when our eternal happiness or damnation is so closely connected with it; and very unprofitable to make fair shows of religion, while we remain ignorant of its power; or while, to shun persecution, we are afraid or ashamed to own a crucified Christ, and the doctrine of salvation through him alone. It is Christ crucified in whom we must boast, and from whom we must derive all grace to wean us from worldly things. And no profession, denomination, or external privilege, will avail to our salvation, unless our hearts be renewed and planted with a living principle of grace. Nor must we expect spiritual or eternal happiness, unless we walk according to the gospel in our dealings with God and men, and are ready to suffer for the doctrines of Christ which we profess.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

No one can attentively read and consider the Epistle to the Galatians without discovering the early germs of popery budding, nay springing, into vigorous and almost irrepressible growth, even under the eye of apostolic inspection, and, as it were, in defiance of the apostolic pruning-knife. Popery does not consist in the rejection of the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity. On the contrary, it retains most of them, but, at the same time, so overlays them, as to render them nearly or altogether invisible; so loads them with ceremonial ornament, as to disfigure or destroy their beauty; and so combines them with extraneous and traditionary inventions, as literally to render them of "none effect."

The two great errors which the apostle labours to correct among the Galatians were the adoption of Jewish rites as essential to salvation, and the combining of human merit with the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. In both these propensities they have been followed by popery. One high priest—one pope—one family succession—one traditionary succession—holy vestments—altars—lamps—candles—washings—sprinklings—attitudes. These bear such resemblance to each other, that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between them. But injurious to spiritual feeling and vital godliness as these "beggarly elements" undoubtedly are, their evil is far outrun by the doctrine of justification by works alone, or by human merit conjoined with the works of Christ, and of other mediators, which invariably accompanies them. Both, indeed, profess alike to have "begun in the Spirit," but both alike labour, and expect to be "made perfect by the flesh," (chap. 3. 3). Truly has Solomon declared that "there is no new thing under the sun." Even Romanism, with all its fertile ingenuity, has been unable to become an inventor; and, when casting off "the simplicity of the gospel," has been compelled to deck herself in the ancient, but condemned, garments of the judaizing, "the foolish Galatians." Wherefore "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Justification by faith, and by faith alone, is the article by which the church must stand in truth; but the "faith that is not alone," but "worketh by love," is the principle by which she must stand in holiness.—Ed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE EPHESIANS.

Ephesus was the chief city of Proconsular Asia, famed for human wisdom and knowledge, but more for idolatry, lasciviousness, and magical arts. Here Paul planted a Christian church, to the elders of which he afterwards gave a solemn charge to attend to their work; Acts xix, xx. To caution them against those seducers, who very early crept in among them, and to confirm them in the doctrines which he had preached to them, he, while a prisoner at Rome, wrote them this excellent letter. In the first three chapters of which, he represents to them, in the most enraptured and affecting manner, the riches of God's grace, in their election, effectual calling, fellowship with God and with his church. In the last three, he exhorts them to improve their mercies, in the conscientious performance of all necessary duties, personal and relative, religious and civil, answerably to their Christian character, privileges, assistances, and obligations.

[Ephesus was a city of Ionia, and, under the Roman government, the capital of a large district of Western Asia. It was famous for its temple of Diana, which was reckoned one of the wonders of the world (Acts xix. 27). It is said to have been more ancient than the time of David, and to have been peopled by a Greek colony. In the time of Paul, Ephesus still retained much of its ancient architectural and commercial grandeur; but the inhabitants were, like those of Athens, wholly given to idolatry. History describes them as licentious in morals, and addicted to sorcery; whence "Ephesian letters" came to be a name for all those superstitious charms and spells, by which those ignorant and foolish people who know not God, have, in all ages, been affrighted and deceived. In such a city the preaching of the gospel seemed all but hopeless; for idolatry and self-interest combined to instigate the heathen zealots to every riotous opposition (Acts xix. 24.); yet, through the labours of Paul, Apollos, and others, the gospel triumphed; and the Lord established a church which continued until his early-threatened, and long-suspended judgment, at last overtook the city, and has left it a splendid ruin without church or inhabitant. It was situated about twenty-three miles north of Miletus, to which place Paul called the elders to deliver them his parting charge, about A. D. 58.

This Epistle was written about A. D. 62, and, as appears from various allusions, when Paul was a prisoner at Rome. It has been pronounced the richest and noblest of the Epistles. And certainly in variety and depth of doctrine, sublimity and fervour of expression, and the intense earnestness of apostolic exhortation, it stands eminently conspicuous. The reason for its peculiar character seems to be that assigned by Scott, namely, "that the apostle's heart was much enlarged in writing to those whom he had no occasion to rebuke, and with whom he was not under the necessity of joining in controversy; so that entire confidence took place of the caution, reserve, or sharpness, which were requisite in the three preceding Epistles." It appears to have been written to confirm the Ephesian, and other Asiatic churches, in the true doctrine and practice of the gospel. And, as every Epistle seems to have had some peculiar object, and is consequently distinguished by some peculiar feature, so this Epistle is distinguished by its special illustration and enforcement of the blessed doctrine of the headship of Christ over all things to the church, and the union of believers with him in one mystical body.

As to the particular church to which this Epistle was originally addressed, expositors are not agreed. Some think it was addressed to the Laodiceans (Col. 4. 16); while others suppose it to have been a circular letter generally addressed to all the churches of Asia. For this opinion, however, there is not a shadow of external proof—the whole current of evidence uniting in inscribing it specially to the Ephesians—though, no doubt, it was intended for the use of the other surrounding churches. And if the apostle directed the Ephesians to send a copy to the Laodiceans, which should afterwards be transmitted to the Laodiceans—and no supposition can be more natural—all idea of the loss of any apostolical epistle is at once removed.—Ed.]

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1, 2. Being, according to the sovereign will and mere favour of God, immediately authorized and qualified by Jesus Christ to publish his glorious gospel, I earnestly wish and announce to you—members of the church at Ephesus, who are by profession, and I hope many of you really, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, and to all the believers everywhere, who, through union to, and fellowship with, Christ, have obtained mercy to be faithful to their light and obligations in adhering to the truth as it is in him—all the riches of divine grace, in all its happy fruits, manifestations, and effects, from our Covenant God and Father in Christ, as the fountain and moving cause, and from Jesus Christ as the purchaser, storehouse, and dispenser of them. 3. May all possible glory, thanksgiving, and praise, be cheerfully ascribed to that ever-blessed God, whose ancient endearing character was, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; but who now manifests himself as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son and mediatorial Servant;—that in and through him, as our new-covenant Head and anointed Saviour, in the immense riches of his love and grace, he has freely and bountifully bestowed upon us all manner of spiritual and eternal blessings. 4. According to, and in the execution of, his gracious and unchangeable decree, in which we were from all eternity freely and sovereignly chosen in him as our Head and Representative, not because of our foreseen holiness, but that, through the application of his blood to our conscience, and the Holy Ghost renewing our heart, we might be made truly holy, and enabled, as in his sight, and acceptably to him, to walk in love to God, and to one another, in obedience to his law, and as the fruit of his having first loved us:—5. In which eternal purpose we were graciously separated from the rest of mankind, and foreordained to be his new-covenant children, and joint heirs with Christ, of himself, and all his inestimable fulness and privileges;—that through the merits, and being united to the person, of Christ, and according to his free favour and sovereign will, we might be brought into the most intimate union to, and fellowship with, him, as his peculiar people, formed for, and consecrated to, his honour and service; 6, 7. All which is done by him, that there may be abundant and everlasting praises in the church on earth and in heaven, to the honour and glory of his free grace and mercy, which is so illustriously and endearingly displayed in the whole of our salvation, particularly in rendering us acceptable to himself, in and through the person and mediation of his dearly-beloved and only begotten Son Jesus Christ,—in whom we, who are chosen, predestinated, and accepted, have a complete and glorious deliverance from all evil, and recovery to all possible happiness, in time and eternity, through the inestimable price of his atonement so fully satisfying to divine justice, and his righteousness so magnifying to the holy law; having all our sins, however many and aggravated, freely, fully, and irrevocably forgiven us, not on account of any worthiness in us, or our works, but merely from the inexhaustible fulness, excellency, liberality, and unbounded overflowings, of JEHOVAH'S free mercy and favour. 8. In the breaking forth and plentiful effusions of which grace, he has abundantly manifested to us the highest wisdom and counsel, both in contriving and executing his eternal scheme of redemption, to the united and highest honour of all his perfections; and in giving us the spirit of wisdom and knowledge, making us wise unto salvation, and to know and practise our duty with understanding, prudence, and discretion;—9. All which wisdom and prudence God hath discovered or conveyed to us by means of the gospel, in which, when attended by the almighty illumination of his Spirit, he opens before us his gracious scheme of redemption, which is so much hid from creatures, and so marvellous and incomprehensible in itself; and which, influenced by nothing but his own sovereign grace, he formed and fixed in his own breast, and for his own glory:—10. That in the last and most glorious period of his gracious transactions on earth, fixed in his eternal purpose, and marked in his ancient promises, and when the exceeding sinfulness of mankind had given his free grace the largest opportunity for magnifying its own power and glory, he might, in and by means of Christ incarnate, obeying, suffering, dying, interceding, and preached to the nations, gloriously reconcile Jews and Gentiles into one mystical body, bringing them into a new state of peace and friendship with himself, and with one another; and even angels and men into one delightful society and new state of peace and friendship;—and, in fine, connect all things in and under Christ, as Head over them to his church:—11. In whom also, for the accomplishment of this great design, we believing Jews have, in our effectual calling, received a title to, and some anticipation of, that inheritance of eternal life to which we were, as his children, predestinated in the free and unchangeable purpose of God, who, by an almighty influence, works all things exactly according to the direction of his infinite wisdom, and the plan of his sovereign decree;—12. That we, the natural seed of Abraham, to whom the gospel was first preached, and who were first brought to believe, and depend on, and hope in Christ for all salvation, might, as distinguished monuments of his grace, for ever glorify him for his mercy in making, and for his truth, power, wisdom, and love, in fulfilling his promises; 13. In whom also ye Gentiles, after ye had heard the infallibly certain, and infinitely important, truths of the gospel, by which that eternal salvation is offered and applied to sinful men, believed; and, in consequence thereof, were, by virtue of your union with him, further sanctified and conformed to his image, and comfortably certified of your personal interest in him as your eternal inheritance, by the Holy Ghost, whom he so emphatically promised, and who, with infinite light and power, applies all the promises to our souls: 14. Which Holy Spirit, as given to us, and working faith and love in us, is a security, pledge, and earnest of our heavenly glory, and a joyful foretaste of it, till we, and they whom Christ hath redeemed, and for whom he purchased it, arrive at the full enjoyment of it, that, as monuments of his amazing grace, we may for ever praise him in the highest manner for the manifestation of it upon us.—15, 16. In reflection upon this grace of God, in choosing, redeeming, calling, and sanctifying, you Gentiles as well as us Jews, and having received an account of your remarkable trust and hope in the Lord Jesus Christ, and love to all them that bear his image, I have been thereby encouraged, in my frequent prayers, to bless and thank him for his favours bestowed on you, and to supplicate that he would still grant you more abundant mercies; 17. Particularly that he—who is the Covenant God of our Lord Jesus Christ, who chose and called him to his mediatorial work, qualified and rewarded him for it—and who, being infinitely glorious in himself, is the fountain, author, and bestower of all the glory communicated to angels, men, or any other creature, and is the eternal Object of all admiration and worship—would, by his Spirit, give you still more bright, sweet, and assuring manifestations of Christ, in his person, offices, righteousness, and love, and lead you into a still more clear and experimental acquaintance with the exercise of faith, love, and other graces; 18. That through his enlightening influence, by the word of God and daily experience, your minds may perceive, with the utmost certainty and light, what a sincere and genuine hope that is to which God has effectually called you by the gospel, what excellent objects it hath in view, and what solid and never-failing grounds ye have for it;—and that by the realizing views of faith, by spiritual meditation, and by gracious foretastes, ye may know, in an animating and extensive manner, what is the true nature and transcendent excellency of the invaluable treasures of blessedness, which God, for his own glory, bestows on, and places in, his saints, whom he has taken for his inheritance and peculiar people: 19, 20. And that ye may further understand and experience what is the superabundant and all-conquering greatness of his power, which he exercises towards us who believe, Jews or Gentiles, in quickening our dead souls, working faith in us, subduing our inward corruptions, supporting and preserving us through all dangers, comforting us against all griefs, and raising us up to complete and eternal blessedness, and that in a manner like to the almighty exertion of it in the resurrection and high exaltation of Jesus Christ,——21—23. state; and has placed all his enemies in a state of subjection to him, that he may dispose of them, subdue and destroy them at his pleasure; and has given him an absolute and universal dominion, in the kingdom of providence and grace, over all persons and things, that he may manage, overrule, restrain, and order all events for the spiritual and eternal benefit of the Catholic church, to which he is the Head of direction and government, life and influence, tender care and protection; and which is his mystical body, receiving all life, activity, growth, and strength, from him; and in his relative fulness, comprehending all the members given to him by his Father for the perfecting of his family and glory;—who, by means of his word, offices, and ordinances, attended with his presence, are filled y him with all gifts, graces, and fruits of righteousness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Abundant is the grace we receive from Christ. It is only in a state of union to him that we are rendered holy or faithful. And it is only in him that we are blessed with either spiritual or eternal blessings. Delightful is the influence, and sweet the character, of a gracious God. Marvellous is the sovereignty, the freedom, the antiquity, the rich abundance, and powerful efficacy of his redeeming grace. To it we owe our election, our adoption, our justification, our spiritual knowledge, our eternal happiness, and our present assurance of, and security for it. Influenced by it, how delightfully Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, co-operate in our eternal redemption! Actuated by the faith of it, cordially ought we to pour forth our praises and thanksgivings, and to admire his kindness in bringing us Gentiles into the fellowship of the gospel. And earnestly should we pray for further influences of the Holy Spirit, to enlighten our minds and quicken our souls. But, above all, let us admire the power, the grace, the wisdom, which have so exalted our Redeemer for the welfare of his body the church. And since God hath set him so high at his right hand, let him be for ever exalted in our hearts.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. And as God, by the exceeding greatness of his power, raised up Christ as a public person, from the dead, he has also bestowed upon you a life of justification, freeing you from your guilt and condemnation, and quickened you to a life of holiness, by the renewal of your nature, who, as Gentile sinners, were under the dominion of both legal and spiritual death; and, as it were, condemned and killed by a multitude of sins original and actual. 2. In which, while ye continued unregenerate heathens, ye with great eagerness, constantly, freely, and progressively, moved and acted; according to the corrupt fashions and customs of this present evil world; according to the will, desire, instigation, and government of the devil and his angels, who wander about in, and even agitate, the air; and who, however proud, light, and vain, are worshipped and obeyed by the most of mankind, and continually work in the hearts of them who rebel against the laws and gospel of Christ; 3. Among whom all of us, Jews or Gentiles, being equally depraved in our spirit and temper, while we remained unregenerate, lived and acted, led away with divers lusts and pleasures, sometimes seeking to satisfy one, and sometimes another; and under the dominion and influence of our inward corruptions, gratifying, acting over, and indulging the irregular appetites of our body, in all its members; and of our soul, in all its powers, faculties, wishes, and contrivances; and were naturally chargeable, and infected from our very conception, with original sin, and, on that account, condemned and exposed to the infinite and everlasting wrath of God, as much as any of those who are eternally damned. 4—6. But while we were in these loathsome, deplorable, condemned, helpless, and hopeless circumstances, it pleased God—whose riches of mercy and grace are altogether excellent, abundant, inexhaustible, and overflowing, and who is ready to pity, help, save, and enrich sinful and miserable creatures—according to that wonderful love which from eternity he fixed upon us, in choosing us to be eternally blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ—to recover us into a state of favour with himself, and infuse into us a principle of spiritual life, in conformity to, and by virtue of, our union and fellowship with Christ; and to give us a title to, and foretastes of, eternal salvation;—and without making any distinction of nations or conditions, to raise us up in Christ as our Head and Representative, and make us to sit in the heavenly mansions in him as our forerunner already entered for us into the full possession thereof, and hereby assuring us that, in due time, we, in our persons, shall sit there with him and all his saints;—7. That in all the future ages and generations of this world he might set forth an illustrious and encouraging pattern, pledge, and earnest of the transcendent excellency and superabundant fulness of his free favour as it hath been exemplified in acts of special goodness and endearing kindness toward us, Jews and Gentiles, through the person and mediation of Christ; and that, in the heavenly state, he might for ever demonstrate and display the supereminent glory of his free grace, in all the unsearchable riches thereof, to the everlasting astonishment, joy, and praise of angels and saints. 8. For, as hath been before hinted, the whole of that salvation which ye are possessed of and entitled to, in the contrivance, purchase, offer, and application of it, and in all its parts and degrees, proceeds merely from the good-will and favour of God, and is conveyed through faith,—not indeed by any virtue of faith itself, but as God's appointed means, whereby ye receive and rest upon Christ alone for it; and this faith itself, as well as the salvation thereby received, is not the product of any natural principle, good disposition, free-will, or improvement of the gospel that ye were capable of, but is wholly the free gift of God purchased by Christ, and graciously wrought in you by the almighty power of his Spirit. 9. Neither the salvation itself, nor the faith whereby it is received, is in the least owing to any good works done by us, as the meritorious, moving, or efficient cause of it; but in recovering us, when so inexpressibly guilty, polluted, rebellious, infamous, and wretched, God has so demonstrated his mercy and grace, as leaves no appearance of room, or occasion for any man, in a vain-glorious manner, to pretend he had done aught to render himself fit for, or worthy of it. 10. For all the good works or qualities which appear in us, Jews or Gentiles, are nothing else than the effects of God's grace towards us, who, with respect to our new-covenant state and renewed nature, are the curious workmanship of God, formed in, and by virtue of, our union with Christ, for bringing forth the fruits of holiness, for which, not our inclinations or agency, but the gracious purpose and preventing grace of God do prepare us.—11. Wherefore, that ye Gentile converts may be deeply and humbly affected with that amazing grace which has been extended to you, I beseech you seriously to reflect on your former deplorable condition, when ye lived in ignorance, idolatry, and all other defilements of the human nature; and being destitute of all the ordinances of God, were contemned and detested by his professed people: 12. That then ye had no knowledge of, or faith in, the only Saviour of sinners, nor any vital union to, or communion with him; nor any claim to the blessings of the gospel, purchased, revealed, or dispensed by him;—ye had no possession of, or right to, the privileges of his visible or invisible church, and no spiritual relation to, or fellowship with, his people:—ye had no share in the dispensation of the covenant of grace, and its unnumbered exceeding great and precious promises:—and so could have no solid, rational, and well-grounded hope of deliverance from misery or enjoyment of eternal life; but were living, like Atheists,

FOR this cause [*] I Paul, the [a]prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles,

2 (If ye have heard [†] of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to youward:

3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, as I wrote [‡] afore in few words;

4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,

5 [b]Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit;

6 [c]That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel;

7 Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power.

* For this cause—the equal admission of both Jews and Gentiles into the church of God—which doctrine the Lord revealed to him, and he faithfully preached—whereby he had provoked the Jews to persecute him, as an apostate, and the Gentiles, as a denouncer of their idolatry.—Ed.

without the knowledge, faith, fear, worship, and profession of the only true God, and destitute of all spiritual communion with, or communications from him. 13. But notwithstanding all your unworthiness, wickedness, and wretchedness, through the astonishing mercy and grace of God, ye are now, by the gospel dispensation, brought into a special relation and union to Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of lost sinners; and thereby translated from your former state of distance, enmity, and hopelessness, into a new-covenant state of friendship and fellowship with God and his church, through the merit and application of Jesus' atoning blood. 14. For he, in his person and mediation, is the only peace-maker, and the centre of union between God and us, and between one another, whether we are believing Jews or Gentiles;—who hath reconciled us to God, and to each other, and hath united us in one church, and cemented us together in heart and affection, as children of one family; the ceremonial law, that wall of partition which separated between Jews and Gentiles, being abolished through his incarnation and death, and the New-Testament worship, which gives equal access to both, appointed in its stead. 15, 16. And having in his crucifixion fulfilled their typical signification, he disannulled the obligation of these ceremonial institutions, which represented God still unpropitious, and proved the occasion of much hatred and enmity between Jews and Gentiles; that out of both he might make one church, formed, as new creatures, after the image of God; and framed together for gospel worship and new obedience; and by a new constitution under him made equally partakers of grace and glory;—that thus he might bring about an entire harmony and friendship between believers of all nations, as one spiritual body united to him by faith and love; and that, through his atoning sacrifice of himself upon the cross, he might remove their guilt, and bring them into a joint state of peace and favour with God. 17. And in order thus to reconcile them to God, and to each other in one gospel church, by the ministry of his servants, and the powerful operation of his Spirit, he published the glad tidings of peace and salvation to you Gentiles, who were far removed from the knowledge, profession, faith, and favour of God; and also to the Jews, who had long been his peculiar people, and had enjoyed the symbols of his presence, and the oracles and ordinances of his grace. 18. For such is the efficacy of his incarnation, obedience, and sufferings exhibited in the gospel, that by means thereof, we who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, through the direction and assistance of his Spirit, have an equally free and familiar access into the favour, presence, and fellowship of God, our common Father in and with Christ. 19. Now, therefore, ye Gentile believers, being reconciled and brought near to God, are no more aliens from his church, covenants, promises, or privileges, but, like freemen and fellow-citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, are entitled to, and joint partakers with, the believing Jews of all the blessings which pertain to the saints; and are, by regeneration and adoption, of the family and children of God, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. 20. And infallibly and for ever to establish your union with Christ, and with God in him as your Father and Sovereign, by means of the doctrines of the apostles and prophets, which exhibit and offer him to you, ye are, by faith, built upon Christ as your immoveable and life-giving Foundation; and connected, beautified, and strengthened by him as your chief Corner-stone. 21. In union with whom, and by virtue derived from him, the universal church, Jews or Gentiles, and every true member of it, placed in proper order for the use of the whole, doth, by a continual addition of new converts, or the further gracious growth of each—as animated and influenced by their living and life-giving Foundation—become a spiritual temple, formed by, dedicated to, and inhabited by the Lord Christ and his Father; and in which he manifests his gracious presence, displays his glory, and is worshipped and glorified; 22. In whom being vitally united to his person, and formed into a church state by his authority and influence, ye are built up together as a particular church—a living temple—which God had consecrated for himself, who, by the special presence, light, and grace of his Spirit, dwells among you, and in the heart of every true believer.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Alas, what a state of sin, slavery, wretchedness and wrath, are all men in by nature, Satan and their lusts hurrying them on to their own destruction! Transcendent and amazing grace must be necessary to quicken, to save, and to exalt for ever, such monsters of misery, guilt, and pollution; and pure and free is the manifestation of it. No works of ours can concur to deserve, prepare for, or assist it. How wonderful is that Christ, for whom, in whom, and with whom, all these rich mercies are received! Blessed be his name that Gentile idolaters, so ignorant, so wicked, are, through his person, righteousness, and mediation, brought into his gospel church!—While the building goes up sing ye nations—sing all the powers of my soul—GRACE, GRACE, UNTO IT!

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. For my boldly maintaining that you believing Gentiles have an equal access to the church and presence of God, and are equally related to him, as the Jews, I am, at this very time, through the malice and indefatigable opposition of my carnal countrymen a prisoner at Rome, of which I boast and glory, as I know it will turn out to your spiritual advantage. 2. For ye must needs have heard how Jesus Christ, in his infinite condescension and grace, appointed me as a steward in his family, and herald in his kingdom, to preach the gospel chiefly to you and other Gentiles, that ye might believe and be saved; 3, 4. And how, by repeated visions and revelations, and by the immediate inspiration of his Spirit, he made known to me the great mystery of the salvation of sinful men, through his own incarnation, obedience, death, resurrection, and ascension, and of the gracious calling of the Gentiles into his gospel church; as, according to the measure of my knowledge of it, I have already hinted unto you:——5. Which mystery was not at all made known to the Gentiles in former ages, nor so distinctly, fully, and clearly to the Jews, as it is now revealed to the holy apostles and other inspired teachers of the Christian church, in consequence of the resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ;—6. Particularly that branch of it,—that, without any regard to circumcision or any other Jewish ceremonies, the idolatrous Gentiles should, equally and in the strictest connexion with the Jews, be called and admitted into the same gospel church, partaking of all the privileges thereof, and be made members of the same mystical body of Christ,—to derive all enlightening, quickening, sanctifying, and comforting influence from him, and hold all their right and claim to all the promised blessings of the new covenant under him, and partake of the promised Spirit in all his influences, gifts, graces, and glories, shed on them abundantly through Christ: 7. Of which glorious gospel, being miraculously converted, and receiving a sovereignly free gift of the apostleship, I was, by the immediate appointment of Jesus Christ and his Father, made a preacher—to publish it in all its light, fulness, and glory; and had my commission ratified by many miraculous operations, and by an amazing success in the conversion and salvation of sinners. 8. Unto me, who was once a furious persecutor, blasphemer, and injurious person, and who in myself am still so transcendently worthless and hell-deserving, is this condescending, astonishing, and unparalleled favour shown—that I, above all the apostles, should be pitched upon to publish, far and wide, among the idolatrous Gentiles, the glad tidings of salvation; and to be instrumental, in the hand of the Spirit, in making known and conveying to multitudes those exceeding riches of mercy and merit, of grace and glory, which are treasured up in Christ, and proposed in the gospel by and through him to the worst of sinners,—and which can never be fathomed, exhausted, numbered, or traced out, in all their endless variety, excellency, and fulness. 9. And to make both Jews and Gentiles clearly perceive what a happy fellowship believers of all nations, as one church, under Christ their Head, now have in the exceeding great and glorious blessings of the gospel;—a mystery, in which unfathomable depths of divine sovereignty, wisdom, and grace are implied,—and which lay long concealed in the purpose and mind of God himself, who, in and with his Son Jesus Christ, created all things in heaven and earth; 10. And that even all the dignified and mighty ranks and orders of holy angels, who minister to the redeemed heirs of salvation, might, with ravishing pleasure, joy, and praise, behold and contemplate the infinite wisdom of God, in the unnumbered displays of its glory, in the doctrines, ministrations, blessings, and privileges of the New Testament church;—11. All which is now transacted in exact agreement with God's eternal purpose, which he formed with a gracious regard to his church, as considered in Christ their Head, Lord, and Saviour; 12. In and through whom, as the only Mediator between God and men, we have great liberty and enlargement of spirit in our dealings with God, as our reconciled Father and Friend; and through faith, receiving and resting on him alone for salvation, have a humble assurance of his favour towards us, his gracious acceptance of our persons and services, and his audience of our prayers, for all real and necessary blessings. 13. In the contemplation of these things, I entreat you never to be disheartened, affrightened, or made negligent or spiritless in your Christian course, by the sufferings which I have to endure for my adherence to, and preaching of, the gospel; but rather to the honour of your Christian profession, be encouraged, strengthened, and animated therein, as they are indeed a great honour put on me, for the confirmation of what I preached and ye believed. 14. And that ye may be directed to this and all other necessary duties, I recommend you by the most affectionate, earnest, and solemn prayer, to the favour and mercy of the eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our Father and Friend in him. 15. Of and under whom, and of the Father through him, all true worshippers, whether angels or saints, are gathered into one family, and have received the most transcendent and glorious honours and privileges; 16. And I plead that he, who has already done so much for you, may, in a manner answerable to his own immense fulness of wisdom, faithfulness, power, goodness, mercy, and grace, and by his almighty Spirit powerfully working in your renewed hearts, more and more fortify you against the efforts of inward corruptions, or temptations from Satan or the world; and invigorate and animate you with holy courage to exercise every grace, perform every good work, endure every trial, and, abounding in holiness and comfort, to hold on to the end, through all opposition and danger. 17. And that Jesus Christ, together with and by his Spirit, may be constantly present in your minds, not only by the habit, but by realizing and appropriating acts of faith; and have a sensible abode in your hearts, by continual gracious impressions and manifestations of his love to you as persons united to him;—that ye, being deeply fixed and firmly established in an experimental and assuring perception and faith of his love to you, and in your exercise of grateful returns of love to him, 18. May, by means of his oracles and ordinances, attended with the enlightening and sanctifying influences of his Spirit, be enabled to apprehend, and be suitably affected with, the unbounded love of Christ; clearly perceiving, as far as is possible for saints in this world, its unmeasurable extent, as it reaches to Gentiles as well as Jews, to all ranks, sorts, and degrees of sinners, and to all forms and degrees of spiritual and heavenly blessings:—its inconceivable length, in reaching from everlasting to everlasting;—its unfathomable depth, as it brought the most high God of glory to the lowest state of service, sufferings, and death, and makes him stoop to redeem us from our lowest depths of sinfulness and misery;—and its astonishing height, in his exalted intercession for us, and advancing us to the highest glory of which our nature is capable;—19. And may, by faith and spiritual experience, know more the virtue, power, and sweetness of the transcendent love of Christ, and of God in him, in all its most excellent manifestations, fruits, and effects,—which, in itself, and in its wonderful operations, provisions, and designs, infinitely surpasses all the comprehensions of angels and men;—that thereby ye may be more and more abundantly partakers of a divine nature, and, to your utmost capacity, enriched with all that fulness of light and grace, holiness, joy, and peace, which God has prepared, promised, and communicates to his principal favourites,—and in due time arrive at the most full and transcendent enjoyment of him as your infinite ALL IN ALL. 20, 21. Now to this almighty, all-sufficient, gracious, new-covenant God, who, by that very power, of the almighty operations of which we have had abundant experience in our souls, is able to grant all those extensive blessings which I have desired, or which can be desired by us,—nay, to do infinitely above what we can ask, or even conceive,—be ascribed all possible honour, in the way of faith, love, adoration, worship, obedience, thanksgiving, blessing, and praise; on account of his infinite perfections, marvellous counsels, and mighty works of creation, providence, and grace,—in the whole universal church, in heaven and earth, and by every society and member thereof,—through Jesus Christ and his mediation,—during all the periods of time or ages of eternity; so may it and so shall it be.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Behold, my soul, how the sovereign grace, infinite wisdom, and ancient purposes, of the most High appear in the conversion of Gentile sinners to the almighty Saviour! Great is the boldness of access we have now to God: and unsearchable the riches of mercies and blessings which the gospel brings to us.—With deep self-abasement, and affecting admiration of God's favours, ought ministers to preach it. With patience and courage they ought to labour and suffer, as is most for the good of the church. And with frequent and fervent prayer should they carry on their whole work, asking for themselves and their people abundant supplies of grace.—While angels, with admiration, pry into these mysteries, let my soul contemplate the infinite love of my Kinsman Redeemer, and be filled with all the fulness of God. And while grace for ever reigns through his righteousness, let there be glory to God in the highest.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. Since, therefore, these amazingly glorious privileges and blessings are freely and equally bestowed on you Gentile believers as on the Jews, I, who, to my inexpressible honour, am here, by the wise disposal, and for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ, a prisoner for the faithful preaching of his gospel, particularly to the Gentiles,—earnestly beseech you constantly and perseveringly to live and act in a holy and honourable conversation, as becometh that gospel which ye have believed, and that high calling of God in Christ Jesus whereby ye have been effectually called to glory and virtue. 2. And in acting suitably to the spirit-

13 [d]Till we all come [e]in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the [†]stature of the fulness of Christ:

14 That we henceforth be no more [e]children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive;

15 But [f]speaking[‡] the truth in love, [g]may grow up into him in all things, which is [h]the head, even Christ:

16 [i]From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love.

17 [k]This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind;

18 [m]Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the [§]blindness of their heart:

ual privileges and obligations of the gospel, study to walk humbly with God, under a deep sense of your own meanness, unworthiness, and sinfulness, and to behave humbly toward each other, esteeming others better than yourselves; and with all courteousness, candour, calmness, and sweetness of temper. In real and hearty affection to Jesus Christ, and to one another in him, kindly bear affronts and injuries without retaliating or revenging them. Calmly overlook, or bear with, the weaknesses, indiscretions, forwardness, and peevish tempers of others, and even pity and excuse them: 3. And thus carefully and diligently, by all proper means, maintain and promote that spiritual union and harmony of souls which is the fruit of the Holy Ghost's dwelling in them, and consists in that pure and spiritual peace which is the best and strongest bond of your religious society and fellowship in it. 4. To engage you to cultivate this amiable union, consider the joint interest ye have in all the same important things. The church, of which ye are all alike members, is but one mystical body, and so ye ought to have the same fellow-feeling, care, and concern for one another. The same divine Spirit of love and peace animates, guides, and dwells in this whole mystical body, and every member of it; —and therefore ye ought to act with united hearts under his influence, and in imitation of him. Ye are, by God's grace, called to God's kingdom and glory, as the one summary object of your hope; and, in your effectual calling, ye are all partakers of the same grace of hope which terminates on Christ as its only foundation;—and therefore ye should live in harmony and peace, as heirs together of the same grace of life, and expectants of the same heavenly inheritance. 5. There is one Lord and Saviour of all true believers, even Jesus Christ, the only Mediator, King, and Head of his church; and therefore ye ought to unite, with one heart and soul, in your dependence on, and allegiance, love, and obedience to him, and in your sincere affection to all his subjects, according to the laws of his kingdom. There is but one and the same rule or doctrine of faith, one object of faith, and one sort of like precious faith, in the whole church; and therefore this should, in every member, work in the same actings of love to Christ, and to one another. The baptism, whether external or internal, of all church members, is one and the same in its nature, tendency, and design; in which they are solemnly devoted to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as one God, sole Proprietor of the church, and brought under the strongest bonds to be entirely and unreservedly the Lord's, and therefore ought to behave with the utmost unity of character. 6. And, in fine, the Covenant God and Father of all true believers, Jews or Gentiles, who is infinitely above them in perfections and dominion, and whose special presence preserves, governs, and supplies every part of the mystical body of Christ,—and who, by his Spirit and grace, dwells and works in every one of you,—is but one; and therefore ye ought to be of one heart and soul, in your acknowledgments, love, and reverence of him, and in your obedience and subjection to him as your own God and Father, and ought to love his children as your spiritual brethren.—7. But notwithstanding our unity in so many great and important things, Jesus Christ, according to his own infinite wisdom and bounty, freely bestows upon his church a beautiful variety of spiritual offices, gifts, graces, and attainments.—8. Hence the Holy Ghost, by David, suggested, that having—in consequence of his victory over sin, Satan, the world, and death—in his sufferings, resurrection, and ascension,—received fulness of authority and influences from his Father, as the reward of his work, he should liberally distribute diversified offices, gifts, and graces, to men, Jews or Gentiles, professing or rebellious sinners. 9. Now this very hint of his glorious and triumphant ascension plainly intimates that it was founded on his debased incarnation, obedience, death, and burial.—10. And it is the same only begotten Son of God who so humbled himself, that, as man and Mediator, after conquering all his enemies, hath ascended to the right hand of God, that, by the virtue of his death, victory, and triumph, he might fill all the officers, members, ordinances, and administrations of his church with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and thus fulfil all the ancient types and predictions, and perfect whatever relates to the salvation of his people. 11. In prosecution of this gracious design, he furnished his gospel church with proper officers;—some of them extraordinary for her first settlement,—as apostles, who received their commission immediately from himself, to be eyewitnesses of his resurrection from the dead; whose authority extended equally to all the churches, and who could, under inspiration, teach the whole scheme of the gospel, work all sorts of miracles, and convey the Holy Ghost, in his miraculous influence, to other believers. Others he appointed and qualified as prophets, to explain the Old Testament, and foretell things to come. Others he appointed and qualified as inspired evangelists, to attend the apostles, and finish what they had begun. Other officers were ordinary to continue in the church till the end of the world; namely, pastors, to watch over, govern, and dispense the ordinances of Christ to particular congregations; and teachers, to instruct church members and others in the truths of the gospel. 12. All which offices and officers are appointed and rendered successful for completing the church in the number of her chosen members, and each in their gifts and graces, and for uniting and compacting them in a regular society, and restoring such as had fallen, and for faithfully dispensing to them his word and ordinances, and for the building up of his mystical body the church in knowledge, faith, love, joy, and holy obedience. 13. Till we all, whether Jews or Gentiles, strong or weak, who do or may hereafter believe, be perfectly cemented into an entire agreement in the doctrines, and by the grace of faith; and in a clear, affectionate, and fiducial knowledge, and approving acknowledgment of the eternal Son of God as our only Lord and Saviour; and so, by gradual improvement in gifts and graces, may arrive at that state of perfection which is reserved for the whole body of true believers in heaven after the last judgment. 14. That thus we may no longer continue, like children, deficient in knowledge and prudence, weak in faith, and wavering in opinion, easily taken with new things, tossed or driven about, as ships without ballast, or flying clouds, by unstable, noisy, violent, and unsubstantial errors, whereby artful and designing men labour to impose on and deceive us, to our eternal ruin;—15. But, on the contrary, may sincerely speak of, and plead for, the truths of the gospel, in the exercise of fervent love to them, to Christ, and the souls of men;—and may, like living members of him as our quickening Head, increase in all light, grace, and holiness, by virtue of our union with him, in conformity to his pattern, and for his honour. 16. From whom, as the Head and Fountain, all his members, being orderly and closely joined among themselves, and united to him, do, by that energy which is communicated from him through every ordinance, officer, and member,—in a proportion suited to the state, condition, and exigence, of every part,—build up themselves, and one another, in Christian love to him their Head, and to their fellow-members.—17. Since therefore ye, as members of Christ, are partakers of such privileges, let me again earnestly entreat and solemnly charge you, in the name and authority of the Lord Jesus, that henceforth ye no more behave like other Gentiles, who, unrenewed by the grace of God, still continue in their sensual, worldly, and idolatrous courses, suited to the pride, ignorance, and folly of their depraved mind. 18. Having their understandings filled with ignorance and error concerning everything spiritual; and through which, indulged, increased, and confirmed, their wills and affections are become strangers to, and alienated from, the way of life, holiness, and happiness, which God appoints and approves, and by which he lives in the soul, and it lives to him;—19. And who, through their contracted habits of ignorance, error, and hardness of heart, and the righteous judgment of God giving them up to their own lusts, have become quite insensible to the stings of conscience, committing the grossest abominations; and have voluntarily, and with full consent, delivered themselves over to the most eager delight in, desire after, and practice of, the most shameful and detestable impurities.—20. But ye, whom God has called from darkness to his marvellous light, have not so learned the doctrines of Christ, relative to his person, offices, and designs, or the obligations ye are under to him, and the privileges ye have received from him, as to induce, or even permit you to venture on such licentious practices; 21. If, as ye profess and I hope, ye have indeed understood, hearkened to, and believed with the heart, what ye have heard from and concerning Jesus Christ,—and have been inwardly and savingly enlightened and taught by his Spirit heartily to receive the truths of the gospel in their simplicity and purity, as they were delivered by him and his inspired apostles, and were exemplified in his temper and conduct, and are practised by the living members of his mystical body.—22. But that which ye have been taught, influenced, and obliged to, is to labour, by his grace, in the use of all appointed means, more and more to discard with abhorrence, abandon, and mortify that debased principle of indwelling corruption, which discovered itself in your former practices, which vitiates all the faculties of the soul and members of the body, and of itself issues in eternal destruction, according to the working of its many impetuous inclinations, which deceive carnal hearts with false appearances of profit, honour, or pleasure.—23. And through the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost, to press after a further renovation of all the inward powers of your soul, and that your minds may be more and more enlightened in the knowledge of divine things, and your will and affections more and more replenished with grace and holiness: 24. And that, instead of wearing the deformity of sinful corruption any longer in sinful practices, ye may, by daily and increasing exercise of grace, clothe and adorn yourselves with all the beauties of that transcendently excellent new creature, which is produced by the infinite wisdom, power, and grace of God, according to his will, and after that image of himself, in which he at first created man, and which consists in real, internal, effectual, and divine principles, habits, and acts of equity and honesty towards men; and in true, not shadowy or ceremonial, purity and piety towards God.—25. Being thus taught and privileged, avoid with peculiar care the sins to which ye were formerly addicted. With abhorrence banish from you falsehood, lies, and all manner of deceit and fraud, which are so base in themselves, and so eversive of all true morality. In all your speeches and dealings with men make conscience of the strictest regard to truth; for, in both civil and religious societies, we are members of one body, and therefore ought always to act truly and candidly, as having a joint concern in the welfare of the whole. 26. Watch over your passions, that they may be kept under due government. Labour to restrain and regulate your anger, that it may never be causeless, excessive or mischievous. And if at any time ye are, through temptation, hurried into sinful passion, quickly endeavour, through the gracious assistance of God, to suppress it, and be reconciled to your brother. Let it never rest in your bosom till sunset, to unfit your minds for your evening devotions, or to disturb your sleep, or rise with you the next day; 27. And that ye may not give Satan a place in your hearts, to irritate or keep up turbulent and revengeful passions, or gratify and give him an advantage against you, by your yielding to his malicious and destructive designs, stand on your guard against his temptations; whenever ye find your spirits heated, resist him, steadfast in the faith, who watches all occasions to insnare you;—and take heed of giving ear to false accusers and slanderers, who, as his agents, labour to incense you against others without ground: 28. And if any of you, either before or since your conversion, have been guilty of private thefts or frauds, let them, as persons who have learned Christ, hereafter abhor every form of dishonesty; and in the station and employment in which God hath placed them, let them earn, by laborious industry and care, what, by the blessing of God, may maintain themselves and family, and even help to relieve the necessities of the poor; that thus they may become a blessing, instead of a nuisance and burden, to civil and religious communities. 29. And let no light, frothy, profane, indecent, obscene, or opprobrious language, which marks the corruption of the heart from which it proceeds, and tends to corrupt others, ever come out of your mouth; but let all your words be under the conduct of a gracious spirit, and be wise, prudent, and suited to persons, times, and places; and adapted in the way of counsel, caution, reproof, comfort, or instruction, to promote the spiritual benefit of the company you are in, and recommend true and undefiled religion to their consciences and hearts. 30. Beware lest, with any of these things, so directly contrary to the holy nature, will, operations, gifts, and graces of the Holy Ghost, who loves and effects all true holiness in the souls of men, ye provoke him to withdraw his gracious presence, and deprive you of his comforts,—by which ye have been plainly marked with God's image as his people, and have an infallible pledge and earnest of that full salvation which ye shall receive at death and in the last judgment. 31. And to prevent your offending him, or losing his comfortable and sealing presence, carefully avoid and abhor all rancour, severity, and sourness of temper; all furious raging and ungovernable passions; all causeless and excessive anger; all loud threatening and scolding, noisy quarrels and contentions; all railings, defamations, and backbitings; which are so dishonouring to God and injurious to men; and all malicious, spiteful, envious, and injurious thoughts, or heart-burnings. 32. And in order to cherish his presence and influence, always labour, as assisted by him, to cultivate an affectionate, affable, and benevolent disposition and behaviour, taking pleasure to do offices of kindness and friendship one to another; sympathize with, and show all tenderness, pity, and mercy towards the weak, afflicted, and discouraged; frankly and freely forgive and forget those injuries which are done you by brethren, in consideration and imitation of that infinitely greater forgiveness of your manifold and aggravated transgressions, which God, in the riches of his grace, hath extended to you through the infinitely precious obedience and death of his dear and only begotten Son.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—What a credit are believers to their happy station in Christ, when they are meek, patient, forbearing one another in love, and united in sentiment and affection! And deep are the obligations they are under to Christian love and unity, who are all members of the same mystical body of Christ;—all animated by the same Spirit;—all partakers of the same hope and heavenly inheritance;—all related to, and interested in, the same Lord and Saviour;—all agreed in the same fundamental doctrines of faith, under the same baptismal seal and engagement;—and have all the same covenant God and Father, who is above them all, as their Governor, and dwells in them all by his Spirit.—What blessings may we not hope for from our once crucified, but now exalted, Redeemer! With bounteous care he scatters his gifts among the children of men. And ample is the provision of offices, officers, gifts and graces, he has provided for his church, to promote her growth in numbers, unity, and order; and of all her members in knowledge, faith, and love; and to prevent their being seduced into error and wickedness.—But dreadful is the case of wicked men, especially when they have provoked God to give them up to their own hearts' lusts. How ignorant, how stupid, how bent and eager on the most shocking abominations, they then become!—Odious is an inward principle of sin, wherever it is found. How corrupt, abominable, and deceiving! It perverts and inflames the passions, and fills them with anger, wrath, and malice. It hurries men into deceit, falsehood, idleness, and fraud. It renders their discourse unsavoury, defiling, clamorous, and injurious; and it and its fruits gratify the devil, and offend the Holy Ghost. But excellent and adorning is that inward habit or principle of grace in which believers do more and more abound. Delightfully it conforms men to God, subdues their angry passions, renders them kind, tender-hearted, and ready to forgive injuries;—makes them honest, upright, faithful, and industrious, and their converse godly and edifying;—and excites them to a temper and conduct answerable to the dealings of the Holy Ghost, and the endearing obligations of God's superlative and forgiving kindness to them.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1. Let therefore the astonishing kindness and forgiving mercy of God your Father, and his Spirit, excite you, as his beloved and loving children, begotten and adopted by him, to imitate him in exercising all kindness and forgiveness one towards another. 2. Nor is the consideration and example of Jesus Christ less suited to engage us to a constant, progressive, friendly, and affectionate love one to another, since he has, with superlative condescension and grace, first loved us who believe; and, in manifestation thereof, has freely become our Surety, and yielded up his great and infinite Self to the most debased service and terrible death for us, as an expiatory sacrifice to satisfy divine justice, and reconcile us to God, to the highest honour and delight of all his perfections. 3. But, to return to the warning which I had begun;—in a manner becoming Christians renewed, sanctified, and devoted to God, earnestly flee, abstain from, and utterly detest every form of unchastity, and all that indecency, immodesty, and lewdness, in gestures, looks, dress, or acts, that approach towards, or tempt others to it: and, in like manner, avoid and detest all irregular and impure desires after forbidden objects, and inordinate love to, or pursuits after, the things of this world, which would make you discontented without them, or to take dishonourable or unjust methods to procure or retain them. 4. Never secretly indulge any shameful practices, nor any light, wanton, or obscene speeches or jests, which offend God, and tend to grieve or inflame the hearers; but let your lips be rather employed in commendations of God and Christ, and his works, and in thankful acknowledgments of, and praises for, his kindness. 5. For having learned the doctrines of the Christian religion, ye cannot but know, that no person, who is addicted to, and lives and allows himself in, the practice of whoredom, or indulges himself in impure affections and lascivious actions,—nor any worldly-minded covetous wretch, who loves, desires, and delights in his worldly enjoyments more than in God himself, be his profession what it will,—has any title to, or, continuing such, can have any present or future enjoyment of, Christ and his Father in his kingdom, with the glories which attend it. 6. Let no Gentile philosopher, Jewish corrupter of God's law, or any other, by their plausible, empty, and fallacious speeches, make you to think these crimes small: for, on account of them, all who obstinately persist in them shall be excluded from the heavenly kingdom of God, and be exposed to his wrath here and hereafter, which shall come rushing in full floods upon them. 7. By prayer, watchfulness, and diligence, labour therefore against these things, and never be companions, encouragers, or imitators, of such persons in their iniquities, lest ye also share in their just and tremendous punishments: 8. For, in your heathen and unconverted state, ye were utterly ignorant of spiritual things, and walked in the dark paths of wickedness;—but now the Spirit of God hath enlightened your mind to know the truth as it is in Jesus; in whom, as your Head, ye have all light, wisdom, and purity, and from whom, as his members, ye derive all knowledge and grace: it is therefore your duty and privilege, with perseverance and daily progress, to live and act before God like persons begotten of God by the light of the gospel, and enlightened and directed by the word and Spirit of Christ. 9. Having a conversation answerable to the fruits produced and cherished by the Holy Ghost, which are directly contrary to what I have warned you against, and consist of everything kind and beneficial, and in rendering to God and men their respective dues, in a constant and steadfast adherence to the truths of the gospel, and in exact truth, integrity, and faithfulness, in all that ye say and do. 10. And by the assistance and light of the Spirit, trying and proving, from the Scriptures, what is well-pleasing to the Lord Christ, and heartily approving thereof, and practising it, as an evidence of your regard to it,—and thus approving yourselves faithful servants, and obedient children to Christ and his Father. 11. And that ye may walk as children of the light, avoid all partnership in, all countenancing or encouraging of, sinful practices, which are unprofitable and injurious, which proceed from ignorance of God, are shameful in themselves, often committed in secret, and leading to eternal misery; but by friendly, kind, and prudent, admonitions of the guilty, and especially by your holy and circumspect conversation, expose their deformity, confute, reprove, and condemn them: 12. For it would put to the blush, and even shock, a religious, sober, and modest mind, so much as to mention, except in necessary reproof, several of the detestable practices which your heathen neighbours, unwilling to expose their own character, commit secretly in their idolatrous worship or otherwise. 13. But by the enlightening influence of the word and Spirit of God, ye are enabled to discern the deformity of those sinful practices, and to live in a contrary manner,—in order to convince your wicked neighbours, and shame them out of their wickedness. 14. Wherefore the Lord, in the Old Testament predictions, relative to the calling of the Gentiles, plainly intimates, that Christ's enlightening, quickening, comforting, and sanctifying influence is conveyed in the gospel call, and ought to be attended with your earnest endeavours to shake off your ignorance, stupidity, insensibility, and spiritual death,—even as his quickening power was conveyed to dead persons in his calls to arise. 15. Take heed, therefore, that your whole conversation be accurate, exactly answerable to your Christian character, light, obligations, and the rule of God's word, as under his all-seeing eye, and in view of enemies as well as friends,—not as persons ignorant, injudicious, unwise, and heedless; but as those who are taught of God the truth as it is in Jesus, and who wisely avoid exposing yourselves to infamy or hurt, or giving any occasion of stumbling to others. 16. And see that, by a diligent and circumspect Christian walk, as being deeply affected with godly sorrow for your former mispending of time,—you carefully improve every moment to the best advantage in the service of Christ, as if ye had dearly bought it out of the hand of sin, Satan, and the sloth, ease, and worldly business, to which it was formerly devoted, and the rather, as the times in which ye live are times of great immorality, ignorance, profaneness, and of persecution, trouble, and danger, in which both Jews and Gentiles wait for your halting,—that they may speak evil against you, and against Jesus Christ and the gospel on your account. 17. Take heed, therefore, that ye no more act foolishly and inconsiderately in the matters of God and eternal salvation, nor needlessly expose yourselves to the malice and fury of your enemies, but conduct yourselves suitably to your Christian character; and endeavour, through divine grace, to live and act as those who understand and highly regard the will of Jesus Christ as the rule of the purity and prudence of your conversation. 18. And to prevent your falling into imprudent or abominable conduct, carefully avoid all unseasonable or immoderate use of intoxicating liquors, which cause us, in an unmanly, nay, worse than brutal, manner to profane and prostitute the bounties of providence, which enfeeble, defile, and disorder all the powers of both body and soul, and prompt to babbling, blasphemy, and all manner of madness and debauchery; but let it be your great concern to be filled with the influences, gifts, graces, and comforts, of the Holy Ghost, which qualify for, and excite to, everything prudent, holy, and pleasant. 19. And either by yourselves, or in fellowship with one another, express the joys of your heart in singing psalms, 21 Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

22 [o]Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, [f]as unto the Lord.

23 For [g]the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is [h]the head of the church; and he is the Saviour of the body.

24 Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, [i]so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing.

25 [k]Husbands, love your wives, even as [l]Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it;

26 That [m]he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word;[‡]

27 That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish.

28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies: he that loveth his wife loveth himself.

[a] The distinction of "psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs" is not now certainly understood. The names might include other compositions besides those contained in the scriptural collection called David's, but they may also be confined to that collection; and surely before they be extended farther some authority beyond conjecture must be furnished. That the Ephesian converts, and other primitive Christians, employed nothing but the voice in their sacred music, is attested by Justin. Respon. ad Orthodox., p. 107.—Ἀπὸ ὀργάνων, "without musical instruments," is his expression.—Ed.

CHILDREN, [a]obey your parents in the Lord:* for this is right.

2 [b]Honour thy father and mother, (which is the first commandment with promise,)

3 That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And, [c]ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture† and admonition‡ of the Lord.

songs, and hymns, which ye either find in Scripture, or are composed by holy persons, or those inspired among you,—to the honour of our Lord Jesus Christ, and his Father in him. 20. And always maintaining a grateful disposition of heart to God for all the mercies which ye receive, temporal, spiritual, or eternal, pleasant or painful, improve every occasion of expressing your thankfulness to God, the Father of Christ, and our Father in him, as the original source of these blessings, and through the person and mediation of Christ, who purchased and bestows them, and in whom alone our praises and prayers can be presented acceptably to God. 21. And directed, obliged, and enabled, by these influences of the Spirit, study a humble performance of all relative duties, incumbent upon you in your natural, civil, public, or private stations of life, as persons who have the fear of God implanted in your hearts, and whose consciences are deeply awed and impressed with his authority in his word, and with his exact observation of your conduct, and his future judgment. 22. Particularly do you, believing wives, pay all becoming reverence, honour, subjection, and obedience, to your own husbands, who have, by the marriage-bond, devoted themselves to you, as your loving superiors; and always act herein as in the sight and presence of the Lord Christ, from love to his person, in obedience to his authority, and with an eye to his glory, and in the manner in which his people are subject to him. 23. For by the law of nature and marriage, the husband is constituted the head, guide, and guardian of the wife, in a manner somewhat similar to that in which Christ, as Mediator, is constituted the Head, Governor, and Protector of the church,—in which relation he is their Saviour and Redeemer from everything sinful and wretched, and to everything truly honourable or happy. 24. As therefore the church is cheerfully and faithfully subject to the authority of Christ in all her spiritual concerns; so let wives, with meekness, willingness, and fidelity, be subject to their husbands in all things lawful in the Lord. 25. On the other hand, to procure the kind submission of your wives, see that you husbands never tyrannize over them, or be passionate or bitter against them, but by all gentle carriage, due honour, tender sympathy, and every other form of kind behaviour towards their soul and body, manifest the most endearing and ardent affection, in imitation of Christ, who so loved the church that he freely gave up himself to the most debased service, suffering, and death, in her room, and for her spiritual and eternal benefit: 26. That, by his blood and Spirit, through his word, he might deliver her members from the guilt, power, and pollution of sin, and justify, renew, sanctify, and consecrate them to the service of God: 27. That having gradually sanctified and adorned them with his Spirit and grace, he might, in due time, place them in his immediate presence in heaven, entirely freed from every remainder of sin and trouble, holy and happy. 28. Influenced by, and in imitation of, this peculiar, superlative, and abiding love of Christ, husbands ought to love their wives sincerely, constantly, tenderly, and ardently, as they do their own bodies, especially since everything they do for their welfare and comfort will turn out for their own. 29. For no reasonable man, out of enmity to the health, ease, or comfort of his own body, ever neglected or abused it, but from a principle of natural affection, feeds, clothes, warms, and refreshes it; and so every husband ought to deal with his wife, who is one flesh with him,—even as Christ, in his most affectionate love, takes care of his church, which he hath espoused to, and made one with, himself: 30. For we, who believe in him, are members of his mystical body, and, in a spiritual sense, are more closely united to him than ever Eve was to Adam, and derive all our grace and glory from his person, as crucified for, and united to us. 31. The standing law of marriage, mentioned by Adam immediately after the formation and espousals of Eve, requires such closeness of union, and tenderness of affection between married persons, as if they were incorporated into one body, and were more to be regarded and loved than even parents themselves. 32. That close union between married persons, particularly Adam and Eve, was indeed an emblem of the spiritual union between Christ and his members, whom, as their Head and Husband, he animates, influences, rules, governs, and cares for, in the most tender manner. 33. But in connexion with this, it also implies, that every husband ought to love his wife with the same sincere and singular affection as he does himself; and that every wife ought, with a conjugal love, to pay all becoming respect, honour, and obedience to her husband.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—With readiness ought Christians to imitate Jesus Christ and his Father in their kindness and love to men. And the faith and sense of their redeeming love should make us carefully avoid all gross wickedness of every form, as utterly unworthy of our Christian character, privileges, and obligations, and as odious to God and ruinous to ourselves. A visible change of behaviour should be studied by all such as are awakened unto life by the powerful voice of Christ. Diligently should they avoid all fellowship with wicked persons or deeds, be watchful and circumspect in evil days, and use great care to improve time to the best advantage. Great should be our concern to have our heart filled with the Holy Ghost, and to live always under his comforting influences,—in everything giving thanks to Christ, and to God through him. Earnestly should we labour to fulfil the duties of every station, from a principle of faith and filial fear of God. And happy are those families, of which Christ is the centre, and his redeeming kindness the great pattern and motive of mutual behaviour!

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1. Do you children, whatever be your age and circumstances in the world, submissively, readily, and cheerfully hearken to and obey the counsels and commands of your parents in all lawful things, from love to Christ, regard to his authority, and for his glory and honour;—for, according to all laws, human and divine, this is a just debt, and is highly fit and acceptable in itself, as ye have been brought into being by their means, and are so much beholden to their care and kindness; 2. Yea, the first command of the second table of the moral law, and the only command which has a promise annexed to itself in particular, requires every one of you to think and speak of, and conduct yourselves towards both your parents in the most affectionate, reverential, submissive, obedient, and honourable manner. 3. That, through the blessing of God upon your obedience, your life on earth may continue long and prosperous. 4. And do you parents carefully avoid everything humoursome, unreasonable, or harsh, towards your children, which might provoke their resentment, exasperate their passions, and prejudice them against you or your Christian religion: and, by a holy and diligent example, by much fervent prayer, by earnest and persuasive instruction, and by prudent, moderate, and seasonable correction, administered to them in obedience to Christ's authority, and in dependence on his blessing to concur therewith, bring them up in the knowledge, fear, worship, and obedience of God in him.—Earnestly watch over and restrain the first appearances of inward corruptions, errors, or immoralities; and direct and encourage them to everything dutiful towards God or men.——5. Servants, make conscience of obeying all the lawful commands of your earthly masters and mistresses, who, in things pertaining to this world, are set over you by God's providence, and have a right to your services, whether they are believers or not. Be willingly and faithfully subject to them, with a reverential fear of their, and especially of God's displeasure if ye should betray your trust, and embezzle their goods, or disobey their just orders. And see that ye do all this with a sincere, ingenuous, and honest heart, as therein desiring and intending to serve the Lord Christ, and adorn the doctrines of the gospel. 6. Fulfil your services with diligence, constancy and fidelity; not merely when the eyes of your masters or others are upon you, as if ye only aimed at pleasing men for your own honour or advantage, but as from regard to Christ's authority, and always under his eye, and in view of being judged by him, and in order to promote his honour, doing whatever God requires of you in this matter from a sincere principle of religious regard towards him. 7. In this manner perform every part of your due service, freely, affectionately, and industriously, and with all readiness of mind, as persons who love your masters, and have their interest at heart,—doing everything which God or they call you to from a sense of duty to Jesus Christ, your supreme Lord and Master, that ye may serve, please, and glorify him: and not merely to acquit yourselves in the sight, and gain the esteem of men. 8. And know, for your encouragement, that however your masters may reward you in this world, ye shall receive a gracious and eternal reward of all your faithful services from the Lord Jesus in the great day of judgment. 9. And ye believing masters, take heed that ye fulfil the duties of your stations with the like views, in singleness of heart as to Christ, and according to the will of God; and that ye behave towards your servants, not in a domineering, severe, threatening, insolent, cruel, or oppressive manner, but with gentleness and humanity,—always remembering that ye yourselves are the servants of our Lord Christ, who takes notice of your conduct, and will call you to account for it, without paying any more respect to you than to the meanest of your servants. 10. And that ye may perform your relative and other duties, and resist all the influences of sin, Satan, and the world, who labour to oppose you in your progress heavenward, set out and press forward, like valiant soldiers, under the Captain of salvation, not in your own strength, but in the strength of Christ, and through his almighty influences enabling you to every duty, service, and suffering, to which ye are at any time called. 11. And that, while ye set out in his strength, ye may be thoroughly furnished for all encounters with your spiritual enemies, always earnestly endeavour, under a sense of their power and your own weakness and danger, to live in the constant exercise of all those graces, and use of those means, which God appoints, gives, and makes effectual for the full defence and spiritual safety of his people, that ye may be able to withstand and defeat the numerous, insnaring, fallacious, and cunning, attacks of the devil and his instruments. 12. And great need we have of all this help;—for, in our holy warfare, we ministers and others, who have enlisted under Christ's banner, have to engage in close and sharp contention, not only with the carnal reasonings, authority, and violence of men, but with all ranks and orders of malicious, crafty, deceitful, powerful spirits, who, through the permission of God, have erected an usurped empire over the minds and hearts of blinded sinners! and being in themselves most vilely and implacably wicked, make it their whole business to propagate spiritual wickedness, unbelief, pride, idolatry, error, malice, wrath, envy,—and who, hovering in the air, and seated in our souls, strenuously labour to prevent our obtaining the eternal inheritance. 13. Since ye have therefore so many subtle and powerful enemies to contend with, see that ye be fully armed, and, in Jesus' strength, make a proper use of every spiritual weapon, defensive or offensive, wherewith God hath furnished you, that ye may be able to resist and overcome all these or other formidable enemies, in every day of conflict and trial. 14. In order therefore to your obtaining a glorious victory, it is necessary that, in the strength of Christ, ye, in your stations, indefatigably and incessantly, with all watchfulness, diligence, and steadfastness, keep your ground in the field of battle, having your whole man girt about with the truths of God revealed in his word, and with sincerity and uprightness of heart and conversation, that thereby ye may be steady, resolute, and active;—let your heart be protected by the righteousness of Christ applied to your conscience, and by the daily exercise of righteousness and true holiness, which proceed from faith and love. 15. And that ye may be enabled to hold out against all hardships and snares, and be ready for every encounter, let your affections and conversation be duly influenced by the doctrines, promises, encouragements, and provisions of the gospel, by which God exhibits, offers, and applies the whole peace and consolation of the new covenant, that nothing may hurt, discompose, or embroil you. 16. But especially let a lively exercise of faith on Christ's person, blood, righteousness, and fulness, and the power and grace of God in him through the declarations and promises of the new covenant, be your all-protecting shield, by which you may be enabled to silence every terrifying charge of guilt,—to repel every attempt to surprise you into hard or blasphemous thoughts of God or Christ, or sudden emotions of wrath, revenge, unchastity, or other wickedness,—and to disarm of its force every furious temptation or sudden suggestion, wherewith the devil may attempt to penetrate and influence your soul with horror, anguish, or guilt: 17. And let the hope of eternal salvation protect you from fear in danger, and fortify you against the most furious and threatening attacks of Satan and his confederates. And let the doctrines, promises, commands, threatenings, and histories of God's word, which the Holy Ghost indited, explains, and applies, be used, in the hand of your faith, for the destruction and confusion of your spiritual enemies. 18. And as none of your efforts, or even the graces, oracles, or ordinances of God, can be effectual without the special aids of the divine Spirit, maintain always a praying frame of heart; and let all your conflicts be attended with solemn, stated, or ejaculatory prayer, in all sorts of addresses to God, and on all occasions, public or private, in the name of Christ, and by the assistance of his Spirit, and with your whole heart, for all seasonable help and direction. And while ye watch against the designs and stratagems of your enemies, and for opportunities to annoy and defeat them, watch also for convenient opportunities of spiritual influences in, and gracious answers to, your prayers:—and continuing constant and unwearied therein, earnestly beg that God would not only avert evils from, or bestow blessings on yourselves, but also all your fellow-Christians, that they, along with you, may stand their ground in their spiritual warfare, and more and more abound in light, grace, comfort, and holiness, to the glory of God, and confusion of Satan and his instruments. 19. And particularly pray for me, your faithful and affectionate apostle and friend, whose work and trials are so important and difficult, and whose strength is so small,—that God would relieve me from my present imprisonment, and give opportunity and ability to publish the great mysteries of the gospel, in an open, bold, plain, impartial, earnest, and successful manner. 20. That I, the graciously honoured ambassador of Christ, who am now a prisoner for preaching that gospel, may yet have opportunity, and be enabled to

And that ye may the better know how to order your supplications or thanksgivings for me, I have sent Tychicus, one of your dear Asiatic friends, and an upright, diligent, and laborious minister of Christ, with this letter, that he may fully acquaint you with my various sufferings and comforts under them, and my labours and success,—that, by informing you how the Lord supports, directs, and comforts me under my trials, and by his preaching the gospel to you, he may comfort your spirits, and encourage you to trust in the Lord, and persevere in his way, amidst all the opposition ye can meet with. 23. And, for this end, may abundant peace with God, your own consciences, and one another, and all prosperity of soul or body, abide with you,—and the most ardent love to Jesus Christ and his people, together with, and springing from, a lively exercise of faith, flourish and increase in your souls and the souls of other Christians and ministers—by special influence from God the Father, the original fountain of all new covenant blessings, and from Jesus Christ, through whose merits and mediation they are conveyed. 24. May the free love and favour of Christ, and of God in him, and all its blessed fruits and effects, especially in all seasonable discoveries, communications, and assistances for the producing of strong and lively exercises of every grace, be richly extended to you at Ephesus, and to all others, who heartily, unfeignedly, perpetually, and according to the truth and tenor of the gospel, desire, esteem, and delight in, our only and complete Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—Happy are those families in which parents, children, masters, and servants make Christ's law their rule, his example their pattern, his love their motive, and his honour their end, in all their conduct. Numerous and subtle are the enemies, and hard the trials of every true Christian. But since they are rooted in Christ, the Captain of their salvation, his strength, and the complete armour he has provided for them, are sufficient to withstand and overcome all opposition. Happy are they who are taught of God to cleave to him, follow his direction, and improve his armour. And nothing is more useful than a vigorous faith, and persevering and fervent prayer. As ministers are peculiarly exposed to temptations and troubles, they ought to have a double share in the prayers of Christians; and never will a minister's heart be actuated by the grace of God, but he will be ready to pray for his people.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Having read the Epistle to the Ephesians, it is impossible to overlook how distinctly it assumes, at the close, a domestic character. The Epistle to the Romans, commencing with the deep things of God, and continuing to expound the mysteries of redemption, draws out its practical conclusions (chap. xii, xiii, xiv,) in the form of the most beautiful and splendid generalities. Throughout the Epistles to the Corinthians, like general precepts are interspersed; and in the Epistle to the Galatians, in a form more condensed (chap. v. 14—26. & vi. 1—10). But, in the Epistle to the Ephesians, while the general precepts of a holy morality are earnestly enforced (chap. iv. 15—32. & v. 1, 2), the domestic duties and virtues, with their motives and obligations, assume a distinct and specific form (chap. v. 21—33. & vi. 1—9). By what peculiar circumstance, in the case of the Ephesians, the apostle was led to accumulate and urge these beautiful and holy precepts, is not declared; but, if conjecture may be allowed, perhaps the cause may be found in that long continued and frequent domestic intercourse with them to which the apostle alludes (Acts xx. 20, 31), and the deep affection towards the apostle with which that intercourse had inspired his Ephesian converts (Acts xx. 37, 38). In writing to them, the apostle's heart was naturally carried back to their "happy homes;" and husbands and wives, and parents and children, and masters and servants, all rose up to his recollection, and the Spirit of God employed the occasion to enrich the church with that lovely code of domestic laws, by which the Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians stand peculiarly distinguished.—ED.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

PHILIPPI was a considerable city on the eastern frontier of Macedonia, now part of European Turkey, which Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, enlarged, fortified, and called by his own name. Directed by a vision, Paul came hither from Asia, and planted a Christian church, Acts xvi; and afterwards visited them in his way to Jerusalem, Acts xx. 1—6. Their concern for him was peculiarly affectionate; and, notwithstanding their poverty, they distinguished themselves in sending him seasonable and liberal supplies. Epaphroditus having brought him their bounty, during his imprisonment at Rome, he sent by him, upon his return, this excellent letter,—in which he expresses his great affection for them, and thankfulness for their favours; and exhorts them to constancy, courage, and perseverance under sufferings, and to public spiritedness, humility, holy joy, fervent prayer, and diligent progress in universal holiness.

[The first name of Philippi was Datos, and it is peculiarly remarkable as the first place in Europe in which the gospel was preached. The references to the Old Testament are, Ps. xxii. 6. & lv. 22; Is. xl. 23. & 56. 10; Jer. ix. 23, 24; Dan. ix. 26.—ED.]

9 And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 [h]Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife;‡ and some also of good-will:

† The supply, or "leading," of that Holy Spirit from whom your prayer proceeds.—Ed.

‡ This is a sentence of confessed difficulty, of which two views are taken by expositors. "The apostle's meaning," says Valpy, "is not that Christ was his life, and death his gain; but that both in life and death Christ was his gain"—in which view he is supported by Beza's translation, Pierce, &c. On the other hand, Bloomfield, following Chrysostom and Theodoret, explains it thus: "For as to me, to live (if I live) will be Christ (He will be my life, in Him I shall live); and (if I die) to die will be gain (since I shall be relieved from trouble)." But as mere release can be no gain, might not this view be better stated thus: "To me to live is Christ (living in me)," "to die is gain (for I die but to live with him)?" See Phil. 1. 23.—Ed.

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds;*

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel.

18 What then? notwithstanding, every way, ‖whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply† of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, 20 According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.

21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.‡

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not.

23 For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better:

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1, 2. Paul and Timothy—joint servants of Jesus Christ in ministering his gospel and promoting his kingdom and glory, to all the private Christians at Philippi, who, by virtue of union with him, are renewed in their hearts and lives by the sanctifying Spirit of God, and devoted to his service,—together with their spiritual overseers, who labour in doctrine or government, and their deacons, who take care of their poor and other temporal affairs of their church,—earnestly wish the most abundant manifestations of divine favour, with all its distinguishing fruits and blessings, from our Covenant God and Father, as the Spring and Fountain of all grace, and from Jesus Christ, as the Purchaser and Distributer thereof. 3—5. As often as I think of you, and what God has done for and by you, I cannot but bless him for putting me into the ministry, and making me instrumental in your conversion;—and in all my stated and solemn addresses to him for each of you, I am delightfully constrained to praise and thank him for your gracious and continued admission, through faith, to all the rich and glorious privileges, promises, hopes, and enjoyments of the gospel state; and for your familiar communion with God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and with each other; and for your readily communicating of your substance, for the support of the gospel, and to me in my sufferings for its sake; 6. Being assured, from the testimony, nature, purpose, and covenant of God, and from the merits and intercession of Christ and the indwelling of his Spirit, that he, who has changed your spiritual state, and begun your sanctification, honour, and comfort, will undoubtedly, in his wisdom, love, faithfulness, and power, maintain and increase it, till it be perfectly completed in the great day, when Christ shall come to be glorified in his saints. 7. And while you lie so much on my heart, in my prayers to God for you, your patient bearing of tribulations and kind Christian sympathy with me under mine, which I suffer for the cause of Christ, together with your honourable and steadfast profession and practice of the gospel truths, make me to hope this good work of grace is really begun in most of your hearts. 8. For, affected with, and in imitation of, Jesus' redeeming love, God alone knows how earnestly I desire to be further instrumental in the spiritual and eternal welfare of each of you, whom I look on as his dear members. 9. And in my fervent affection, I earnestly beg of him that your love to him and his Son, his word, ordinances, ways, ministers, and people, may still more and more increase, along with, and under the influence of, a growing knowledge and experience of the doctrine of Christ. 10, 11. That ye may carefully examine, prove, and approve, those sentiments and practices, which are truly valuable and important; that so ye may be found genuine Christians,—pure in heart and life, free from hypocrisy and deceit in your holy profession, and uncorrupted in your principles and designs, temper, and behaviour,—and may, in the view of Christ's coming to call you to account for your conduct, constantly live in the most holy and blameless manner, doing nothing to wound your own spirits, or occasion the stumbling of others,—greatly abounding in the most precious fruits of all holy obedience, and in the performance of duties both to God and man, which are produced by virtue derived from Christ, and are, through his merits and intercession, acceptable to God, and tend to his honour and glory. 12—14. And that ye may not be terrified at, nor discouraged by, my sufferings for the cause of Christ, know that, contrary to all outward appearance or natural expectation, they have been permitted and overruled rather for the confirmation and propagation of the gospel, than to the dishonour or hinderance of it, insomuch that the hardships and imprisonment, which the power and presence of Christ enable me to bear with becoming patience and fortitude, are well known among all the courtiers and citizens here, to be for no immorality, but merely for the sake of Christ, and have proved the happy occasion of many inquiring after and believing in him;—and, through the influence of God's grace, many of my fellow-ministers, fully satisfied of the justice and excellency of my cause, and of the remarkable support and encouragement which I have received from Christ under my troubles, have been more abundantly animated and imboldened thereby to preach the gospel with greater freedom and liberty of spirit than before. 15—17. There are, indeed, some judaizing teachers, who preach Christ as the true Messiah, and several important doctrines of salvation, from envy at my reputation and success in carrying the gospel in its peculiar doctrines to the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and in order to sink my credit and authority, and raise their own. Others preach the pure doctrines of Christ in their full extent, with freedom and delight, from love to him and his truths, and to the souls of men, and to me his apostle. The former, not from any sincere regard to Christ, his truths, or immortal souls: but from a contentious and envious disposition, in hopes that thereby they shall supplant, distress, or grieve me, or that, by the contentions which they foment, they may provoke the civil government to detain me in prison, or take away my life. But the latter, from a principle of love to me, as well as to the truth itself, accounting me one appointed and qualified of God, and even imprisoned and tried, for maintaining and defending the gospel of Christ. 18. But however different the motives by which the preachers here are actuated, I am heartily glad, and hope always to be so, that the truths of Christ are preached, and himself made known to multitudes by that means. 19. For I know, from the promises of God, the revelations of his Spirit, and my own former experience, that, through your prayers for me, and the rich communications of the Spirit of Christ granted me in answer to them, that the very worst designs of my opposers shall be overruled for promoting my deliverance from prison, and be sanctified to my own and others' spiritual and eternal advantage. 20. And I firmly hope, as well as earnestly desire, that whatever my adversaries may design or do against me, I shall never be ashamed of Christ or his truths, but be enabled to go on in his work with all liberty of spirit, and undaunted courage; and as, since my call to the apostleship, I have, through grace, acted to the honour of Christ, my great Master; I trust that, now and hereafter, he will, even in my weak frail body, manifest the greatness of his power and grace, whether by my patient continuance under suffering, my further publication and defence of the gospel, and my holy life and conversation,—or by my bravely owning and honouring him in enduring the most cruel and violent death for his sake. 21. For Christ, my ALL IN ALL, who lives in me, and to whom I look as the source of spiritual life, is my gain in living and dying; and the glory of his name, and the winning of souls to him, is the end which I pursue in both;—and death, after living in, on, and to him, would but usher me into the unspeakable reward of eternal felicity. 22. But if it please God to lengthen out my days on earth to preach and suffer for the gospel, it will promote the honour and interest of Christ, which, in the end, will turn to my own account; so that, were I to be left to my determination, I can hardly say whether I would choose life or death, 23, 24. For I am indeed greatly straitened and pressed in my own mind, having, on the one hand, an earnest desire to be loosed from my present encumbrances, weakness, and imperfections, and to have my soul released from this frail body, that I may enter on the immediate views and full enjoyment of Jesus Christ my Lord; and, on the other, I am willing, if it please God, to continue for a while exercising my ministry on earth, as I believe this would be most for your spiritual advantage, amidst the manifold enemies and temptations which surround you. 25, 26. In this persuasion, that my future ministrations might, by the blessing of God, be useful, I am not without intimations from the Spirit of God, that, notwithstanding the present threatening aspect, my life shall be for a time preserved, that by my preaching, prayer, or example, I may be instrumental in promoting your and others' edification in knowledge, faith, comfort, and holiness; and that, by my wonderful deliverances from prison, and the benefits ye receive by my visit, preaching, and converse, your delightful glory in Jesus Christ, the only Saviour, may be more abundant than ever. 27, 28. Meanwhile, to manifest the truth of your faith, and to promote your own and my comfort, take the most earnest and special heed that your traffic and behaviour in the world be answerable to your Christian state and character, and suitable to the directions, and ornamental to the principles, privileges, and obligations of the gospel of Christ, and to your holy profession thereof; that whether I should ever in this life see you again or not, I may have comfortable accounts of your spiritual concerns; that notwithstanding all the subtle and furious attempts of your enemies, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, ye may persevere unshaken in one and the same evangelical spirit of liberty, truth, and love, and concur in vigorous efforts for preserving, propagating, and defending the pure, uncorrupted, and important doctrines of faith delivered in the gospel, and for rendering the grace of faith in one another lively and steadfast:—and may hear that, however artful, cruel, and outrageous, the adversaries of your souls and Christian profession be, ye behave amidst all their attacks, with a truly Christian courage and fortitude,—which to them is not a mark of your obstinacy, but an awful token that they are on the way to everlasting destruction;—and to you is an evidence that God, who calls you to these trials, will effectually carry you through unto eternal salvation! 29. For, to your distinguished honour, God, on account of Christ's merits, not only enables you to believe in him to the saving of your souls, but also patiently, and aiming at his glory, to suffer for his cause, that ye may be more illustriously glorified together with him hereafter: 30. In which ye are exercised with no other combat of trials and troubles than I myself have experienced even among you, and still am under, and yet am enabled, through grace, to sustain with holy fortitude and patience, for the same glorious cause.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—In great kindness hath Christ furnished his church with all needful officers to take care of their spiritual and temporal concerns. Hopeful are daily fervent prayers for necessary blessings to such as are sanctified in Christ; and thrice happy those churches wherein all the members appear such. The free favour of Christ and his Father flows out delightfully in their spiritual peace, and to perfect the work begun in their hearts. It is very refreshing for ministers to observe their hearers walking in the fellowship of the gospel, and unitedly increasing and abounding in sincerity, light, love, and holy conversation, to the glory of God through Christ, and as a mean of preparing them for his second coming.—For deep is the concern which faithful ministers have for the spiritual edification and comfort of their hearers; and great is the delight they take to share with them in it, and to help in promoting it!—Alas! that ever the gospel of God's grace and salvation should be preached from envy or contention! But how amiable when it is preached with fidelity, and with sincere affection to Christ, and to his servants, people, and cause. It is very encouraging when God makes the sufferings of his ministers to turn out for the spread and success of the gospel. And honourable is it when they rejoice to be debased, that Christ may be exalted, and souls edified; and, through love to him, are in a strait whether they should desire the immediate enjoyment of Christ, or for a time to continue in a suffering state on earth for the service of his church. Thrice happy is it when, through Jesus' merits and grace, the prayers of Christians draw down rich supplies of grace on their ministers; and when, with remarkable unanimity, they cordially believe, boldly profess, uprightly practise, and are ready cheerfully to suffer for the truth!—What fearful ruin must await the adversaries of such!

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1, 2. By all the exhortations which have been delivered to you in the name of Christ, and by all the consolations which you have in or from him, or would occasion to me; by all the joy you have had, or can have, in his love to you, or in yours to him, or to one another for his sake, or in your or my mutual love;—by all that holy fellowship, which you and I have in the special influences, gifts, and graces of the Holy Ghost; or with one another, as members of Christ's mystical body;—by all the inexpressible grace and tender mercies of God manifested in your heart by his Spirit;—and by all the reality, worth, pleasure, obligation, or endearment in those things which you have experienced;—I beseech you to increase my comfort and joy, in more and more abundantly uniting with me, and with one another, in mind and heart, in joint love to Jesus Christ and everything that is his, and in joint pursuits of the same design for promoting his honour and the edification of souls,—and in a joint view and relish of the doctrines of the gospel, in opposition to judaizing preachers. 3. Take heed that nothing be said or done among you from a litigious ostentation, a self-conceited temper or desire of applause;—but in your church assemblies, and in all your conversation, behave with the deepest humility and modesty, being always ready to condescend to persons of the lowest degree, and to think and speak better of others, who walk in a becoming manner, than of yourselves,—duly affected with a sense of your own failings, and casting a vail of love upon the defects of other Christians. 4. And in order to attain this excellent disposition, let every one of you beware of a narrow selfish spirit, magnifying your own endowments, or of principally aiming at your own honour, ease, and secular interests; but let every one, actuated by a general public spirit, consult and study what tends to the general edification, peace, comfort, and advantage of others, spiritual or temporal: 5. For, in opposition to strife, vain-glory, and self-seeking, the same spirit of meekness, humility, and love, ought to prevail in you which was so perfectly and conspicuously exemplified in our Lord Jesus Christ. 6—8. Who though, as the eternal and only begotten Son of God, he was necessarily possessed of all divine perfections, and justly claimed a sameness of nature and equality of person with his eternal Father, nevertheless, by an act of infinite condescension, disrobed, and as it were emptied himself of his appearances of that divine majesty and glory, of which he is necessarily and perpetually possessed;—and that he might be his Father's bond servant, living, acting, bleeding, and dying according to his commandment, and go through the most painful, humbling, and difficult services of our redemption, assumed a true and real human nature into personal union with his divine;—and being found in the common form and condition of men, as well as in their law-room and stead, he submitted to the lowest degree of service and suffering, humbly obeying his parents and magistrates in everything lawful;—yea, obeying his Father, in fulfilling the precepts, and bearing the penalty of his holy law, and that even unto the ignominious, painful, and accursed death of the cross. 9—11. But having fulfilled his work of redemption in this humble, obediential, and suffering manner, God his Father, in reward of it, gloriously exalted him, not by adding anything to his essential happiness, perfection, or glory, but by raising him † Things. — This word is erroneously supplied from Tindal's translation. The word supplied should be "beings," as in all the best versions ancient and modern.—ED.

‡ Salvation simply signifies "deliverance," either from the suffering of disease or the power of enemies. See, for the first application, Acts 4. 9—12; for the second, Luke 1. 74, 77. The believer, therefore, "works out his own salvation," either by submissively receiving these spiritual remedies which Christ the great Physician furnishes for the disease of sin (Mat. 9. 12), by resisting and warring with the enemies of his soul (Eph. 6. 13), and by mortifying, through the Spirit, the deeds of the body, that he may live (Rom. 8. 13). The work, therefore, is his, not as a thing that he either would do, or could do—but as a work that grace begins, carries on, and completes, in him and by him.—ED.

§ Harmless. — Untainted with the vices of the world.—ED.

‖ The sacrifice and service of your faith. —"The sacrifice" of your prejudices, your friendships, your honours, your possessions.—"The service" of your devotedness, your liberality, and godliness.—ED.

as man from the dead, receiving him up into heaven, setting him at his own right hand, and giving him universal dominion as God-man Mediator, and a new title of honour and authority as Lord and Saviour, incomparably superior to any other name, dignity, or authority among creatures,—that all intelligent beings, angels or men good or bad, might, either now or in the last judgment, voluntarily adore, worship, and submit to him, or be constrained publicly to submit to him, as their supreme Judge;—and that men of all nations and languages might, either cheerfully or by constraint, be made to acknowledge him as Mediator God-man, to be the great Head, Lord, and Ruler over all, and the universal Judge of the world, to the glory of God the Father, who, in infinite wisdom and sovereignty, appointed him to this dignity, as his honorary Servant under himself. 12. Since therefore the beauties of holiness and humility, and the infinite importance of your salvation, have been so conspicuously and affectingly exemplified in Jesus Christ, I entreat and hope that, as when I was present among you, to observe, assist, and admonish you, ye were obedient to my words, and have been much more since I left you, so ye will more and more abound in the diligent exercise and assiduous practice of the forementioned, and all other graces and duties, necessary in the nature of things, and by the appointment of God, for the final accomplishment of that salvation which is already your own, by the gift of the Father, the purchase of the Son, and application and earnest of the Holy Ghost; and that not with a servile, distrustful, and desponding dread, but with a holy, filial, and awful reverence of the divine Majesty, and a cautious fear of sinning against him, and humble dread of provoking his frowns or chastisements. 13. For to encourage your diligence, and prevent your pride and carnal security, remember that the same God of all grace, who has begun the good work in your souls by an internal influence, doth carry it on till it be perfect; and not for any desert of yours, but merely of his own free and sovereign grace, with infinite pleasure and delight, he excites, inclines, and determines your will, and enables you with freedom and cheerfulness to perform those things that relate to your salvation. 14. In dependence therefore upon his gracious operations in you, study in your whole conduct, to avoid all discontent at the prosperity of others, or the disposals of Providence,—and all animosities and wrangling disputations one against another, or against what God in his providence calls you to do or suffer for Christ's sake. 15. That, as children of God, and not of the devil, ye may in reality, as well as appearance, be unreprovable and inoffensive in your temper and conversation, and sincere in your dealings with God and men,—that there may be no just occasion of complaint or accusation against you, or any room to revile and censure you, while ye live in the midst of Jews and Gentiles, exceedingly depraved in their minds and manners, and perversely turned aside from the right ways of the Lord;—among whom ye Christians are, or ought to be, shining lights and illustrious examples, for their conviction, direction, or pattern, that, seeing your good works, they may glorify your Father which is in heaven. 16. Holding fast to yourselves, and holding forth to all around you, Christ, who is our life; and the glorious doctrines of that gospel which reveals, offers, and is the mean of conferring spiritual and eternal life,—that, according to my hope, I may rejoice in your steadfastness, usefulness, and eternal salvation, when, at Christ's second coming, we shall appear together in his presence; and may find that my pains and labours have, by the grace of God, issued in his glory and your happiness. 17. Nay, if God, for the confirmation of your faith, and that of other believing Gentiles, who are offered up as an acceptable sacrifice to himself, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, should call me, his prisoner, to undergo the most cruel sufferings and death, I do, and should rejoice, and glory therein. 18. And if ye hear of my martyrdom, I beg that ye will rejoice with, and congratulate me on the honour of such a death, since it will bear the most noble testimony to the Lord Jesus and his gospel, and tend to the further encouragement and establishment of your faith in him. 19. But notwithstanding all that I have said about my willingness to die for these great purposes, I at present humbly hope and trust, that, through the care and kindness of the Lord Jesus, who has all power in heaven and earth, I shall be quickly able to spare my dear brother Timothy, and send him to visit you, and help you in your spiritual concerns; and that I may have the satisfaction to hear from him that the work of the Lord prospers among you, and that the subtle judaizing teachers have not been able to pervert you. 20. And my reason for sending him is, that I have here no fellow-labourer, so like myself in temper, ministration, behaviour, and love to you, and who, with the like genuine, tender, and parental affection, will lay your concerns to heart, and carefully study to promote your establishment and edification. 21. For the generality of those with me are too selfish and feeble-minded, rather solicitous about their own temporal ease, honour, profits, or safety, than willing to expose themselves to such fatigues, dangers, and reproaches, as they might possibly be called to undergo, in promoting the interests, cause, and glory of our great Lord and Saviour, and the welfare of his church, amongst you. 22. But ye have had sufficient trial and proof of his eminent qualifications, faithfulness, courage, and zeal; and that, as a son, he has been always ready to engage with me in any work or warfare, or cheerfully go wherever, and do whatever, I desired him. 23. Him therefore I hope to send to you as soon as I shall have taken my trial at Cesar's bar, and know whether I am to die or live, to remain a prisoner or be discharged. 24. Nay, I trust in the Lord Jesus, whose I am, and whom I serve, and for whose sake I am in bonds, that, by his gracious and overruling providence, I shall be acquitted, and visit you myself. 25. Nevertheless, I thought it necessary, for your edification and comfort, to send back with this letter Epaphroditus, who is my brother in the Christian faith and ministerial office, and fellow-labourer and soldier under Christ, our Captain of salvation in our spiritual work, and in our warfare against sin, Satan, and the seducers and powers of this world; and who, as your minister and messenger, has faithfully and kindly supplied me with your generous benefaction. 26. And I the rather chose to send him, as he is extremely desirous of seeing you again, being exceedingly afflicted in his own mind, that your hearing of his sickness would occasion so much grief and distress to you. 27. For indeed his sickness was such that we despaired of his life; but our prayer-hearing God, whose prerogative it is to kill and to make alive, brought him back from the gates of death, which was a great mercy, not only to him, in the restoration of his health, and his further capacity for usefulness, but also to you and others, particularly myself; as the loss of so dear and valuable a friend and brother would have been a great addition to the trouble which his sickness and my own confinement gave me. 28. I therefore despatched him back to you with the greater care and speed, that, when you see him again in full health, ye may have fresh comfort.

2 Beware of dogs,* beware of evil-workers, beware of the concision.

* Rather, "the dogs," "the evil workers." The judaizing teachers are so emblematically called, either because they prowled hunted like dogs in search of prey; or because they professed to be watchful as dogs in guarding against the apostle, whom they misrepresented as a robber. In the former sense, it would be a term of reproach, which the apostle would scarcely use; in the latter, a self-chosen title, which he was, therefore, at liberty to employ. This circumstance renders the latter interpretation the more probable.—Ed.

and, by the renewed usefulness of his labours among you, my own mind may be comforted under my troubles, and for the want of him. 29. Receive him therefore as a servant of Christ, and for his sake, with all spiritual joy, as well as with humane, civil, and friendly affection; and let him, and all such faithful labourers in the gospel, be esteemed very highly, and treated with great honour, for their work's sake. 30. For it was by the fatigue he underwent in the service of Christ, in love to him, and zeal for his interest and glory, that he contracted that illness which brought him so near the point of death; neglecting his own body, and hazarding his own life, that he might preach to such as I could not come to in my confinement, and might attend and assist me in your name.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—The comforts and influences of real religion should stir us up to Christian unity, affection, humble condescension, and tender care for the edification of others, particularly our brethren in Christ. And a most endearing example, and powerfully-constraining motive hereof, is his infinite condescension, self-debasement, and suffering for us. But his glorious advancement to his Father's right hand, having all power given him in heaven and in earth, is a delightful earnest, and blessed mean, of the exaltation of humble souls: And infinite is the obligation we have to contemplate, admire, love, adore, and serve him. With humble caution, self-diffidence, reverence of God, and holy diligence, should believers attend to the things which relate to their own salvation. And hopeful is their labour when God is ever present with them to excite and assist them. And Christians have great need, for the honour of Christ, for the comfort of his ministers, and for the sake of the world around them, always to study a humble, holy, and inoffensive conversation.—Alas! that in the best of times so many ministers and professed Christians should be so selfish and corrupt. But it is delightful to see them striving to outdo one another in care, sympathy, love, and readiness to do or suffer for one another's edification and comfort.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. After all, my dear Christian brethren, make it your constant study to rejoice and glory in the Lord Jesus, his person, offices, relations, and blessings, as altogether excellent in themselves, and by the gospel given and applied to your hearts. This will support your spirits under trouble, and prevent your seduction by judaizing teachers.—And, without any irksomeness, I repeat the admonitions which I formerly gave you, as I find it necessary for your establishment and edification. 2. Beware of all flattering, malicious, mischievous, and dividing preachers, particularly those of the judaizing kind, who, with all their boastings of circumcision, are extremely disgraceful and hurtful to the church, tearing it asunder, and cutting themselves and others off from Jesus Christ. 3. For we, who are true believers in Christ, are the very reverse of such,—being effectually circumcised and renewed in our hearts, and truly instated in covenant with God; and accordingly we worship him, not by ceremonial rites and carnal ordinances, but with our whole souls, in the exercise of all spiritual graces,—under the direction and influence of the Holy Ghost,—and with abundant joy triumph in Jesus Christ, as our only Mediator, righteousness, and ground of acceptance and hope!—while we renounce all dependence upon, and expectation of favour with God, on account of circumcision, or any other Jewish ordinance, or anything we have or can do in performing the righteousness of the law by natural principles. 4—6. None of the judaizing teachers have more ground to boast of these carnal privileges than I myself.—I was duly circumcised on the eighth day, according to God's appointment.—I am no proselyte from among the Gentiles, but a true native Israelite, descended from Jacob, by his beloved Benjamin, the son of Rachel his dearest wife.—I am of a tribe which furnished the first king to God's peculiar people, and which did not, with the other ten, revolt to Jeroboam and his idolatrous worship. I am a Jew of pure extraction, both by my father and mother, and one who used the Hebrew language in our synagogue worship. I was, by education and profession, one of the strictest sect for observation of the laws of God, and traditions of the elders.—I was so zealous for the ceremonial ordinances, that I furiously persecuted the Christians, because their principles and professions were contrary to mine; and so sincere and careful an observer of the moral and ceremonial laws, that neither my neighbours nor my own conscience could charge me with any flagrant or wilful transgression thereof. 7. But how advantageous soever I once did, or any carnal Jew may still, reckon these things for recommending to God's favour, or entitling to heaven, I was no sooner enlightened by his Spirit, and called by his grace, than I saw them all misguiding, empty, and insufficient; and that my dependence thereon was inexpressibly hurtful; and so I abandoned them all as nothing, and worse than nothing, when relied on in competition with Jesus Christ. 8. And now, after many years' knowledge and experience of the way of salvation by him alone, I still, with the greatest assurance, reckon these, and all possible worldly enjoyments, and even all my religious and moral services since my conversion, to be but loss in comparison of the superabundantly more important, fiducial, and experimental knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord, in his person, offices, relations, fulness, and work;—for the sake of, and in comparison with whom, I have renounced and parted with all other things, and I do count them but dung, dregs, or dogs' meat, in point of justification and substantial happiness,—that I may gain the complete enjoyment of Christ and all his saving benefits: 9. And that, in the day of death and judgment, I may be found dwelling in him as my city of refuge, united to him as my spiritual Head, and comprehended in him as my representative,—and so may stand and be judged before God, not according to my own personal righteousness, but as clothed with that righteousness which does not indeed consist in faith, either as in habit or act, but is received as the free gift of God, by faith in Christ;—even that righteousness of the purity of his human nature, his obedience of life, and atoning sufferings and death,—by which he fully satisfied the law and justice of God in our stead, and which God appoints, accepts, offers, and imputes to us, to discharge us from guilt and condemnation, and entitle us to eternal life in believing;—10. And that, even in this world, I may have an experimental growing acquaintance with him, in the glory of his person and offices, and in the efficacious virtue of his resurrection, as the Head of his mystical body, for confirming my joyful hopes of eternal life on the ground of it, for animating me to the most vigorous holy obedience in conformity to him, and in preparing me for the blessedness of heaven; and that I, in holy fellowship with him in his sufferings, by faith, may be enabled to crucify my inward corruptions, till they be utterly destroyed, and may patiently endure sufferings and death for his sake;—11. That, by these and other means of God's appointment earnestly practised, I may, in the general resurrection of the dead, arrive at the harbour of eternal rest, being raised up in glory, and admitted into the perfect and inexpressible blessedness which is prepared for the saints. 12. I have not as yet indeed received the prize for which I run; nor am I sufficiently prepared, by holiness, for the crown of righteousness; but I eagerly pursue my course, that, in God's time and way, I may reach that perfection, and lay hold on that eternal life, for the attainment of which, Jesus Christ, by his power and grace, laid hold on me in the way to Damascus, plucked me as a brand out of the fire, and took possession of me for himself. 13, 14. Whatever your judaizing preachers or others may pretend, I freely acknowledge that I do not reckon myself to have attained perfect holiness any more than perfect happiness;—but, fixing mine eyes upon it as the mark which I have in view, without valuing myself upon either my judaism or even my past advances in holiness, as an earnest racer, I press forward to that perfection which is necessary to my receiving that eternal glory to which God has from heaven effectually called me, and every true believer, by Christ Jesus, and which is obtained only in and through him. 15. Let therefore as many of us as have all the essential parts of the new nature formed in us, to a much greater degree than it is in weak believers, attend to this main point of counting all things but loss and dung to win Christ, to be found in him, and thoroughly to be conformed to him; and if, in other matters of less importance, any of you should have different apprehensions, God will in due time discover the truth to you. 16. It is nevertheless necessary that we hold fast whatever truths we have already embraced and professed; and that, in the exercise of all that knowledge, grace, and holiness, which we have attained, we should, with the greatest exactness and harmony, think and act according to the plain revelations of scripture. 17. In your whole principles and practice, study therefore, with one accord, to imitate me and my faithful brethren in the ministry, whom the Lord has led into the spirituality and light of the New Testament dispensation. 18, 19. And this I recommend to you with the greatest earnestness and care, to prevent your being misled by judaizing teachers;—for they and many other professors,—as I often warned you while I was with you, and now again assure you, with deep concern and grief for the dishonour done to Christ, and hurt to the souls of men,—whatever their pretences be, are, from an aversion to take up their cross and follow Christ, both doctrinally and practically, inveterate enemies to the fundamental article of salvation through his righteousness alone,—and their wickedness shall issue in their everlasting destruction,—and even now they have nothing but the gratification of carnal views and pleasures for their principal aim and chief good, in opposition to God and his glory: and, boasting of their shameful doctrines and success, under all their religious professions, they attend to, relish, and pursue after, nothing but mean, empty, uncertain, unsatisfying, and defiling, earthly enjoyments. 20. Never follow nor imitate such corrupt and pernicious leaders,—but make us your pattern, whose tempers and conduct are quite the reverse;—for, being citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, our hearts and affections are set upon things above, and carry on a constant correspondence with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; looking, longing, and hoping for Christ's descent from thence at the last day to receive us to himself: 21. Who will then transform these vile and mortal bodies of ours—which for the present are so marked with weakness, weariness, or disease, and are clogs and hinderances to the spiritual and holy exercises of our soul, and which will be quickly rotten and corrupted in the grave—into the beautiful resemblance of his own most glorious body, by the working of that almighty power, by which he is able to overcome every difficulty, and entirely subdue under himself every enemy, death not excepted.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—With great earnestness should professors guard against the seduction of false teachers, especially such as set up men's own righteousness in the room of the justifying righteousness of Jesus Christ. And ministers have need to repeat their warnings on this head. Nothing goes down more sweetly with a corrupt heart than the doctrine of justification by self-righteousness. Amiable, yet very rare, is a lively, devout, cheerful, a duly self-denied Christian. But contemptible are all external privileges in comparison of Christ and his righteousness: and very unprofitable are human works in the matter of our justification. The faith and enjoyment of free justification, through his imputed righteousness, powerfully animates and enables to the diligent study of holiness. And though there is no absolute perfection in this life, yet every one ought to press as near to it as possible, and carefully avoid the smallest appearance of backsliding in faith, profession, or practice,—and tenderly bear with others in lesser differences. It is a great mercy for a church to have ministers of an exemplary practice and heavenly conversation. Eternal glory will crown their and their followers' labours along with Christ. But what a burden to ministers, a plague to churches, and what enemies to Christ, are untender, sensual, and worldly-minded preachers and professors.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. In these views, my dearly beloved brethren, whose further proficiency and establishment I much desire and long for, and whom I now account the honourable seals of my ministry, and expect to be my crown of rejoicing in the last judgment, I again earnestly entreat you to abide steadfast and unshaken in your fiducial adherence to, and holy profession of, the Lord Jesus, as your Head and Saviour. 2. And I beg that those noted women, Euodias and Syntyche, would lay aside all their differences, and agree with the church and with one another in sentiment, profession, love, and affection in the Lord. 3. And I beseech you, my noted assistant in the work of the gospel, in the most prudent, tender, and affectionate manner, to advise and exhort them heartily to reunite in the common cause,—who, by their prayers, their sympathy, and their supplies, were so remarkably useful to me, and to Clement and my other fellow-preachers, who, I am persuaded, are noted favourites of God, and from eternity chosen to be heirs of salvation. 4. And let all of you true believers, in the view of the blessings which ye have in hand, or which ye hope for, always, and in all circumstances, rejoice and triumph in the Lord Jesus your Head and Saviour, and in all that he is, has, or does for you, and even in your sufferings for his sake. 5. And—as knowing that he is at hand to observe your behaviour and take your part, and will quickly appear to execute vengeance on his Jewish, Heathen, or Antichristian opposers, and ere long to judge the world,—labour to maintain and discover a meek, patient, and gentle temper of spirit towards all men, your most furious persecutors not excepted, and a weanedness of affection from the things of this life. 6. Yea, whatever difficulties, wants, or dangers may befall you, relating to this present world, never perplex yourselves with anxious, distrustful, and distracting cares about them, how ye shall be able to avoid, bear up under, or get through them; but in every time, circumstance, or matter,—in the firm faith of God's promises, and with humble pleadings, and earnest importunity and perseverance, and with thanksgiving for mercies received or promised,—lay your whole case and requests before God as your reconciled Father in Christ, that, as the hearer of prayer, he may give you whatever help, comfort, deliverances, or blessings are for your real advantage; 7. And in so doing, the most excellent peace with God, with your own consciences, and with one another, and a transcendently understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds [h] through Christ Jesus.

8 Finally, brethren, [i] whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are [k] honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

9 [l] Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and [m] the God of peace shall be with you.

10 But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your [n] care of me [*] hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity.

11 [o] Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content.[†]

12 [p] I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where, and in all things, I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need.

13 I can do all things [q] through Christ which strengtheneth me.

14 Notwithstanding ye have well done [r] that ye did communicate with my affliction.

sweet calmness of spirit, shall, through the merits of Christ, your union to him, and influences from him, fortify and preserve your souls from sinking or fainting under the heaviest troubles. 8. And, in fine, my brethren, beloved in the Lord, —whatever things are agreeable to the gospel of truth, and consist in, or promote truth and sincerity, in words or actions, professions or engagements;—whatever things are venerable, decent, or becoming in dress, language, or deportment, answerable to your respective stations as men or Christians;—whatsoever things are just and due to God or men in your dealings with them;—whatsoever things relate to chastity in body or mind, or to holiness in heart, speech, or behaviour; —whatsoever things render a person amiable or lovely in the sight of God or men; —whatsoever is of good repute among wise, judicious, or pious men;—whatsoever is truly virtuous, brave, or laudable;—earnestly study the nature, obligations, and advantages thereof, and carefully and constantly practise the same. 9. These, and the like branches of morality and piety, which ye, as disciples of Jesus Christ, and in part by my ministrations, have acquired the knowledge of, assented to, and approved as right, and which ye have seen exemplified in my own walk and behaviour, seriously and diligently reduce to practice; and in this way God, who is your reconciled Father in Christ, and who gives and delights in the spiritual peace and orderly deportment and prosperity of his servants, shall take pleasure to dwell among you, manifest himself unto you, and bless and own you as a people near and dear to him.—10. And having given you these important advices, I cannot, but with inexpressible pleasure, again reflect on the love and grace of our Lord Jesus, who inclined your hearts to repeat your affectionate and generous supplies to me in my imprisonment, even after ye seemed to have forgotten me; but I understand that was owing, not to your want of care, but of ability to give it, or opportunity to convey it safely. 11. I do not mention these things as if I were reduced to insupportable wants, or were uneasy under what I suffer, or as lifted up that I am now supplied by your bounty; for, through the frequent changes of my condition, and the sanctified use thereof, I have, by the Spirit of God, been taught to exercise Christian contentment in every condition into which Providence brings me, as being ordered for me by my heavenly Father, who never leaves me nor forsakes me; and as well calculated to promote my spiritual and eternal advantage. 12. In this manner I have been taught how to possess my soul in peace and patience when I am thrown into dejecting and humbling circumstances, and how to behave with proper humility and weanedness from the world when Providence smiles on me. Wherever I am, and in whatever circumstances I am, whether I have plenty or scarcity of the good things of this life, I am thoroughly taught to exercise the graces, and perform the duties, answerable to my diversified stations; 13. And not indeed of myself, or even by the grace which I have already received, but by the continual influence and assistance of Jesus Christ, with whom I am united, and on whom I depend, and who is ever with me, to animate, excite, and strengthen me, I find myself enabled to perform these, and every other duty to which I am called, as a Christian and apostle. 14. My contentment in pressing straits does not however in the least lessen your kindness to me, or the reasonableness of it. No. In your sympathy with me in my tribulation, and your sending me a liberal supply for my relief, ye have acted a truly Christian part, acceptable to me, and even to God himself through Jesus Christ. 15. To your honour, I must also with pleasure remark, that, when I departed from your province of Macedonia to preach the gospel in other places, ye returned me temporal benefits, as the grateful reward of my spiritual instructions, which no other church did; 16. Nay, when I was in Thessalonica, a far richer place, persecuted by the Jews and neglected by the Christians, ye more than once sent me your generous supplies. 17. I do not thus gratefully acknowledge your kindness as if I desired any more of it, but to encourage you to Christian benevolence in all other cases for promoting the cause of Christ, which, as the fruit of your faith and love to him and to his people, may turn out to his honour and your own rich advantage in the world to come. 18. What ye have sent to me by Epaphroditus has sufficiently supplied my wants, and has filled my soul with abundant gratitude to God and to you for the same; for it is at once a repeated testimony of your love to me, and a spiritual sacrifice of acknowledgment to God, acceptable through Jesus Christ. 19. And though I am unable to make you any temporal recompense, my covenant God and Father, who has inclined your hearts to show me such kindness for his sake, will richly reward you, not only with all needful temporal good things, but chiefly with all spiritual and eternal blessings, suited to your various wants, and that with an abundant liberality, in proportion to his own infinite treasures of grace and glory, which he has provided and treasured up in Christ, and gives together with him and for his sake, and in virtue of our union with him.—20. Unto that all-sufficient and infinitely liberal Giver of all temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings, and our Father in Christ, let us jointly ascribe all possible and eternal honour, thanksgiving, blessing, and praise, on account of what he is in himself, and what he has been, is, and for ever will be to us. 21, 22. I, and all the faithful preachers and professing believers here, chiefly they who have been lately converted to Christ in the emperor Nero's own family, hereby present to every one of you, who are truly renewed and sanctified in your hearts, our most cordial testimony of love and regard. 23. And may the free favour of our common Lord and Saviour, and all the distinguishing fruits thereof, be abundantly manifested to, and upon, each of you singly, and all of you jointly. This I heartily desire and firmly expect.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Faithful ministers greatly delight in, have a high esteem of, and ardent affection to, sincere and lively Christians; and are grateful in acknowledging their kindness. Very desirous are they that all things may turn out to their edification, and much concerned for their establishment in the faith, profession, and holiness of the gospel; for their continual comfort, and their unity in heart, design, and labour, to help forward the work of the Lord, very patient also toward enemies, weaned from this world, free from anxious care, fervent and hopeful in prayer, peaceful in mind, and universally lively in practice, ought Christians to be,—in the faith of Christ's being with them, and of his certain and sudden appearance to judge them. And it is a necessary duty, and an honourable attainment, to have learned in his strength to be always cordially contented with all the diversified changes of our lot, as wisely and kindly ordered by our gracious God and Father.—Happy is it to have him the Supplier of all our wants, and the Rewarder of all our friends' kindnesses to us. And highly delightful to view ourselves, and millions around us, eternal sharers of his infinite, his inexhaustible, stores of grace, laid up for us in Christ in a manner suited to the glory thereof.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Happy Europe! whose first planted church gave such early indication of holy fruitfulness! and though the harvest has come short of the hopes of the spring, and though many tares have been sown by the enemy in the midst of the wheat; yet, thanks to the Lord of the harvest, many a fair field has been ripened, and reaped, and gathered into her garner.

The church at Philippi was specially distinguished by missionary liberality (chap. iv. 15, 16, 18); a grace which God, in those days, seems to have restored, in some degree, to the reformed churches in Europe and their descendants in America. No doubt Christian liberality is still repressed; yet is it making glorious progress; wherefore, "let us thank God and take courage." And let not Christians be afraid of giving back what God has given to them, but let them rely upon the word which testifies that what they lend to the Lord, their God will repay; and, if the spirit of worldliness should tempt them to withhold from the gospel, lest they should not have enough for their own necessities, let them remember that God, and God alone, has supported them for the past; and that, for the future, he is able to "supply all their need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—Ed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE COLOSSIANS.

Colosse was a large and populous city of Phrygia, in the north-west of Lesser Asia, where (not the apostle Paul, but) Epaphras, or some other faithful preacher, had planted a church. To establish those Christians in the faith, in opposition to the heathen philosophers, and especially to the judaizing teachers, Paul wrote them this Epistle; in which, after salutation, thanksgiving, and prayer for them, he, in a most exalted manner, represents to them Jesus Christ, in his glorious dignity and gracious fulness, as infinitely preferable to all philosophical notions and Jewish ceremonies; chaps. i. ii.; and exhorts them to improve their union to, and fellowship with, him in holy duties, personal and relative; iii, iv.

[Colosse was a city of Phrygia-Pacatiana, in Western Asia. It is said to have perished in a violent earthquake, in the tenth year of the reign of Nero, and shortly after the date of this Epistle, which is generally assigned to A. D. 62. It was afterwards restored, and Constantine Porphyrogenitus says that in his time it was called Chonæ; and is supposed to have occupied the site of a village now called Konous. By whom the church of Colosse was founded is not recorded; but it would appear from ch. ii. 1, that Paul had not that honour, though they feel for him as children, during his imprisonment, and he, for them as a father in the Lord. The tenor of the Epistle, especially ch. i. 3—6, indicates a healthy state of the church; while the warnings and precepts of holiness which it conveys clearly show that no present attainments can supersede the necessity of that watchfulness and prayer which are employed by the Spirit as the safeguard and the nourishment of the life of God in the soul.—Ed.]

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1, 2. I Paul, an inspired preacher immediately called by Jesus Christ to be an eye-witness of his resurrection and ascension, and to plant churches among the Gentiles, according to the free purpose, commandment, and pleasure of God the Father,—along with Timothy, my faithful brother in the work of the gospel,—to all the holy and faithful Christians in Colosse, spiritually united to Jesus Christ, and renewed and sanctified by virtue derived from him,—wish the most abundant manifestation and application of divine favour, and all the happy and peaceful fruits thereof, from God our common Father, the original fountain of all blessings, and from Jesus Christ as the mediatorial purchaser and dispenser of them: 3, 4. To whom we have, in our daily prayers, offered up the most affectionate and hearty thanksgivings, ever since we heard of your cordial acceptance of, and trusting in, Christ alone for salvation, and of your brotherly affection to all that profess his holy name and bear his holy image. 5, 6. Our prayers and praises, as well as your faith and love to Christ and his people, are excited by the consideration of that perfect blessedness which ye justly hope for through him, and which is laid up and hid with him in God, as a rich treasure reserved and secured by him, as your Father, for you,—and which he has held forth and offered to you in the preaching of the true and faithful gospel,—which was, in the kind providence of God, carried over and published to you without your seeking after it, as well as to both Jews and Gentiles, in most places of the Roman empire; and, by the attending power of the Holy Ghost, has effectually converted many to Christ, and made them to bring forth the fruits of faith, love, and holy obedience,—as it has done among you ever since ye experienced a real work of grace on your hearts, and were led into the spiritual knowledge and sincere faith of its doctrines of divine grace.——7. According as ye were taught them by Epaphras, your worthy minister, and our dear brother and faithful fellow-labourer in the service of Christ and his church,—particularly in promoting your conversion to, and sanctification in and by, Christ; 8. And who, in his great affection to you, has represented to us your hearty and spiritual love to Christ and to all his saints, which the Holy Ghost has wrought in you, and drawn out in a spiritual manner, and on spiritual accounts, by means of the gospel. 9. Reflecting upon which report, we ever since have been led to a peculiar concern for you in all our solemn addresses to God; and to beg that ye may be more and more abundantly filled with the knowledge of his mind and will, relating to the way of salvation by [a] An allusion, most probably, to the fact that the Israelites who came out of Exypt were not admitted to the inheritance of Canaan; while their children, under the teaching of Moses, and by the power of the Spirit, were prepared to enter in with Joshua, and to conquer and possess the land.—Ed.

[†] God is essentially invisible; but "the Word that was God" "became flesh, and dwelt among us," and in that flesh men "beheld his glory;" and thus "he that saw Christ, saw the Father" (John 14. 9), that is in the works of love and power which Christ wrought.—Ed.

[‡] According to ver. 16 and 17, Christ was before all things, and by him were all things created; therefore the title "first-born" cannot signify that the Creator was a creature, for that were a contradiction; but the title πρωτότοκος appears to be taken, as in John 1. 15, 30, for πρώτος, and signifies that Sonship of the Word which existed before any being was created, agreeably to the scriptural mode of describing eternity. Jesus Christ, and to your comfort and duty, as interested therein,—and may exceedingly abound in a judicious, experimental, and practical acquaintance with his manifold wisdom, and in all spiritual discernment of spiritual things, in their truth, excellence, and importance, and the use ye ought to make of them;——10. That, in the whole of your conversation before God or men, ye may act up to the dignity of your relation to, and profession of him, and to the rich benefits which ye have received and hope for from him,—and every way agreeable to his holy nature and will, bringing forth all the fruits of righteousness to his glory, and daily increasing in a transforming acquaintance and fellowship with him, as your heavenly Father and Friend; 11. Strengthened with every needful and almighty assistance of his Spirit for performing every duty and service, and for sustaining every trial, in a sweet, calm, and patient manner, without either murmuring against God or raging against men;—persevering in them with a noble constancy and fortitude of spirit in submission to the will of God; and even triumphing in what he has done, does, or will do to support, strengthen, comfort, and glorify you. 12. Yea, that instead of complaining under trouble, you may heartily join with us in the most grateful thanksgivings to God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of us in him,—who, by graciously changing and renewing our nature, and endowing us with heavenly desires and affections, has prepared us for the full possession of that glorious inheritance which he had mercifully appointed, provided, and promised to us, and to all other sanctified persons, as his children; and in the light, glory, and joy of which we shall, in his immediate presence, be for ever perfectly filled with knowledge, holiness, and happiness;——13. Who also, by his almighty power and grace, has plucked out and rescued us that believe, Jews or Gentiles, from the tyranny and dominion of sin and Satan; and by changing our state, nature, and temper, has brought us into his kingdom of grace, in order to advance us into his kingdom of glory, under and through his infinitely beloved Son;—— 14. In whom, through his righteousness, fulfilled in our stead, and imputed and applied to our persons, we have a complete discharge from the guilt of sin and curse of the law; and in consequence thereof, a deliverance from the power of sin, Satan, and the wrath of God; and have a full title to, and the anticipating possession of, all spiritual and eternal blessings. 15. For the dignity of his person added an infinite value to his sacrifice, he being the express image of his Father's person; one with him in essence, nature, and perfections;—and being, in his mediatorial office, incarnation, qualifications, and performances, the representative image of the Godhead, in which all its spiritual excellencies are most clearly, amiably, and transformingly displayed,—and having existed from eternity, as the essential Son of God, begotten of the Father before any creature was formed; and being, along with him, the former of all things, and accordingly the original Lord and first-born Heir thereof. 16. For by him, together with his Father and blessed Spirit, as the efficient cause; and in order to their subserviency to his mediatorial kingdom, and for his glory, as their last end, were all creatures, of every rank and order, material or spiritual, formed out of nothing: 17. Which undeniably demonstrates that he had an existence prior to all creatures, and has an infinite dignity above them;—and all things do equally subsist, stand, or continue in him, who is omnipresent, all-powerful, and active in his providential influences over them, by which they are continually preserved in being, order, and proper action, under him, as Head over all things to his church; 18. In which capacity, he is not only her political Head of direction and government, but her Head of vital influence, to communicate all spiritual life, nourishment, growth, and activity to all and every one of his members;—the original spring, not only of the spiritual life of their souls, but of the glorious resurrection of their bodies to eternal life: being the first that rose from the dead to an immortal life, and that by his own power, as the pledge, pattern, quickening cause, and first-fruits of his people's resurrection,—that in all things he might be dignified and exalted by God, and esteemed by the church, even in his mediatorial capacity, above all saints, angels, and every other creature. 19. For, in effecting our salvation, JEHOVAH, in his own infinitely wise, gracious, and holy good pleasure, in honour to his Son, and love to his people, has ordained and appointed, that, answerably to the greatness of Christ's divine person and mediatorial office, all fulness of gifts and graces, merit and right, light and power, should permanently abide in him to the utmost perfection, not only for himself, but to be communicated to the members of his mystical body, that out of his fulness we may receive, and grace for grace. 20. And having, through that redemption which was purchased by his righteousness, which was finished in his painful, shameful, and accursed death on the cross, removed the enmity, and made up the breach between him and his elect, it has pleased the Father by him, as their Head and Mediator, to bring them all into a state of favour and friendship with himself, that the demands of his broken law and offended justice being fully answered by him in their stead, he might honourably act towards them in a way of gracious kindness and friendship, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, believers on earth, or glorified saints in heaven. 21, 22. In consequence of this, you, who in the days of your heathenism and unregeneracy, were estranged from the life of God, inwardly filled with enmity, and living in constant rebellion against him and his holy law, has he now, upon your believing, brought into a state of peace and friendship with himself, through the incarnation, obedience, and satisfactory sufferings of Christ, that he might present you now, as his mystical members in his church, and hereafter in the last judgment, as persons made righteous in law, and thoroughly sanctified in nature and life. 23. Which I am satisfied will be the happy issue with respect to you, since ye steadfastly persevere in the faith, profession, and obedience of the truth, as persons who are built upon and established in him as your spiritual foundation, and so maintain your ground against all the artful and violent attempts of Satan and his agents to shake or carry you away from Christ, the object of your hope, and from your hope in him, as set before you in the gospel, which ye have attentively heard, and cordially received, when promiscuously preached to both Jews and Gentiles,—and of which God, in his infinite mercy, has appointed me a stated and inspired preacher. 24. And in the view of your steadfastness, I am so far from repining at the severe persecutions and present imprisonments which have befallen me on account of my preaching the gospel to Gentile sinners, that I greatly rejoice and glory in all these outward tribulations, which I, who was once a persecutor, do or may endure, according to the appointment of Christ, and for his glory, and for the confirmation, edification, and comfort of his mystical body the church: 25. Of which church God, by his immediate authority, has constituted me an apostolic minister, according to that infinitely gracious order which he has fixed for dispensing the gospel, which is committed to me as a sacred trust, for the fulfilment of the ancient promises of the conversion, edification, and salvation of you Gentiles: 26. Which gospel is indeed a mystery, as it contains the unsearchable riches of Christ; and as it was for many ages concealed in its brightest glories, not only from the Gentile nations, but even in a great measure from the Jews, but which is now revealed, as clearly as the nature of the things permits, to his holy prophets and apostles, and by them to all true believers, who, by profession, obligation, and regenerating grace, are his saints; 27. To whom, of his own good pleasure, according to his eternal purpose and ancient predictions, God would now, under the New Testament, make a plain discovery of the exceeding riches of the glory, and incomprehensible excellency of the gospel tidings of salvation among you Gentiles;—the all-comprehending sum of which is Christ, in his person, offices, relations, fulness, and work; who also is preached among you, and dwelling in your hearts by faith as the foundation, author, and object of all your hopes of eternal life. 28. And it is this Christ, in his natures, person, and mediation, and in the believing, affectionate, obediential regards due to him, whom we faithful preachers of the gospel make the grand subject of our ministrations, wisely and prudently admonishing all sorts of persons, Jews or Gentiles, to consider their sinful and miserable state by nature, and to beware of rejecting him;—and instructing them, as God enables us, in the knowledge of the manifold wisdom of God, as displayed through him in the gospel revelation, to render them truly wise unto salvation,—that we may be honoured instruments of presenting them to God as true and uncorrupted believers, renewed in all the faculties of their soul, and members of their body, and remarkably fruitful in the several graces of the Spirit,—who are perfect already in Christ their Head; and to be, through him, perfected in all knowledge and grace, holiness and happiness.—29. For this end, and in this work, as one excited and assisted by the remarkable influences of the almighty power of God, I labour to my utmost in prayer and preaching, and every other means, amidst all difficulties, and in the face of all opposition.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Ministers ought never to lose sight of their mission from Christ; and Christians ought never to lose sight of the divine authority of the scriptures. Abundant is the grace, peace, and other blessings, which Christ and his Father give, and which we ought therefore to wish to all his people. It is a great mercy to hear the gospel, to have its power manifested in our hearts, its glorious fruits appearing in our lives, and to hear of the like in others. And very thankful should we be that the gospel of our salvation, which was so long concealed under obscure figures and in dark promises, and almost confined to the Jews, is now plainly manifested to both Jews and Gentiles. Happy is it to experience its power in enlightening our mind, renewing our will, delivering us from the slavery of Satan, and translating us into the kingdom of Christ, that he may dwell in us as the hope of glory! With much assurance may prayers be made for the increase of saints in light and grace, their strengthenings unto all patience and comfort under present trials, and unto all fruitful and holy walking with God, and meetness for their heavenly inheritance. Infinite are the glories of our Redeemer, as the essential, necessary, and eternal Son of God,—the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things,—the Head of the church,—the Storehouse of all new covenant blessings,—the reconciling Mediator between God and men; and abundant the peace, pardon, preservation, sanctification, and everlasting glory, which his people receive through and from him. Great is the honour to be made wise, faithful, diligent, and successful preachers of Christ. No sufferings nor labours must be reckoned too hard for his sake, or for the edification, comfort, and eternal salvation of souls.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. I mention these my earnest endeavours to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus, to make you sensible of my great care and fervent prayers for you and your neighbours of Laodicea, and others who never had an opportunity of attending on, or being profited by, my ministrations. 2. That their hearts may be abundantly filled with divine consolation, as believers who are closely and firmly cemented together in the most cordial affection to Christ and to one another, and are thoroughly united in their endeavours for attaining a distinct, clear, and complete acquaintance with the gospel plan of salvation, in all its riches of spiritual and eternal blessings; unto the entire satisfaction of their souls, and their making an honourable, steady, and public profession of those deep things of it, which were from all eternity designed and prepared in the gracious counsels of God the Father, and are purchased, revealed, and bestowed by our Lord Jesus Christ, as the great Mediator between God and man; 3. In which mystery of the gospel, and especially in which Christ, are secretly, safely, and incomprehensibly laid up and contained all the inexhaustible treasures of wisdom and knowledge for managing all the affairs of providence and grace, and for manifesting the whole will of God as to our salvation, and seasonably supplying our wants, enlightening our minds, and safely directing our steps to the heavenly glory. 4. And I would lead you to consider this inexhaustible fulness of wisdom and knowledge, laid up for you in Christ and the gospel, in order to prevent your being seduced from him and his truths by pretenders to heathen philosophy and Jewish learning. 5. For though in bodily presence I am, and always have been, absent from you, yet my heart is with you, delightfully reflecting on what I have heard of your faith, love, and hope; and, through the suggestions of God's Spirit, I have a view of your rich attainments and diversified trials; and am affected as if I were present among you, rejoicing in your orderly behaviour and regular discipline, and in your firm, solid, and steady adherence of faith to the person, mediation, and doctrines of Christ, notwithstanding all the artifices which have been used to corrupt your minds, and draw you off from him. 6. As therefore ye have, by faith, received the Lord Jesus Christ in his person and offices, as your Prophet, to instruct you;—your Priest, to make atonement and intercede for you;—and your King, to defend, rule, and govern you;—be careful, by virtue of union to, and gracious influence from him, to cleave to him with full purpose of heart, and to walk in a daily exercise of faith on him, and in a constant observation of all his ordinances and commandments, answerably to your profession of, and relation to him. 7. As trees of righteousness, being rooted in, and fastening on him, to keep you fixed and immovable, and drawing nourishment from him for your spiritual growth;—and as a spiritual house, being built upon him, and closely united to him, as the only foundation of your faith and hope, security and salvation;—that ye may be confirmed in the doctrine and grace of faith in him, as ye have heard by the ministry of Epaphras; and may exceedingly abound in the daily increase of knowledge, faith, and every other grace, with enlarged thankfulness and praise to the author and finisher of all that concerns you.—8. Take heed lest seducers make a prey of you, and draw you off from Christ and his pure gospel, and rob you of its privileges and blessings, through the subtilties and corruptions of heathen philosophy, Jewish traditions, or the observation of Mosaic ceremonies; none of which things are, according to the mind and will of Christ, revealed in the gospel, nor do any of them, as now urged and observed, lead your soul to him only for salvation, who alone hath an all-sufficiency for it in himself. 9. For all the perfections of the Godhead, in their utmost fulness, for ever and substantially abide and dwell in his incarnate person, or temple of his manhood, in a personal and infinitely more glorious manner than ever JEHOVAH dwelt in the Jewish tabernacle or temple. 10. And ye, who have received him by faith, and are united to him as members of his mystical body, have all your defects made up, and all your securities or blessings completed in him as your Head, made of God to you wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; who, answerable to the infinite dignity of his divine person, is, in his office capacity, exalted to be the sovereign Ruler of all ranks of angels or men, good or bad. 11. In him therefore ye are so complete as to have no need of ceremonial circumcision, as judaizing teachers pretend, being spiritually circumcised by the Holy Ghost, who hath renewed your heart, and cut off your whole system of inward corruption, removing the guilt, power, and defilement of it, not by any human influences, but merely by the cleansing and sanctifying operation of Jesus Christ: 12. And in that baptism, which Christ hath instituted in the room of circumcision, ye have received the sign of, and obligation to, that holiness which is, or ought to be, in you as God's covenant people; and have had represented, sealed, and applied to you a certain and continued death to sin, and a quickening and resurrection to a life of holiness, in conformity to, and by virtue derived from, his death and resurrection, through that faith which has been wrought in your hearts by the same almighty influence by which God raised up Christ from the dead, and will, by virtue of his resurrection, at last raise you up to eternal life. 13. And you—who, in your sinful unregenerate state, were dead in law, lying under a just sentence of condemnation—and dead to God and everything spiritually good, lying under the power and filth of your inward corruptions, which circumcision anciently signified—hath God now raised up to a new life of grace and holiness, in order to a heavenly life of glory and blessedness together with Christ as your Pattern and Head of influence,—having, on account of his righteousness imputed, freely pardoned to each of you all your iniquities, original and actual, lesser or greater, and given you a full and irrevocable title to eternal life; 14. Blotting out, as it were, all our transgressions by the blood of his Son, and thereby disannulling that federal or ceremonial obligation to punishment on account of them, which testified that we were transgressors, and which separated the Gentiles from the church and privileges of the Jews, and was the cause of much enmity between them,—and by his death entirely removing and utterly destroying it, that it might never be produced in judgment against us. 15. And having, by his full satisfaction to law and justice, disarmed Satan and all his subordinate ranks of apostate angels of their power, which arises from the curse of the law, he exposed them to open contempt in the view of all the holy angels, and triumphed over them as his conquered foes. 16. Since therefore believing Gentiles, as well as Jews, are complete in Christ, and the hand-writing of ordinances, contrary to both, is cancelled, let none pretend that the non-observance of ceremonial ordinances relating to meats and drinks, or to their annual or monthly festivals, or even the Jewish seventh day sabbath, can hinder your spiritual or eternal happiness; or if they do, regard them not. 17. For the whole of these observances, required by the ceremonial law, were but merely shadows and figures of the good things which were to come under the gospel; but the truth, reality, or substance, represented by them, is brought in by Christ, and to be found in him.——18. And since he, in whom ye are complete, is the Head of all principality and power, let no one, whether Jewish zealot or Gentile philosopher, deprive you of your spiritual comfort or eternal glory, or lead you out of the way to it, seducing you to adopt human inventions in the worship of God, or to worship angels, good or bad, as mediators between God and men,—through the pride of their corrupt hearts, pretending uncommon insight into the things of God, and attempting to pry into what he never revealed; 19. Adopting these corruptions of worship, to the great dishonour of Jesus Christ, and rejecting, instead of laying hold on, adhering to, and by faith trusting in, him alone, as the only and all-sufficient Mediator and Advocate, to recommend them and their prayers to the acceptance of God,—and joining creatures in honour with him, who is the Head of angels, good or bad, and of every other creature, and who is the Representative, and the vital as well as governing Head of his church, from whom all her true members, deriving spiritual nourishment, are united to him and to one another, by his Spirit, and by faith, love, and religious ordinances,—and do, by virtue derived from God, increase in light and grace, comfort, holiness, and strength, and in good works, according to his will, and for his glory. 20—23. If then, according to the meaning of your baptism, ye, by virtue of union with Christ, and by communion with him in his death, are fully discharged from the moral law as a covenant, and from the obligations of the ceremonial law, why, as if ye were merely carnal men, and lived under a carnal dispensation, do ye, from regard to human imposition, submit yourselves to any of the legal ordinances, which prohibit the touching or eating of meats, once ceremonially unclean, but now allowed for men's perishing provision, as things that cannot defile their soul?—These human injunctions, relative to the service of God or mortification of our body, beyond what he has prescribed, have nothing worthy in themselves, or honourable to him, but are a mere shadow of wisdom or humility, and are really calculated to cultivate and please the false taste of men of corrupt minds.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—It is God's will, and his ministers' care, that the saints be united, comforted, and daily increase in knowledge, faith, and holy order; and that, having received Jesus Christ in all his offices as an all-supplying fountain, they should walk in him with the most steady faith, love, holy obedience, and cordial thanksgiving. Christians have need to beware of carnal wisdom and plausible errors. And it is absurd to forsake Christ or his gospel for anything else, when he has such fulness of Godhead and of new covenant blessings, and renders us complete in himself. Thrice happy are they, who, being quickened by his Spirit, renewed in their hearts, delivered from the broken law, reconciled to God, and made triumphant over devils, derive all necessary and nourishing influences from him as their Representative, vital Head, and gracious Governor. Rich is the mercy that, through his incarnation, obedience, and death, we are delivered from sin, from curses, from devils, from death and hell, and from all the dark and burdensome rites of the Jewish dispensation. And it is absurd for such as the Lord has thus freed to retain those rites, or add others, in the worship of God, as if such things could render us acceptable in his sight.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. If, according to your profession, ye be indeed risen from under the law, and the guilt and power of sin, to a life of righteousness and holiness,—together with, in conformity to, and by the quickening virtue of, our risen Redeemer, applied by faith,—let your hearts, in their temper and exercises, and in all your meditations, views, inquiries, and pursuits, by prayer, and every other ordinance of God, aspire after realizing, clear, and enlarged experiences and assurances of the durable, substantial, and satisfying things of the heavenly state, where he, your ascended Head, is exalted in all his majesty and authority, dignity and glory, rest and safety, to make intercession, and prepare a place for you. 2. Let all your affections of desire and hope, love and delight, be supremely fixed upon the excellent things which belong to, and are transacted in, that heavenly state, and not upon the empty, uncertain, perishing, and defiling pleasures and enjoyments, or even the carnal ordinances of this world. 3. And this is highly proper, since, by profession and obligation, and many of you by actual communion with Christ in his death, are really dead in your hearts and affections to the Mosaic law, and are crucified with him to sin, Satan, and the world—and all the pleasures and enjoyments of your spiritual life are maintained and promoted in secret and mysterious transactions, and fellowship between God and your souls, by virtue of Christ, who is one with him, till it be perfected in that eternal life which lies so much out of sight in this life, but is nevertheless secured and treasured up with Christ, in the secret purposes and immediate presence of God for you. 4. And when Christ, who is the Purchaser, Author, Sustainer, Finisher, Scope, and End of our spiritual life, and lives in us, shall appear in all his glory to judge the world, ye, who are quickened by his Spirit, shall be glorified together with and in conformity to him in soul and body. 5. In the prospect therefore of that blessed day, and in reflection on the spiritual purity and sublime happiness which ye shall then enjoy, as men dead to sin and risen with Christ, labour to have all your carnal and sinful dispositions, which are like members to the body of inward corruption, and are influenced and exerted by your bodily members, more and more weakened and slain, particularly all inclinations to unchastity in thought, word, and deed, and all excessive or irregular desires after the enjoyments of this world, whereby ye put creatures into an idolatrous competition with, or preference to God. 6. Abhor and abstain from them, as polluting abominations, which draw down the fearful judgments of God in this life, and especially in the next, upon unbelieving obstinate sinners. 7. And the more earnest care is necessary in this matter, as, in the days of your heathenism and unregeneracy, of free choice and with great eagerness, ye lived in the love and practice of these abominations. 8. But now, as Christians, ye ought to have no further fellowship with these or any other works of darkness; such as causeless and intemperate anger, furious passion, malicious revengefulness, reproachful speeches, particularly of God and sacred things, and all immodest expressions, which tend to defile your own or others' minds. 9. And never, either rashly, in jest, in excuse, in ill will, or for gain, speak anything contrary to strict truth, since, in profession, and I hope in reality, ye have absolutely cast off and renounced the whole system of inward and original, of subtle, but just now decaying, and dying corruption, with all its pernicious and defiling practices; 10. And, by a work of heart-changing grace, ye have, as it were, clothed yourselves with the holy qualities and beautiful ornaments of a new nature, formed after the image of God, the Creator and Renewer of men; 11. In which new creation there is no partial respect shown to persons on account of any external distinctions or privileges, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, savage or polite, slaves or freemen,—but Christ is ALL IN ALL in the whole of their salvation, in all their experiences and privileges.—12. Therefore, in an entire dependence on Christ, and imitation of him, and as persons chosen in him, and accordingly formed into holiness, and regarded as the objects of God's distinguishing love, instead of indulging or practising works of wickedness, carnestly practise, and, as it were, clothe and adorn yourselves with the most tender compassion towards the distressed, and with a generous and benevolent temper and behaviour towards all men, with modest thoughts of yourselves, and condescension to persons of low degree, with gentleness, mildness, and candour, towards all, and persevering patience under repeated and long-continued provocations;——13. Bearing with, and forbearing one another's various infirmities;—mutually forgiving one another their offences and injuries, in imitation and for the sake of Christ, who, at the expense of his own blood, has fully and freely pardoned all your infinite crimes. 14. And especially let the exercise of brotherly love, as an upper garment, add a beautiful lustre to, and regulate all, the other graces—which is at once the fulfilment of God's law, and knits together the members of Christ in the most perfect harmony, till his whole mystical body arrive at its perfect stature in him. '15. And for the more effectual cultivation of this brotherly love and every other grace, let the sense of God's friendship with you, through Christ, engage you always to practise and live under the influence of that excellent peace and concord among yourselves, of which God is the Author, Approver, and Commander, and to which ye are called by the grace of the gospel, and your union as members in Christ's church; and let the sense of mercies received or expected animate you to constant thankfulness and praise. 16. And for the same purpose, let the holy Scriptures, of which Christ is the Author, Matter, and End, be applied to, and fixedly reside in your hearts, as the constant mean of renewed influences from him, and of directing your whole conversation; and be mutually helpful in instructing and exciting one another to bless and praise God in every proper form; not only with grateful and harmonious voices, but with spiritual and gracious affections towards Jesus Christ, and God in him. 17. And whatever ye do in thought, word, or deed, in public or private, in things religious or civil, let it be done with a conscientious regard to the authority and command of the Lord Jesus Christ, with an humble dependence on him for all direction and assistance, and with an eye to his Father's glory,—always giving God thanks for his unnumbered mercies through him, through whom the blessings themselves are granted, and your thanksgivings for them accepted.——18. And as the Christian religion does not dissolve, but strengthen all moral obligations to relative duties required by the law of nature, let each of you carefully attend to them, notwithstanding your differences in other things; particularly see that ye, Christian wives, behave in a meek and submissive manner to your lawful husbands, as far as consists with your superior relation and obedience to Christ. 19. And ye, Christian husbands, treat your wives with all possible tenderness, kindness, and affection, doing all that you can for their temporal and spiritual ease, comfort, and happiness; and never exercise a severe and arbitrary lordship over them, or abuse them by passionate words, blows, or other severe conduct. 20. Ye, Christian children, love and honour your parents, of whatever character or condition they be, and conscientiously obey them in every just and reasonable command; for this is agreeable to the will of Christ, and acceptable to God through him. 21. On the other hand, see that ye parents carefully study the tempers of your children, and by prudent, kind, and gentle methods establish your authority over them; but never, by furious or opprobrious language, unreasonable impositions, or unmerciful corrections, sour their minds, break their spirits, and fill them with prejudices against you and the religion which ye profess. 22. And ye servants, whether bought or hired, be diligent and faithful in executing the trusts, and doing the business which your masters commit to you, fulfilling all their commands as far as ye can in consistency with your duty to Christ, your Master in heaven—and that cheerfully and sincerely, at all times, from regard to God's honour and authority, and as in his sight. 23. And whatever ye are called to do in their service, let it not be done with grudging and reluctance, but with a willing and ready mind, from a sense of duty towards the Lord Jesus Christ, in obedience to his command, with a view to his glory, and not from a selfish mercenary spirit, which aims only at pleasing of men. 24. And to animate you to cheerfulness and fidelity in your service, know that, whatever ill treatment or unrighteous returns ye meet with, instead of a suitable reward, from your masters on earth, ye shall now, and especially hereafter, be graciously rewarded with the heavenly inheritance; for in doing your duty to earthly masters ye really pay honour, and do service to the Lord Jesus himself, who hath placed you in your subordinate station for that purpose. 25. But he, whether master or servant, who indulges himself in wronging the other by any injustice, shall receive a just and impartial recompense and reward for all his iniquitous conduct, none being respected by Christ more than another upon account of any external circumstances.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—How dignified and happy are they who are risen with Christ, and whose life is laid up with him in God! Certain is their glorious appearance with Christ in the last judgment, and their eternal reign with him in heaven. And it is necessary that they set their affections on things above, and abhor and mortify every lust, shun every sinful practice, and study to be like Jesus their Head, their Saviour, their Portion, their Master, in both heart and life. A worldly and wicked mind and a heavenly hope are quite inconsistent. It is absurd to conceive ourselves members of Jesus Christ, redeemed to God by his blood, while we live in unchastity, covetousness, sinful passion, malice, falsehood, or blasphemy. If we belong to him, we must prove it by our conformity to him in our tempers and practice. Actuated by the faith of his forgiving kindness, what merciful compassion—what meekness—what humility—what forbearance—what readiness to forgive injuries—what brotherly love—what calmness of mind—what experimental and abundant knowledge of the Scriptures—what labours to edify one another—what thankfulness to God—what constant improvement of Christ—what punctuality in relative duties—ought to mark every Christian! And in every relative duty great regard must be had to Christ as the commander, the source, the motive, the pattern, the end of them all.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. And as servants ought to obey their masters in all lawful things, so ye Christian masters ought to deal justly and equitably with them, allowing them proper work, provision, and wages, and giving them proper reproofs or encouragements in their work, knowing that ye yourselves serve the Lord Jesus Christ, and must give an account of your treatment of servants, as well as of every part of your conduct, to him who now inspects, and will hereafter judge and reward you. 2. But to return to general exhortations, let all of you daily, at set seasons, in secret, private, or public prayer to God, in the name of Christ, plead for his blessings, temporal, spiritual, or eternal. Watch for special calls of Providence, and needful assistances of spiritual influence, to make you ever ready, fervent, and persevering in prayer; and watch against all hinderances of it, or deadness or wandering in it. And let all your supplications for mercies be joined with grateful praises and cheerful thanksgivings for what ye have received or expect. 3. And in all your addresses to God, earnestly plead with him that I, and my fellow-labourers in the ministry, may be favoured with extensive opportunities and abilities to preach the gospel in a right manner, and with remarkable success, and to lay open the deep things, and exhibit and offer the unsearchable riches of Christ, (for doing of which I am now a prisoner in bonds,) 4. That, as far as Providence shall grant me opportunities, I may be eminently assisted in declaring the whole counsel of God with a proper frame of spirit, and in a duly free, extensive, and plain manner. 5. And let the whole of your conversation toward your unbelieving neighbours be managed with such Christian skill, circumspection, and prudence, that ye may not be defiled by them, or encourage them in sin; but may, by your example, win them to Christ. In this manner improve and extend every opportunity of doing your proper duty, and doing good to them. 6. And let your speech be always such as proceeds from the grace of God in your heart, and as may recommend his free favour to others, and promote in them a gracious temper, that thereby ye may know how to give a reason of your hope with all modesty, meekness, and wisdom; and how to answer scrupulous doubts, serious inquiries, and captious cavillings, relative to any point of Christian faith, duty, or experience, which may be proposed to you.—7. As to my outward circumstances, and inward comforts, Tychicus, my beloved fellow-Christian and faithful minister of Christ, who brings you this letter, will fully inform you. 8. And being desirous to know how matters in religion stand with you, I have ordered him to make a thorough inquiry, and inform me of them—while he comforts you by his good counsels, and his informations of God's kindness to me. 9. He and Onesimus your countryman, who is now a noted convert to Christ, and comes along with him, will inform you fully of everything important about this place. 10, 11. Aristarchus the Macedonian, who endangered his life for my sake, and is now my fellow-prisoner; and John Mark, nephew to Barnabas, my dear old colleague in apostolic labours; (whom, if he come to you, I hope ye will respectfully receive, according to the recommendations he hath received;) and Joshua Justus;—the only three Jewish preachers who have here assisted me in propagating the gospel, and comforted me under my sufferings;—send you their heartiest wishes of temporal and spiritual blessings. 12—14. Epaphras, your fellow-citizen, who spends much of his time in earnest wrestlings with God in prayer, that ye may continue steadfast in the faith, be fully instructed in, and eminently conformed to, the will of God; and who manifests an uncommon concern for your present and eternal happiness, and your neighbours in Laodicea and Hierapolis;—Luke the beloved physician and evangelist,—and Demas,—send you their Christian respects.

* Some suppose this to refer to a lost Epistle; but this is gratuitous and unauthorized. Some think it to refer to 1 Tim.; others, to the Epistle to the Ephesians, left by Tychicus on his way to Colosse. What Epistle it was is unknown, and conjecture is useless. The record, however, is most valuable, as it inculcates the duty of reading the apostolic writings.—Ed.

15. Present my cordial love to your brethren at Laodicea; and particularly to Nymphas, and his regular, holy, and religious family, or other Christians who meet at his house for public worship. 16. And when ye have, in a proper and public manner, read this letter among yourselves, let an exact copy of it be sent to, and read in like manner by the church in Laodicea; and let the letter from the Laodiceans be also publicly read among you. 17. And as ye are surrounded with subtle enemies, who seek to pervert you, entreat and respectfully admonish Archippus, under a deep sense of the excellent nature, design, and importance, of his ministerial work, to lay out himself to his utmost in the authority and strength of Jesus Christ, and for his glory, to fulfil the duties of his office with all wisdom, diligence, faithfulness, and perseverance; explaining, confirming, vindicating, and enforcing the great doctrines of revelation, in exemplifying them in his own conduct, in reproving sin and confuting error, and in every other thing in his power, for the furtherance of the gospel in the conversion of sinners, and the edification and comfort of saints. 18. To conclude in my usual manner, I send you, in my own handwriting, my hearty respects, wishing that the free favour of God, with all the precious manifestations and effects thereof, may abound towards you. This I heartily desire and hope for; and that my letter may have the greater weight with you, and render you the more earnest in prayer for me, remember that I am suffering, with patience and cheerfulness, in bonds, for preaching the gospel to you Gentiles.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—With great equity, mildness, and mercy, ought masters to treat their servants, in the view of God's authority over them, and of their accounting to him. Great is the necessity of fervent and persevering prayer for fellow-Christians, and especially for ministers—that they may preach the gospel with proper wisdom, courage, and success. And much wisdom and grace are necessary to make Christians improve their time, and order their speech to the honour of Jesus Christ, and the edification of their neighbours. Much mutual esteem of one another, and fervent wrestlings for the church; great sympathy towards the distressed; courtesy to all men, especially the saints; and studious care to fulfil their ministry in the Lord—ought to prevail in every minister of Christ. And earnest care to vie with one another in every grace and duty, and to edify one another in love, and even to render their pastors duly diligent and faithful, ought to take place among all Christian professors.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

There is a considerable similarity between the Epistles to the Ephesians, the Philippians, and the Colossians; so that they may be most advantageously read as mutual commentaries. The Epistle to the Colossians has in it, however, several particulars that are not referred to in the others. Among these the most prominent are, the germinant doctrines of angel worship, and acts of voluntary austerity and will-worship, which were subsequently matured by the popedom of Rome;—which voluntary austerities, in penances, pilgrimages, and such like, "have, indeed, a show of wisdom and humility, and neglecting of the body;" but have in reality sprung from that ignorance which has rejected, even as the Jews rejected, "the righteousness of God" (Rom. 10. 3); which will-worship has superseded the all-prevailing intercession of Christ, by conjoining with him apostles, saints, and angels, all exalted to be objects of confidence, not only without, but in defiance of, the divine commandment. Mat. 4. 10. Thus early did the enemy begin to sow the tares where even the hands of apostles had sown the wheat! And, no doubt, they will be permitted by a wise and merciful Providence to "grow together until the harvest," when the tares of false doctrine and evil practices shall be separated, and the wheat of truth and holiness shall be gathered for the garner of the Lord. Mat. 3. 12. & 13. 25.—Ed.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

Thessalonica was the chief city of Macedonia, rebuilt by Philip the father of Alexander the Great, and so named to commemorate his victory over the Thessalians. Here Paul planted a Christian church, consisting partly of Jews and partly of Gentiles; but was quickly driven from them by the fury of the Jews; Acts xvii. 1—10: and his attempt to return to them seems to have been hindered by the same cause; ii. 18. To show his great affection for, and care of them, and to prevent their being seduced by false teachers, or discouraged by persecution, he wrote them this Epistle;—in which he affectionately thanks God for his mercy manifested in their conversion; chap. i.: represents the engaging example he had set before them, and the tender care he had of them; his intention to send Timothy to comfort them, and his praying for their welfare; ii, iii.: and, in view of the approaching judgment of the world, admonishes them to make proper preparation in all the branches of holiness; iv, v.

[Thessalonica was a flourishing city and sea-port, the capital of Macedonia. This name was given to it by Philip, father of Alexander, in memory of his conquest of Thessaly. We learn from Acts xvii. 1—9, that Paul, during his first tour in Europe, preached the gospel in Thessalonica, with considerable success, but was driven thence through the malice of the unbelieving Jews. From Thessalonica he went to Berea, and thence to Athens. From Athens he sent Timothy to Thessalonica to inquire into the state of the church, and confirm the new converts in the faith. Timothy, on his return, found Paul at Corinth,—whence, about A. D. 52, (as is generally supposed) he wrote this Epistle, the topics being suggested by Timothy's report. This is also generally believed to have been the first of that glorious series of Epistles with which Paul afterwards enriched the churches. Particular references are made in this Epistle to Gen. xv. 16. Is. lix. 17. Zech. xiv. 5. 1 Cor. xv. 22, 51, 52.—Ed.]

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1. Paul, together with Silas and Timothy, his assistants in preaching the gospel—to you Christians at Thessalonica, who believe in God as the only true God, and in Jesus Christ as the only true Messiah—wish all the rich manifestations and fruits of divine favour, and the most abundant peace and prosperity, temporal, and especially spiritual and eternal, from these divine Persons, according to their different stations in the work of our redemption. 2. And in our stated and occasional addresses to God, we daily, and in the most express manner, offer up our most solemn thanksgivings to God for his mercy bestowed upon you, and our most fervent supplications that he would perfect his work of grace which he has begun in you; 3. Being animated hereunto by the affecting and constant remembrance which we have of that lively and operative faith, manifesting itself in all holy obedience, and of that ardent love to Jesus Christ, his oracles, ordinances, and people, and the manifold exertions thereof towards us and towards one another, and of that patient continuance in well-doing under all your tribulations, and waiting for God to crown your lively hopes of eternal life through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ with full enjoyment,—which he has wrought in you, and which, as his children, by regenerating and adopting grace, ye exercise with all uprightness and sincerity, as in his sight: 4. By which manifest fruits of holiness ye and we justly conclude that ye have been graciously chosen of God to eternal salvation. 5. For the gospel, preached by me and my assistants, did not merely reach your ears; but while it was attested by miracles, the almighty influence of the Holy Ghost brought it home to your hearts, and produced in your souls an unshaken assurance of the truth and importance of it, and of your personal interest in the blessings thereby conveyed,—God thus owning our plain, patient, and faithful preaching of the gospel among you, in order to promote your eternal salvation: 6. And by this powerful influence of the gospel on your hearts, ye immediately became imitators of us preachers, and of Christ our glorious Master, in faith, obedience, and patience,—having, amidst all your severe persecutions, firmly believed the truths of the gospel, and thereby received such inward consolations of the Holy Ghost as sweetly supported you under your sufferings; 7. So that ye became eminent, encouraging, and exemplary patterns of faith, patience, and holiness, to all those who in Greece were afterwards turned to the Lord. 8. For the gospel of Jesus Christ, having had such glorious success among you, was thenceforward published far and near with great reputation and advantage;—the fame of your faith in God through Jesus Christ, manifested by remarkable fruits of holiness, having so spread abroad that we have no occasion to speak of it; 9. For wherever we travel we meet with persons who are disposed, with wonder and joy, to mention to us what happy effects our ministrations had among you; with what sincerity ye embraced the gospel which we preached; and how, by its powerful influence, ye voluntarily and quickly renounced your heathen idols, and with indignation turned from them, to believe in, adore, and obey that God, who alone has all life, glory, and blessedness in himself, and is the fountain of all created life, natural, temporal, spiritual, or eternal.——10. And to wait with faith, preparation, patience, desire, and hope, under all your present sufferings, for the glorious appearance of his eternal Son, whom he hath raised from the dead to judge the world,—even Jesus Christ, who, by his obedience and suffering, purchased, and by his almighty power effects, our deliverance from his dreadful wrath, which will be for ever coming, like a perpetual torrent of flaming vengeance, upon the wicked.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Thrice happy is it when the gospel is effectually applied to the hearers' hearts; and when they, by their conversion from idols to God, and a holy imitation of Christ and his servants, in love, patience, and purity, prove their eternal election to life! They are a credit to their religion who receive the gospel with full assurance of its divine truth, excellence, and importance, and with joy in the Holy Ghost, amidst manifold tribulations. With great pleasure should faithful ministers assist one another, and reflect on the success of their labours, regard their spiritual children, pray for them, and labour to promote their edification. And nothing is more endearing, comforting, or animating to holiness, than saving views of Jesus Christ the Son of God, and his everlasting salvation.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. And yourselves, my dear Christian brethren, know that, as I and my two fellow-preachers did not entertain you with unprofitable subjects, or a mere sound of words in our ministrations, so they were not without that good fruit which the promise of God had given us ground to expect. 2. And in hopes of this, even after we had been treated with the utmost cruelty and contempt at Philippi, we, in an humble dependence on our God, publicly preached the gospel among you with a holy resolution and undaunted courage, and with great zeal and fervour of spirit,—striving for your conversion, and against the furious opposition of the unbelieving Jews: 3. For our exhortations to duty, and comforting encouragements under sufferings, did not consist of erroneous doctrines leading to licentiousness, but of the pure gospel of Christ, productive of holiness in heart and life; nor did we minister to you in hypocritical pretences of piety and zeal, or of love to you, in order to promote our own selfish ends, but in the sincerity of our hearts, for the glory of God, and your real welfare. 4. There was no falsehood or impurity in the matter, or insincerity or selfishness in the manner of our preaching; but as God had chosen, authorized, and furnished us for, and intrusted us with, the preaching of the gospel, so we endeavoured to preach it exactly as we received it from him;—not in a manner suited to the corrupt taste, notions, and fancies of men, but with such purity and sincerity, as God, the searcher of hearts, could not but approve of. 5. We can appeal to you, and even to God himself, that we never studied, by fawning or complimentary speeches, to ingratiate ourselves with any of you; nor did we ever encourage any to expect salvation in their sins, or by their own righteousness or strength: nor did we ever make use of religion as a pretence to cover some secret design of making advantage of you; 6. Nor were we ever ambitious of being honoured by men, or ever contrived, intended, or endeavoured to be admired, caressed, or applauded, by any among whom we ministered; nor, though as messengers of Christ we might have justly claimed it, did we ever require a maintenance from you: 7. But, on the contrary, we behaved among you with such humility, modesty, meekness, and self-denial, as plainly marked the most tender and affectionate concern to do everything possible for your spiritual benefit, help, comfort, and eternal salvation; 8. Insomuch, that we not only took great pleasure in preaching to you the gospel of Christ in a suitableness to your necessities, but were ready to testify our affection to you in the most tender compassion, exhausting our strength and spirits, and hazarding or even laying down our lives to promote your spiritual and eternal welfare. 9. In proof of which, ye cannot but remember, that while we were among you, we not only spent our and travail: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 [l] Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably, we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

11 As ye know [m] how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12 [n] That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath [o] called you unto his kingdom and glory.*

13 For this cause also [p] thank we God without ceasing, because, when [q] ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which [r] effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, [s] became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:

15 [t] Who both killed the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and have [†] persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men:

strength in our ministerial labours, but even worked early and late at our secular callings for our livelihood:—that, as an evidence, it was not your wealth, but your spiritual and eternal salvation, we were earnestly desirous of—we might preach the gospel to you without putting you to any expense. 10. We can appeal to your consciences, and even to the all-seeing and heart-searching God, that we exercised ourselves in a conscientious discharge of all the duties of religion towards God, and of righteousness towards men; and always in such a sober, humble, benevolent, and inoffensive manner, as might best recommend the good ways of the Lord among you, who were brought to the faith of Christ by our ministrations. 11, 12. And while we set you a good example in our own behaviour, ye cannot but know how we counselled, entreated, excited, and encouraged every one of you to practise the like Christian duties in your respective stations; and did all that we could to comfort you under your tribulations; and, with the greatest earnestness and affection, in the name and authority of Jesus Christ, solemnly charged you to live answerably to the holy nature and will, and to the special favours of God as your God, who has effectually called you by the gospel to partake of all the blessings and honours of his kingdom of grace in this world, and of his kingdom of glory in that which is to come;——13. In reflection upon which, we are exceedingly thankful to God, and daily praise his blessed name, that, when we were sent by him to preach the gospel to you, your hearts were opened to attend to it, and embrace it with reverence, faith, love, and obedience, not as a human scheme, or on the ground of human authority, but as indeed a revelation from God, and upon the ground of his authority, as a doctrine of which none but God himself is the Contriver and Author, and which, through his blessing, worketh so powerfully in changing the sentiments, inclinations, and views of you who believed it. 14. As a proof of which effectual operation in you, ye had no sooner embraced it in faith and love, than ye became imitators of us and of the believers in Judea: courageously, calmly, patiently, and even cheerfully, submitting to the persecutions of your countrymen for the sake of Christ, even as they did to those of their Jewish brethren; 15. Who, in the madness of their rage, murdered the Lord of glory, and only Saviour of mankind, as their fathers did the ancient prophets; and who have all along, and everywhere, persecuted us ministers of Christ; acting in direct opposition to the merciful nature and holy law and gospel of God, and even to the common welfare of men; 16. Doing what in them lies to hinder our preaching the gospel to you Gentiles, for your conversion and salvation; and thus, through their obstinate prejudices, and furious opposition to Christ and his servants and cause, filling up the measure of their own and their fathers' iniquities, till the righteous vengeance of God, which has already begun against them, dreadfully complete their ruin, and without remedy destroy their church and state for many ages, till the fulness of the Gentiles' conversion to Christ occasion their restoration. 17, 18. Being, by their outrageous persecution, driven from you exceedingly against our will, when, in your tribulation and danger, ye had much need of our further counsel, admonitions, cautions, and encouragements, my brethren, and especially myself, have been extremely desirous, and have once and again attempted, to pay you a visit; but Satan, that adversary of Christ and his ministers, and of your salvation, has hitherto, by his instruments, laid such entanglements and obstacles in our way as rendered it improper. 19, 20. We are, nevertheless, still as mindful of you as ever, and as affectionately desirous to see you, if the Lord permit; for what is the hope which chiefly animates us in our ministrations? What is our chief joy in them? Or what is the crown of glory we expect as our reward at the end?—Is it not that we shall present you and other converts as chaste virgins to Christ; that when he who is our life shall appear, ye, together with us, may appear with him in glory, and sit on his right hand?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Great patience, courage, candour, diligence, humility, prudence, tender affection, self-denial, unblamable holiness and equity, are necessary for ministers in all their ministrations and conduct. And happy is the church in which such are found; and where hearers receive the gospel into their hearts upon the testimony of the Holy Ghost, and experience it powerfully influencing them to universal holiness and readiness to suffer for its sake! Desperately malicious are apostate professors against Christ, his truths and people, and certain and dreadful is their punishment. In manifold forms Satan bestirs himself to hinder the spread of the gospel by faithful ministers.—But dear is the affection such bear to their spiritual children: great the comfort they take in them now, and exalted the honour they will have by them in the great day of account.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. Such was the distressing care of my mind about you, as young converts in perilous circumstances, that, when I found I could by no means quickly return to you myself, I chose rather to struggle alone with difficulties unnumbered at Athens, than neglect anything which might contribute to your edification; 2. And therefore cheerfully parted with my dearly beloved brother Timothy, whom God has, by his grace, called to, richly furnished, and rendered most laborious and faithful in the ministerial office; and sent him to labour among you in exciting, strengthening, and confirming your faith in Christ and the great doctrines of the gospel; and that he might revive in your souls a sweet sense of the glorious advantages and delights which result from your faith in this, and especially the other world; 3. That so none of you might be disheartened or staggered at the afflictions and persecutions which ye or we have to endure for the sake of Christ:—especially as ye know, that God, in his eternal, infinitely wise, and holy purpose, has appointed us, the servants and followers of Christ, to suffer with and for him, as well as to reign with him. 4. For when I and my fellow-labourers in the work of the gospel were present with you, we warned you, that both you and we must expect trouble and persecution in following Christ; and ye know it quickly came upon us before your eyes. 5. And on account of the troublesome circumstances in which we were forced to leave you, I could no longer for-some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

6 But now, when [g] Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you:

7 Therefore, brethren, [h] we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

8 For [i] now we live, if [*] ye stand fast in the Lord.

9 For what [k] thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 [l] Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might [m] perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 [n] Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, [†] direct [‡] our way unto you.

12 [o] And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you;

13 To the end he may [p] stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the [q] coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

‡ This is so obviously and undeniably a prayer to our Lord Jesus Christ as much as to the Father, that if the worship of prayer be an evidence of Godhead in him to whom it is directed (and surely it is one of the most decided), then must the Godhead of Christ be acknowledged as a matter beyond all dispute. And if any will deny this evidence, "neither would they believe though one should rise from the dead," and confirm it by the fact of the angelic worship in heaven.—Ed.

bear sending Timothy to inquire concerning your spiritual condition, lest, by the violence of persecution, the subtlety of false teachers, or the deceitfulness of your own hearts, Satan, that malicious, artful, and busy adversary, should prevail to draw some of you back from the truths and ways of the Lord, after all the promising appearances ye had made.——6. But when Timothy returned to us at Corinth, and informed us that, notwithstanding all your trials, temptations, and dangers, ye stand fast in the faith of the gospel, and in your love to Christ and his truths, ordinances, ministers, and people, and retain an affectionate remembrance of us in your daily prayers, and a lively sense of the excellent doctrines which we preached among you, and are often speaking of us with esteem and honour, and earnestly desirous of another visit from us; 7. These good tidings of your steady perseverance in the faith of Christ, and the genuine fruits thereof, entirely removed all our painful anxiety about you, and exceedingly comforted us over all the troubles to which we have been exposed for the gospel's sake. 8. For whatever were our difficulties, dejections, and solicitude concerning you before, we are now alive and comforted in our souls, and go on cheerfully in our work, since we knew that ye continue so steadfast in your adherence to the Lord Jesus, and hold fast the profession of your faith without wavering. 9. For, considering the happy state of your affairs, how can we ever be thankful enough to God, in returns of praise, for his grace bestowed on you, and for giving us hearts to serve so exceedingly and sincerely in it before him; 10. In all our stated and occasional devotions, praying with uncommon fervour, earnestness, and importunity, that, if it be his will, we may be allowed to visit you again, and be further instrumental in instructing, establishing, and building you up in knowledge, faith, comfort, and holiness, unto complete and eternal salvation? 11. And to promote these valuable purposes, may God himself, whose kingdom ruleth over all, and is your covenant God and Father; and our Lord Jesus Christ, who, as Creator, is Head over all things to his church; by his overruling providence, give us a speedy and unobstructed opportunity to visit you. 12. And whether we be permitted to come to you or not, may the Lord Jesus, as your Head of influence and government, enable you, by his Spirit, still more abundantly to increase in Christian love towards one another, as members of the same mystical body of which he and children of the same heavenly Father, and even in all good will towards men, with all sincerity and fervour, even as our affection increases towards you. 13. To the end that he may thus strengthen, stablish, and confirm your whole souls in the doctrines of the gospel, and in every grace, and may preserve you blameless in every good word and work, and in all holy conversation before our all-seeing God and Father, until ye be presented holy, unblamable, and unreprovable, when Jesus Christ, and all his holy angels and glorified saints, shall come to judge the world.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Ministers should be very solicitous to demonstrate love to their people, and use every mean possible for their establishment and comfort in the truth; and to prevent their being seduced by deceivers, or dispirited by sufferings, especially when they are but newly converted and babes in Christ.—Those thoroughly professors count the cost at their entrance on religion, the more they will withstand Satan's temptations to apostasy. And when church members persevere and increase in knowledge, faith, love, and good works, it gives great comfort to their faithful ministers: Yea, it supports them under their distresses, engages their thankfulness to God, and animates their prayers for, and delight in them.—But it is Jesus Christ, and his Father, and his blessed Spirit, who are alone the proper source of believers' gospel privileges, growth and establishment in grace, and happy meetness for, and comfortable appearance in, the last judgment.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. In order to your being established in holiness at the second coming of our Lord Jesus, with the most tender affection we entreat, and, with the highest authority, in the name, and for the sake of the Lord Jesus, we exhort and charge you, that, according to the inspired directions which ye have received from us, how to order your whole conversation in a manner acceptable to God through Christ, ye would, by his grace, more and more labour to improve and excel therein every day. 2. For ye cannot but know and remember what holy precepts we delivered to you when with you, as the rule of your behaviour in all things; and with what solemn and evangelical arguments we enforced and pressed them on your consciences, by the immediate authority of the exalted Lord and Saviour of his body the church. 3. For the ordaining, approving, and commanding will of God, and his end in bestowing his grace upon you, concur in this, that, encouraged by the promises of his covenant, ye should cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in his fear; and particularly that ye should carefully avoid and detest all manner of unchastity, and every appearance of temptation, or approach to it; 4. And that every one of you, Jew or Gentile, should, by the gospel, know by what obligation, in what manner, and by what motives, means, and assistances from above, he may make use of his body, which is the receptacle of his soul, with temperance, chastity, and purity, to the honour of God, and its relation to Christ and his Spirit, and of the Christian profession and character; 5. Not using it in the gratification of defiling passions, appetites, and inclinations of the sensual kind, in the manner of the Heathens, who, being ignorant of the true and living God, have rendered themselves infamous for the vilest abominations. 6. That so none of you may ever presume to act a dishonest or injurious part towards your neighbour, particularly in violating the fidelity and chastity of his wife; for ye know we have often solemnly warned you, that the fearful vengeance of God shall punish such abominable transgressors: 7. For he, being infinitely holy, neither did nor could, by his gospel and grace, call us to the knowledge and fellowship of Christ, that we might indulge ourselves in uncleanness or any other sin, but that he might, by the strongest obligations and motives, engage us to chastity, holiness, and unblamableness, in our whole conversation before him. 8. Whoever therefore he be that rejects or contemns these admonitions and commands, does not despise the authority of man, but of the great God himself, by whose inspiration we deliver them, and who gives his sanctifying Spirit to all true believers, to direct and excite them to all proper obedience. 9, 10. But with respect to the great duty of loving one another as brethren in the faith, hope, holiness, and blessings of the gospel, I need not inculcate it upon you as though ye were averse to it; for, by the teaching of God's word and not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are [i] taught of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do [k] it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye [l] increase more and more;

11 And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

12 That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack [*] of nothing.[†]

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep,[‡] that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For [m] if we believe[§] that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep.[‖]

16 For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout,[*] with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first:[†]

17 Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds,[*] to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 Wherefore [n] [†] comfort one another with these words.

d Prov. 1. 6, 9—11.
‡ Even among the heathen drunkenness during the day was considered so utterly scandalous, that the apostle, writing to the Thessalonian converts, treats of it as a thing unknown. What a humiliating contrast with the state of many countries nominally Christian, where drunkards may be seen revelling in their streets in the open face of day; and so far from being ashamed, glorying in their beastly degradation.—Ed.

Spirit, ye have been instructed in the obligations and manner of performing this duty, and are inclined and enabled to practise it, not only towards your fellow-Christians at Thessalonica, but towards all those of the churches around you;—so that I need only beseech you to persevere and abound more and more in the manifestation and exercise of this brotherly love towards all the saints, your poor brethren of Judea not excepted; 11, 12. And for promoting it, let all of you study to behave in a meek and peaceable manner, never officiously meddling with other people's affairs, but attending to the duties of your respective stations and personal concerns, and industriously labouring in your several callings for the support of yourselves and families, and that ye may be enabled to give to such as are in straits; as ye know I and my fellow-ministers of Christ commanded and exemplified to you while we were with you; that so ye may live in such an upright, faithful, decent, and becoming manner, toward the heathens around you, as to prevent their reproaching you or your religion; and that, instead of needing the charity of others, ye may have enough of everything needful. 13. Moreover, I would not have you ignorantly indulge yourselves in excessive or superstitious sorrow for your deceased Christian relations, as if either their want of circumcision, or any other thing, could prevent their eternal felicity: 14. For if we truly believe that Jesus Christ died for our offences, and rose again for our justification, we must, upon the same ground, believe that God, through the death and resurrection of Christ, will quicken, to an immortal and glorious life, them that sleep in union with him, and will present them together with him in the last judgment. 15. For this we declare unto you, by the infallible inspiration of the Holy Ghost, that those members of Christ's mystical body, who shall be living on the earth at his appearance to the last judgment, shall not be happy, or have their bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, sooner than those that shall be found in their graves: 16. For in that important day, the Lord Jesus, in his human nature, shall visibly, and in great glory, descend from heaven, and in a most solemn manner, somewhat similar to the thunders at Sinai, summon the world to appear at his tribunal; and then the bodies of those who died in a state of federal and vital union with him, shall be quickened to a glorious immortality, before the bodies of the wicked be raised, or the living saints gathered to his right hand. 17. But immediately after their resurrection, the members of his body, to which we all belong, who shall be then living, shall undergo a refining change; and, together with the raised saints, be carried up, by his almighty power, into the air, that we may sit down on his right hand; and being there acknowledged and acquitted, shall for ever continue, soul and body, in his immediate presence, to behold his glory. 18. Wherefore comfort yourselves, and one another, with respect to the death of your Christian friends, and every other trial ye undergo, with these views of your and their happiness in the last judgment and eternal state.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Christians should every day carefully study an increase of holiness in heart and life, according to the will of God. And there is need of the utmost watchfulness and care to avoid all sensuality and impurity, as contrary to the command of God, and infinitely dangerous to our souls. Whatever contempt is aimed at Christ's faithful ministers, falls chiefly on himself, and will be punished accordingly. It is delightful when church members, as taught of God, abound in mutual love, peacefulness, and industry. But, alas! how many, by their intermeddling temper, bring trouble to themselves, and reproach on their religion; while others, by their idleness, thievishly prey on their neighbours around! Very absurd is immoderate grief for Christian friends, who are taken from us to be with Christ, and shall be quickly raised in glory, and set with him in the last judgment. Inexpressible is the solemnity of that day, and the comfort and honour it will bring to the saints.—Thrice blessed is that people whose God is the Lord! In death they sleep in Jesus' bosom; in the resurrection they appear with him in glory; and through eternity they shall see his face, and sit with him on his throne.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1. But with respect to the precise time or opportunity that Christ will take for his appearance to judge the world and complete your happiness, I have no need to say anything. 2. For from what ye have heard from Christ and his ministers, ye cannot but perfectly know, that, however unalterably that time be fixed in the purpose of God, yet, to excite all concerned to constant preparation and watching for it, the precise period or day thereof is altogether concealed; and it will come as unexpectedly on all, and as terribly on the wicked, as a thief who breaks into a house at midnight, when the master and all his family are asleep; 3. For while secure sinners shall be flattering themselves with nothing but peace and prosperity, that awful day, and the everlasting destruction which attends it, shall, by means of the sin which they carry about in them, overtake them in the most sudden, agonizing, and unavoidable manner. 4. But ye, my dear Christian brethren, are not like others under the power of spiritual darkness, that ye should sleep secure in sin, faithless and unconcerned about that awful event, or unprepared for it;—and therefore, though it may unexpectedly surprise you, it cannot issue in your hurt or ruin. 5. Nay, all of you by profession, and I hope most of you in reality, are enlightened in the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation through him, that ye may be watchful, and walk honourably in the light of gospel truth and holiness, with your eyes open, and as persons exposed to public view:—and being thus made light in the Lord, we are no more covered with the shadows of judaism, darkness of heathenism, mist of error, or natural ignorance of our own minds, as others still are, and we once were. 6. Being therefore brought into this happy state, let us never give way to a slothful, careless, and indolent frame of spirit, as others do who are still in their sins; but, as enlightened by the gospel and Spirit of Christ, let us maintain a wakeful temper of mind, watch over our own hearts and ways, and watch against sins and temptations, and for the coming of Christ;—and let us, in view of it, be modest in our opinions of ourselves, and moderate in our cares and pleasures relative to this present world. 7. For as men sleep in the night that their rest may not be disturbed, and drink in the night that they may not be exposed to shame; so they, who indulge themselves in carnal security, or immoderate cares or pleasures of this world, delight in, and are under the power of, ignorance, error, guilt, and corruption. 8. But let us, who are spiritually begotten unto God by, and endowed and surrounded with, the light of gospel truth and grace, be vigilant and moderate in our affections or pursuits of earthly enjoyments; and being in a state of warfare with sin, Satan, and the world, let us make use of our Christian armour for defending ourselves;—particularly of faith in Christ, and in God through him,—and of love to him, and to one another in him, which, as a breastplate, may defend our heart,—and of a well-grounded, solid, and satisfying hope of eternal life through him; which, as a helmet, may secure our head, till we come off more than conquerors through him that loved us: 9. For by what God has wrought for and in us, it is evident that he has not, in his eternal decree, pre-appointed us to everlasting damnation, but to obtain a free, rich, and everlasting redemption through the merits and mediation of Christ, 10. Who, as our Surety, obeyed and died in our room and stead, to take away our sin, that, by the merit and efficacy of his death, we who believe in him, whether we be found dead or alive at the last day, should, together with, in union to, and fellowship with him, be solemnly admitted into eternal blessedness. 11. Wherefore, with the views and hopes of, and converse about, these glorious events, labour, as ye have begun, to comfort, establish, and edify one another. 12. And as they who minister in holy things are the ordinary means and instruments which Christ hath appointed for the instruction, conversion, and edification of men's souls unto complete salvation, we earnestly entreat and charge you to converse freely with, own, and honour, and show your liberality, love, and respect to all his faithful servants and their ministrations,—who painfully labour among you for the good of your souls; and, by virtue of their commission and ability from Christ, watch over your spiritual concerns, according to the laws which he has enacted in his word; and who, as occasions require, warn you against all sin, error, and danger; reprove what is amiss in your conduct; and exhort, counsel, and encourage you to persevere in the ways of truth, sobriety, and holiness; 13. And to esteem them in the most honourable and affectionate manner, on account of the dignity and importance of the work in which they are employed for the glory of God and your spiritual advantage; and, as ye would not dishonour Christ, grieve them, or his Spirit in them, nor prevent your profiting by their labours, follow the things that make for harmony, peace, and friendship, with them and with one another. 14. And we further beseech both ministers and people among you, in their respective stations, to admonish those that are any ways disorderly in their walk towards God or men, and to warn them of their sin and danger, and the dishonour which they bring on their holy profession, and the pernicious influence of their conduct on others,—and thus endeavour to reclaim them. Encourage and comfort distressed, timorous, and dejected fellow-Christians; deal tenderly with, and endeavour to strengthen the weak in faith or knowledge, and labour to uphold them from falling or stumbling: and, as far as ye can, without sin, exercise patience and forbearance towards all men, friends or enemies. 15. Whatever injurious treatment ye receive, see that ye never attempt to revenge the injuries done you, but render good for evil; and always apply yourselves to do whatever is kind, useful, and beneficial, not only to fellow-Christians, but to every one with whom ye are connected.—16. And as to personal duties, study, for the credit of religion and your own comfort, always to maintain a cheerfulness of temper, rejoicing in the Lord Jesus Christ, and God in him, in whatever he is in himself or to you, or has done, does, or will do, for you. 17. But as in this world your weakness, sinfulness, necessities, and dangers, are constant, let your souls always maintain a praying frame; and see that ye daily, on stated or other occasions, abound in fervent prayer for yourselves and others. 18. Always, and in all circumstances, mingling your supplications with hearty thanksgivings to God for the unnumbered mercies, spiritual and temporal, which ye have or do receive, and the eternal which ye have in hope; for this is the grateful tribute which God, by the strongest obligations, requires of you for his honour in the receipt of these favours. 19. And as none of these duties can be performed without the special assistance of the Holy Ghost, beware of neglecting, stifling, and extinguishing his gifts, graces, or operations; but carefully comply with, cherish, and improve his gracious illuminations, suggestions, and motions, to excite and enable you to proper fervour in every good work. 20. And as the Holy Ghost works by means of, and according to, the word of God, see that ye never contemn, but highly prize and improve the Scriptures, and every gospel ministration thereof, whether extraordinary or not. 21. But as many false teachers are gone abroad into the world, take care, under the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost, thoroughly to try all doctrines and practices by the rule of God's word; and whatever ye find to be really true, good, and honourable, steadfastly cleave to it in your faith and practice. 22. And, with the greatest care, avoid everything erroneous or sinful, and even the most distant appearances thereof, or temptations thereto. 23. And, for these purposes, may that God, who is reconciled to you in Christ, and who is the Author, Giver, Commander, and Approver of all true peace with himself, or with each other, thoroughly purge you from all iniquity, and make you eminently partakers of his image; and may he preserve all the powers of your soul; all your animal spirits, senses, appetites, or natural tempers, and all the members of your body, from every sinful inclination or work, that ye may be found perfect at the coming of Christ. 24. On his faithfulness ye may indeed depend; for he who has, by his grace, effectually called you to his kingdom and glory, will, according to his promise, carry on and perfect whatever concerns you in your way to glory, and by the means of his own appointment. 25. As we ministers are so earnest in our prayers for you, we beg that ye will daily and fervently pray for us, that, by the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost, we may be inclined, enabled, and encouraged, to the diligent and faithful discharge of our important trust, and at the end receive a crown of glory as our gracious reward. 26. Let our most affectionate and religious respects be presented to all our Christian brethren with you; and see that ye testify your cordial love to one another, in the most sincere, friendly, chaste, and pious manner. 27. And as the contents of this letter are of great importance and general use, I solemnly charge you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that it be distinctly read unto all your members, who, I hope, live together as brethren in faith, profession, holiness, and comfort.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—To desire to know the time of Christ's second coming, is but needless and sinful curiosity. But great is the importance of earnest watchfulness and diligent preparations for it. With sudden ruin it will dreadfully overwhelm the world of the ungodly; but will bring the most abundant comfort to those who are begotten again to a lively hope of eternal felicity through the resurrection of Christ from the dead. And the sovereign, the distinguishing grace of their election will then most evidently appear. What activity, watchfulness, and sobriety—what daily warring against the devil, the world, and the flesh, in the exercise of faith, love, and hope—what mutual harmony and study of one another's edification and comfort—what due regard to the messengers, ministration, and Spirit of Christ—what careful examination of doctrines and practices, and of our own hearts, by the word of God—what steadfast adherence to, and following after, that which is good—what careful avoiding of sinful anger, and every other appearance of evil—what a joyful, prayerful, and thankful frame of spirit—what cordial love and friendship—are necessary to prepare us for that great event! Infinite then is the mercy that the God of peace hath undertaken our sanctification; and will, in his own time, certainly effect it. And it is his grace, power, and faithfulness, not our care or diligence, that are the great security of our eternal happiness. Never then let me murmur at, nor fear the event of any duty, when my reconciled God works all my works in and for me; and in fervent prayer, and serious perusal of the Scriptures, let me be a worker together with him.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

This epistle is remarkable for its consolatory doctrines and precepts addressed to mourners. The sincere mourner is always an object of deep interest to a believer, for he beholds in him—not merely a brother in trouble, and, as such, entitled to his sympathy—but a copy, as it were, of the Lord Jesus himself, who was emphatically "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." There are not a few who address themselves to mourners as if they were, in some degree, guilty of a sin when they mourn. And, no doubt, there may be in mourning a rebellious murmuring against God. There may be ungrateful forgetfulness of past mercies, and unbelieving distrust for the future. Still, all this will not prove that mourning for the loss of friends is, in itself, sinful. Abraham mourned for Sarah; Joseph for Jacob; Martha and Mary for Lazarus; and the women stood afar off weeping at Calvary. The true remedy, therefore, for mourning, is not condemnation, but right direction. That direction guides to the coming of the Lord, the rising of the departed dead, and the hope of meeting in glory,—topics that inculcate no stoical insensibility, but accompany us to "the house of mourning," and sanction, while they moderate that "sadness of the countenance by which the heart is made better."—Ed.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

This, like the former epistle, appears to have been written, not from Athens, according to the unauthorized note at the end of both, but from Corinth. It evidently was written soon after, and with the view of correcting a misapprehension of some expressions in the former epistle. Twice (1 Thes. iv. 15, 17.) the apostle had spoken in such a manner of "the day of the Lord," that they had concluded it was just at hand. This impression would appear to have led to such a cessation from secular duties, as would soon have produced want in families, and have exposed the Christians to the ridicule of the Jews and heathens. The apostle, therefore, writes to rectify this error, while he labours to strengthen their faith and hope, under existing persecutions. The epistle contains evident references to the following portions both of the Old and New Testaments:—Exod. vii. 11, 12. & viii. 18. & ix. 11. Mat. xvi. 14. Acts xiv. 22. 2 Pet. i. 20, 21.—Ed.

PAUL,[a] and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God[*] our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

4 So that we ourselves [b]glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1. Paul, an inspired messenger of Christ, and Silas and Timothy, his assistants in planting the gospel among you, to those in Thessalonica, who have been graciously turned from heathen idols to the true and living God, and to Jesus Christ as the only true Messiah; 2. Again earnestly wish that the divine favour, in all its manifestations and effects, and all manner of spiritual peace and prosperity, may abound to all and every one of you, from God as the fountain, and through Christ as the purchaser and dispenser thereof. 3. Reflecting upon what we have further heard of the remarkable increase of your faith towards God, and love towards one another, we find ourselves sweetly constrained solemnly and daily to thank God for the marvellous influences of his grace on your hearts, by which these and all other graces are maintained and improved. 4. And in all the churches of Christ whither we come, with the highest esteem, honour, and delight, we make mention of your firmness of mind, calm submission, holy resolution, strong and lively faith, and steadfast adherence to Christ and the gospel, under all the persecutions and afflictions which have all along attended you for his sake, 5. Which is a manifest token that God has appointed a future, just, and impartial judgment of the world, which will set all things to rights, and in which he will adjudge you to that heavenly kingdom, for the honour of which, and in hope of the enjoyment of which, ye so cheerfully suffer; 6. Since it cannot but be agreeable to God's righteous nature, will, law, and government, that in due time severe punishment be inflicted upon those that unjustly vex, distress, and cruelly persecute you on account of your adherence to the truth of the gospel; 7, 8. And that, in and through Christ, he should give you and us, who are persecuted for his cause, a release from our present tribulations, and an entrance into a state of perfect rest and peace: when our Lord Jesus, who has redeemed us to God by his own precious blood, shall, in the most public and awful manner, attended by all his millions of mighty and holy angels, appear in the clouds at the last day—to adjudge to, and execute just vengeance upon all them, Jews or Gentiles, who continue in their sins, strangers to the true knowledge of God, and rebellious against the light of nature; or who continue to disobey, reject, and contemn the gracious calls of our Lord Jesus Christ in the gospel: 9. Both which sorts of sinners shall then begin to be punished with an everlasting loss of, and banishment from, his blissful presence, and all the glorious effects of his saving power, and an eternal suffering of the most inexpressible torments in soul and body, from the immediate and terribly glorious operations of his almighty power, —10. At the very time in which he will appear, to your joy, to glorify himself in the full performance of all his promises, in the complete salvation of all his sanctified ones;—and to be glorified and adored by them, who by faith cordially embrace the testimony of the gospel preached by us,—in thankful and everlasting wonder at the riches of his grace, and the great things he has done for them. 11. In reflection upon these important events, and in hopes of your escaping the terrors and sharing the joys thereof, we daily and earnestly supplicate our new covenant God of all grace, that, by the almighty operation of his Spirit, he would gradually fulfil all his promises, and perfect your faith and other graces, and all the fruits of good works proceeding therefrom, and thus make you meet for the full enjoyment of that heavenly inheritance to which ye are called by the gospel.

CHAPTER II.

(1) The apostle beseecches the Thessalonians not to be discomposed by the expectation of the immediate coming of the Lord: 1, 2. (2) Because it must be preceded by "a falling away," and the appearance of "the man of sin:" 3—10. (3) The belief of lies, a judicial punishment upon the lovers of lies: 11, 12. NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming* of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away† first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.‡

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

A. M. cir. 4060. A. D. cir. 56.

* By the coming.—Rather, "concerning the coming."—Ed.

† Rather, "the falling away," the great apostasy foretold in the prophets and by Christ himself.—Ed.

‡ This "man of sin,"—this patron of sin—this "son of perdition,"—this heir of destruction—is to be found sitting "in the temple of God," the church (1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. 2 Cor. 6. 16. 1 Tim. 3. 15. Rev. 3. 12). "He exalteth himself above all that is called God,"—above all authority in churches and states (Ps. 82. 6. John 10. 34)—"showing himself that he is God," by assuming his titles, attributes, and powers. Now these characteristics have never been discovered in any man or succession of men but in the papacy. There, however, they all meet.—Wherefore the conclusion is inevitable—the prophecy describes the papacy.—Ed.

A. M. cir. 4060. A. D. cir. 56.

* The Roman empire "withheld" and prevented the erection of the papacy.—So soon as it "was taken out of the way" the papal dominion, as great and as despotic, was erected upon its pedestal.—Ed.

† The truth of this statement may be seen by reference to the "Concluding Remarks" on Galatians and Colossians.—Ed.

‡ That "that Wicked" or "lawless one" may, according to Scripture, represent a succession or be an individual, is unquestionable. The two views are not inconsistent with each other. Among the successive pontiffs of Rome there may yet arise one who shall surpass in pride, presumption, and anti-christian despotism, and be punished with such accumulated and personal judgments as were dealt out in detail to his typical predecessors.—Ed.

§ Not that God will send "delusion" purposing to mislead; but God will send truth to inform and rebuke, and self-interest will reject God's testimony; and wicked men, listening to the voice of their own counsel and the impulses of their own passions, will be deluded into a rejection of God's holy call to reformation, as Pharaoh's heart was hardened by God's righteous demand of his people's freedom. See Exod. 9. 34, 35.—Ed.

‖ From the beginning is an equivalent for eternity. Comp. Prov. 8. 23, with Eph. 1. 4.—Ed.

6 And now ye know what withholdeth,* that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity doth already work:† only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way;

8 And then shall that Wicked‡ be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming:

9 Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion,§ that they should believe a lie;

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

13 But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning‖ chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth:

14 Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

12. That so the person, authority, and doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ may be exalted, in their happy effects upon you, and in your high esteem thereof, and holy conversation, answerable thereto; and that, by virtue of your union with him, ye may arrive at the most glorious state of perfect joy and praise, according to the free favour and grace of God, who has appointed you to it, and of Jesus Christ, who has purchased and promised, and will bestow it upon you.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Happy is the state of believers in God through Christ; and rich and abundant the mercies that flow from both to them. There is great ground of thankfulness when the faith, love, and patience of Christians grow exceedingly, even under great tribulation and cruel persecution. And why should saints fret at their present troubles, when the last judgment will so quickly set everything right! Awfully tremendous, but infinitely glorious, will be that appearance of our Redeemer! Fearful is the work he will then, and through eternity, make on obstinate sinners, especially such as rebelled against the clear light, and refused the precious blessings of the gospel. But delightfully will he glorify himself in the public honours and eternal salvation of his saints. And there is need of prayers, care, and diligence on their side, and of almighty and gracious operations on his, to prepare them for that grand event.—My soul, wait and long for thy coming, thy quickly-coming Redeemer! Rejoice in hopes of thy eternal nearness to, vision, and admiration of him! Rejoice that thy worthiness lies in his righteousness and riches of grace, and that his upholding thy faith effectually preserves it from failing!

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. But, having attempted to comfort you under your present tribulations with the certain prospect of Christ's appearance to judge the world, I must now, in the most solemn manner, entreat and adjure you, by your belief, expectations, and desire of that awful event, and by your hopes of being gathered, along with us and other saints, to his right hand, and of being for ever with the Lord, 2. That ye take heed that none, pretending to a spirit of prophecy, or misconstruing our words, or appealing to spurious writings which pass in our name, or any old tradition, mislead and perplex your mind, or stagger your faith, by insinuations that the coming of Christ to the last judgment is instantly to take place; the failure of which, if believed, might tempt you to disbelieve his coming at all, or even the whole truth of the gospel. 3. Let no pretences whatever decoy you into this pernicious notion; for, by revelations from God, I can assure you that the last judgment shall not happen till there has been a remarkable general apostasy from the faith, worship, and holiness of the gospel; and an Antichristian succession of impious men, Romish Popes, and their agents, has manifestly appeared in the church; countenancing and propagating the vilest corruptions in doctrine, worship, and practice; and, by seduction and persecution, destroying the souls and bodies of multitudes, till they themselves at last sink into everlasting destruction: 4. Who also, by pretended claims to civil and ecclesiastical authority, shall proudly assume a sovereign power over magistrates, ministers, or even angels, good or bad; a power in heaven, earth, and hell, superior to what had ever been ascribed to heathen gods;—and shall set themselves in opposition to Christ in his mediatorial offices and members,—and even pretend a power equal to, or above, the most High,—in disposing of his worship to other objects, dispensing with his laws, nullifying or establishing his ordinances at pleasure; and, sitting in the church, shall assume titles, and exercise authority to confer gifts and graces, pardons and salvations, as if they were God himself. 5, 6. And as ye know I warned you that Christ would not appear to judgment till after this dreadful apostasy, I now inform you, that it is the subsistence of the Roman empire under one political head which at present restrains the complete revelation of that Antichristian empire which I have just mentioned. 7. For that apostasy, which includes an unsearchable depth of error and wickedness, is already, in a secret manner, spreading its malignant influence in the pride, worldly-mindedness, will-worship, and corruption of the doctrine of free justification before God, which take place among Christian professors, and would quickly appear in all its extent, power, pomp, and grandeur, were it not that the present imperial pagan government of Rome will prevent and restrain it, till God, in his appointed time, remove the seat of the emperors from Rome, and even abolish the present form of the empire: 8. And then, through the growing ambition and luxury of church rulers, under the protection and indulgence of the Christian emperors, and the division of the empire into ten kingdoms, all submitting to the delusion, shall that wicked and lawless system of the Papacy appear in its full power and pomp, and continue, till the Lord Jesus, by the pure preaching of the gospel, and the zealous opposition of the Reformers, and by his fearful judgments, when he comes to fill the whole earth with his glory, shall utterly destroy it.—9. The introduction and maintenance of which Papal system will, in imitation, and by the special influence and craft of Satan, be effected, by high pretences of authority from Christ, to work miraculous and wonderful operations for its honour; 10. And, at his instigation, will be carried on, by every subtle and deceitful artifice, managed in the most unrighteous manner, so as to delude those into eternal perdition, who, through the influence of Satan, and their own corrupt lusts, did not heartily receive the truths of the gospel, and Christ therein, as the only means of their salvation:—11. To punish which dislike and rejection of the truth as it is in Jesus, God shall deliver them up to the hardening, blinding, and delusive influence of their own hearts, that, by means thereof, they may consent to the merest forgeries, and the most absurd errors, vile idolatries, and gross superstitions; 12. That thus being left to the foolish and perverse influence of their own hearts, all of them may be condemned and punished with everlasting destruction who rejected Christ and his gospel truths, and took pleasure in perverting his word, corrupting his worship, violating his laws, and persecuting his people. 13. But, in both duty and affection, we must bless and thank God that he hath secured you against such ruinous apostasy; having, in his peculiar distinguishing love, chosen you to complete and eternal salvation, to which he has determined to bring you, through the universal and gradual renovation of your nature and knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, wrought in you by the Holy Ghost, and through a fiducial trust in Christ, and faithful adherence to him, as manifested and offered in the gospel, as God's appointed means of eternal happiness; 14. To which complete and eternal salvation, in consequence of his own electing purpose, he has effectually called you by the gospel which we preached unto you, that, through the attending operation of the Holy Ghost, ye might be fully entitled to, prepared for, and at last introduced into, the eternal enjoyment of that glorious blessedness which our Lord Jesus Christ has purchased and prepared, taken possession of, promised to, and bestows upon, his ransomed people. 15. In consideration therefore of the secret and subtle operations of Antichrist to draw men from the faith, and of what God has done for, and promised to you, we earnestly beseech you to stand fast in the faith, hope, comfort, and holiness, of the gospel,—steadfastly maintaining all those important points of truth and duty in which ye have been instructed by me, and my fellow-ministers of Christ, by word or writing. 16. And, for this purpose, may the Lord Jesus Christ, who has redeemed us by his blood, and purchased eternal glory for us, and will at last confer it upon us;—and God, his and our Father, who has loved us with an everlasting love, and often revived our souls by those everlasting consolations which flow from, and are founded on it,—and given us a solid, scriptural, and well-grounded hope of eternal life, confirmed by his Holy Spirit dwelling and working in our hearts, 17. Fill your souls yet more and more with all joy and peace in believing, and effectually comfort your hearts under all your troubles, fears, and dangers,—and more and more establish your faith in, and adherence to, the truths of the gospel, and enable you constantly to speak and act for God, and for one another's edification.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—It is dangerous to fix the periods which God has concealed. Disappointment of the events expected may tempt us to discredit the whole gospel. That Christ will come is certain; our business is not to inquire when, but to be always ready to meet him. Happy will be the time when all the ransomed millions shall be gathered to, and be for ever with him! By what strange wickedness of men does God punish obstinate and haughty professors, and carry on the designs of his glory! The most fearful lengths in wickedness will seducers go when left to their own hearts' lusts. But the triumphing of the wicked is short. Vengeance from above overtakes them in due time. And when God has accomplished his purpose for the trial of his saints, and the punishment of his enemies, he casts the wicked into the fire of his wrath.—But there is great ground of thanksgiving that nothing can defeat his electing purpose; nothing can defeat his saving call and sanctifying influence; nothing can separate from his love; nothing can rob us of his comforts; nothing can undermine the faith or hope which is founded on his word.—Stand fast, my soul! cleave to his precious truths, and give thyself unto prayer; so shalt thou be comforted and established in every good word and work.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. Now, my dear brethren in Christ, let me entreat your most fervent prayers for me and my fellow-labourers in preaching the gospel, that we may be graciously directed, assisted, and owned of God, in our great and difficult work; and that the gospel of salvation, of which Christ is the Author and principal Subject, may be speedily and successively spread far and wide; and may, as with you, be honourably received, and produce glorious effects in the conversion, edification, and holy conversation of multitudes, wherever it is preached: 2. And that we may be kept or rescued out of the hands of unbelieving Jewish zealots and false brethren, who are so insolently perverse and absurd in their reasonings and prejudices, and maliciously wicked in their principles and practices,—labouring everywhere to defame, vex, and cruelly persecute us;—for many who pretend to religion, and even to Christianity, do not cordially embrace Jesus Christ in his gospel by a true faith, which works by love, and purifies their heart. 3. But let neither the falls of others, nor their violent opposition to you or your way, for the sake of the gospel, discourage you; for God, whose faithful promise ye have heartily embraced, will graciously fulfil whatever he hath spoken, in confirming, establishing, and strengthening you in the doctrine and grace of faith, and in your profession of it, and practice of godliness according to it; and will preserve you from the ruinous influences of sin, Satan, and the world: 4. And as your preservation must be in the way of holy obedience, we firmly and joyfully trust in the Lord Jesus, that, through union to and gracious influences from him, ye shall, as heretofore, be enabled to persevere in an exact observance of all those commandments which we have delivered to you in his name and authority. 5. And in this hope, we earnestly pray that the Holy Ghost would, by his grace, light, and influence, rectify every irregular motion of your hearts, and effectually direct and carry them into a clear and experimental acquaintance with the love of God to you, and into the most lively exercises of love to him, under a sense of his having first loved you; and into a patient continuance in well-doing, under all manner of trouble and persecution for Christ's sake, and a patient waiting for his second coming, to put an end to your trials, and make you a rich and everlasting, but gracious amends. 6. But, as we understand, some of your society, notwithstanding our former admonitions, continue to be idle and busybodies, by virtue of our commission from Christ, we do, in his name and authority, charge you to remove from your holy communion, and avoid all unnecessary familiarity with, every member of your church who thus obstinately perseveres in a course so injurious to public and family peace, dishonourable to the Christian character, and contrary to the rules of the gospel: 7. For ye know how ye ought to persist in following the holy, just, active, and unblamable pattern, which we carefully set before you when among you; 8. Labouring to our utmost in preaching the gospel, and in working at our trades for our necessary subsistence, that we might give to no one the smallest occasion to pretend we were burdensome: 9. Not because we had not a divine right to a proper maintenance, as apostles and ministers of Christ, but that we might prevent every prejudice against us, and propagate the gospel more successfully, and that we might set you a good example, and excite you to industry in your respective callings. 10. For having observed some appearances of an indolent temper among you, we, when with you, strictly commanded, that if any of your members should, through wilful indolence, reduce himself and family to straits, he should not be allowed any maintenance out of the public charity of the church, which ought only to be applied for the relief of such as through sickness, old age, or the like, are not able to work for themselves. 11. And we still insist on this, as we are credibly informed that there are some of you who, in contradiction to our express injunctions, the general rule of Christianity, the express requirements of the moral law, and the order of the creation, and of all regular societies, indulge themselves in idleness, sauntering about, and curiously prying, and officiously thrusting themselves into other people's business, to the disturbance of neighbours, and creating of jealousies, misunderstandings, and quarrels among friends. 12. Such as are of this slothful and pernicious temper, we again solemnly charge, by the authority of God; and earnestly entreat, by the endearing love of Jesus Christ, and as they would avoid his fearful displeasure, and honour their profession of his name; that, with a quiet, meek, and peaceable frame of spirit, they would apply themselves diligently to the work of their stations, that, by the blessing of God, they may honestly provide for themselves and their families. 13. And we beseech such of you as attach yourselves to your proper work, unweariedly to persevere in the diligent discharge of the civil and religious duties of your respective stations, and particularly in liberality to the industrious poor among you. 14. And if, notwithstanding our present and former admonitions, any persist in their idleness, or other disorderly courses, let your church set a brand of infamy on them, turning them from her fellowship; and let every particular member abstain from all unnecessary converse with them, that being put to shame, they may, through the influences of God's Spirit, be made to reflect on, and repent of, loathe, and abhor their sin; 15. But never treat them with austerity or roughness, as if ye aimed at their temporal or spiritual ruin, nor immediately look on them as implacable and incorrigible enemies to Christ and the gospel; but, in all your reproofs, censures, and admonitions, deal tenderly and affectionately with them, as brethren, in hopes that, by your diligent and repeated attempts, they may be reclaimed and restored to their former place in the church. 16. Now may the Lord Jesus Christ, the Author, Purchaser, and Bestower of all manner of peace and prosperity, by all the means of his own appointment, continually and abundantly confer it upon you, in your personal and relative capacities; and may he himself afford all and every one of you his special presence in the way of providence and grace, to protect, guide, assist, comfort, and perfect all that concerns you. 17, 18. Marking therefore my kindest wishes to you in my own hand-writing, as I do in all my letters, as a token of their being genuine, I earnestly pray and hope, that the free love and favour of our Lord Jesus Christ, inclusive of all its manifestations, fruits, and effects, may continually abound to all and every one of you, from this time henceforth and for ever.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—There is need of much fervent prayer for the success of the gospel, and for the preservation and assistance of faithful ministers, that their labours may not be obstructed by the craft or violence of wicked men. And it is an inconceivable mercy to have God's promise and care for securing our endurance and comfort in an evil day. Thrice happy are they whom the Holy Ghost directs into the love of God, and into a patient waiting for Christ's second coming; and whose hearts he establishes in the faith, holiness, and hope of the gospel.—It is necessary, for the honour and safety of the church, that scandalous professors be prudently and carefully censured and withdrawn from; but true kindness, not harshness, must be used to bring them to repentance. The industrious, but helpless poor, should be relieved with cheerfulness, according to their wants; but idle and disorderly persons ought to receive, not liberality, but correction, from both church and state.——It is a great mercy to have exemplary ministers, persevering and lively Christians, but especially to have a gracious Redeemer present, in the church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

This epistle naturally suggests the necessity of caution and careful examination when some new and striking doctrine is propounded; especially when such a doctrine rests upon some isolated portions of Scripture. The prophetic utterance in the Gospel by Matthew, (chap. 24. 30, 34.) conjoined with that of Paul, (1 Thes. 4. 15, 17,) seems, when superficially examined, to indicate the speedy, the almost immediate coming of the Lord to judgment. By superficial examination is meant, an examination of the passages by themselves, without the light to be derived from "comparing spiritual with spiritual," scripture with scripture. Such comparison humbly and prayerfully conducted—as all scriptural examination specially requires—would have enabled the Thessalonians to discover that, while the Lord, as judge, is ever at hand, the precise time of his coming is utterly unknown, (Mat. 24. 36, 42,) and that a long series of events, most precisely foretold, must be realized before the day of his final coming to the judgment of the quick and the dead. The Thessalonians, in thus hasting to a conclusion apparently warranted by some few passages of Scripture which they had not paused to compare with others, exhibited, however, nothing but what is common in the history of all ages of the church. Hence have arisen errors and heresies, upon the one side; and to escape them, the lethean sleep of infallibility, on the other. But God, who always brings good out of evil, light out of darkness, and order out of confusion, has overruled this propensity in the case of the Thessalonians, and drawn from the apostle this second epistle in which their error is corrected, and a salutary warning against precipitate judgments furnished to all future ages of the church.—Ed.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO

T I M O T H Y.

DESCENDED from a Jewish mother and grandmother, Timothy had been very early instructed by them in the knowledge of the Old Testament. By the ministration of Paul at Lystra he was converted to the Christian faith, and remarkably enriched with the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost; Acts xvi. Having circumcised him, that the Jews might take no offence at him on account of his father being a Greek, Paul took him to be his companion, under the character of an evangelist. And having left him at Ephesus to rectify and establish the complete order of the church there, he sent him this and the subsequent epistle, to fix upon his mind the instructions which he had formerly given him, and enable him to communicate the same to others. In them the apostle testifies his affection, warns him of danger, and directs him in his personal and ministerial conduct.—The second was written from Rome, perhaps several years after the first.

[The date of this epistle is supposed to be about A.D. 64, soon after the apostle's imprisonment at Rome. It contains references to the following passages in the Old Testament:—Gen xlv. 10, 11. Deut. xix. 15. & xxxii. 39. Ezra vi. 10. Is. i. 15. & xiv. 12. Jer. xxix. 7. Ezek. xxxiii. 9. Mal. i. 11.—Ed.]

* The "genealogies" of the Jews were intricate and traditionary pedigrees, whereby they sought either to establish their offices as priests or Levites, their rank as descendants of David or the princes of tribes, their titles to properties, as descendants of the original owners; and, in other cases, the origin and preservation of their vain traditions which they asserted they had received, and affected to trace, from Joshua and the elders.—Note. Even so, till this hour, does the popedom assert a "genealogy" ascending to Peter, vainly denominated "prince of the apostles." And, though even tradition fails to establish any uniform consent as to the imaginary line of "apostolic succession," yet upon that unsettled, and, therefore, "endless genealogy," does Rome found her claim to supremacy over all churches, and infallibility in all doctrines.—Ed.

12 And I thank[e] Christ Jesus our Lord, [f] who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry;

13 Who [f] was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but [g] I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly† in unbelief.

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

16 Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17 Now, unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

† These words, if interpreted by themselves, might lead to the conclusion that the apostle's ignorance and unbelief contributed, in some way, to his salvation; —and so they have been interpreted; but taken in comparison with other Scriptures, the grace and good pleasure of God, and not any peculiarity in the state of the sinner, will be found the moving cause of salvation. The verse will be more easily understood, in accordance with the analogy of other Scriptures, if arranged thus: "Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious (but I obtained mercy), because I did it ignorantly in unbelief." See, accordingly, ver. 16, which ascribes the divine mercy entirely to the divine wisdom and purpose.—Ed.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1. Paul, an inspired and immediately commissioned messenger of Jesus Christ, who is the great Lord and Redeemer, the Author, Object, Ground, and Bestower of all our solid hopes of grace here, or eternal glory hereafter,—and of God our Father in him.——2. To his dearly beloved Timothy, of whose conversion, and establishment in the grace and doctrines of faith, God has made him the honoured instrument,—earnestly wishes the most abundant manifestations and effects of God's infinite favour and tender compassion, to support, relieve, and comfort you under all the temptations, labours, difficulties, and dangers of your station, together with all manner of peace with God, your conscience, and the saints, and all manner of prosperity, temporal or spiritual, from God the Fountain of blessings, and from Jesus Christ the Purchaser and Dispenser thereof. 3, 4. I earnestly desired you to tarry some time at Ephesus after I departed thence into Macedonia, that you might, in the most solemn and authoritative manner, charge the judaizing Christians there to beware of corrupting the gospel of Christ, which I preach, with anything different or contrary; and that they never regard or propagate any foolish and ill-grounded traditions, or any frivolous genealogies of descent from Abraham or any other patriarch, which leads to useless, intricate, and endless controversies, and have no tendency to promote the conversion of sinners to God, their establishment in the doctrines of faith, or their diligent perseverance in walking with God.——5. Now the end of that charge, which I ordered you to enforce, as well as of the whole law of God, in opposition to fabulous, fruitless, and perplexing disputes, is, to promote a spirit of love to God, to Christ, and to one another, as springing from a sanctified heart, and a faithful, pure, and quiet conscience, purged from dead works by the blood of Christ, and from an inward principle of sincere faith, without the least hypocrisy; 6. From which grand scope and important ingredients of practical religion some having wandered, have turned aside into a course of vain talking of things altogether unprofitable, and serving only to stir up animosities, strifes, and doubtful disputations; 7. Affecting to set up for doctors and interpreters of the law, and to impose it upon the Gentiles, while, in reality, they neither understand the true scope and design of it, nor what they say in their confident pretensions to explain it: 8. But we, who through the knowledge of the gospel are enlightened in the principal design and tendency of the whole Jewish dispensation, are fully convinced that the law is a good appointment of God for answering good purposes, if it be properly used as a mean of bringing us to Christ; and that even the ceremonial law is of great use, if we consider it as a typical representation of Christ and the gospel church, and now fulfilled and abolished; and that the law in its own nature is holy, just, and good; and is of admirable use to convince us of our sin and misery, and to make us flee to Jesus Christ; and, as a rule of obedience, to direct us how to depend on him, and gratefully improve the benefits which we receive from him! 9—11. Fully satisfied that the moral law, though still continuing in force as the law of Christ's kingdom, is not designed to condemn a true believer, who is made the righteousness of God in him, and who, from a principle of faith, has an impartial respect to all his commandments, but stands in force for the condemnation of all impenitent, unbelieving, and obstinate transgressors; particularly those who have no fear of God in their hearts, no desire after him, and no care to be subject to his authority;—and for those who wilfully rebel against his laws, and worship false gods;—those who, being destitute of true holiness, contemn God and religion;—those who murder their near relations or others, or who indulge themselves in fornication, adultery, sodomy, or other unnatural lusts;—those who steal men or women, that they may either use or sell them as slaves;—those who addict themselves to lying in jest, excuse, malice, or to procure gain;—those who violate their promises, vows, or oaths, or swear falsely in courts of judicature;—and, in fine, those who indulge themselves in any form of wickedness, contrary to the pure doctrines of revelation, and to the holy nature, design, and obligation of the gospel of our salvation through Christ, which so illustriously displays the glorious perfections, counsels, and operations of the infinitely happy, ever blessed, and self-sufficient God, who communicates to creatures whatever happiness they enjoy;—the preaching of which gospel was committed to me as a precious trust, to be faithfully preserved and dispensed wherever I come. 12. And while I think of the high honour of this important trust, I cannot but, from the very bottom of my soul, bless and praise our infinitely gracious Saviour and Lord Jesus Christ, who has qualified, authorized, and strengthened me as an apostle, faithfully to minister the gospel of his grace; 13. Even me, who, before my heart was graciously and effectually reached and converted, had been a furious blasphemer of his divine Person and doctrine, an outrageous persecutor of his members, a most injurious reviler of his name, people, and interests: but my transcendent wickedness, proceeding from ignorant and blind zeal, not from any desperate and malicious opposition to the Holy Ghost's clear convictions of his Messiahship, to the everlasting astonishment of angels and men, and especially my own, I, after all, freely received forgiving and converting mercy, and was graciously put into the apostleship. 14. Yea, the free favour of the infinitely compassionate Lord Jesus to me-ward superabounded all expectation, estimation, or conception, in working an effectual faith in my unbelieving heart, and a most cordial and affectionate love to him, his people, and cause, to which I had formerly been so inveterate an enemy; and in the conversion of multitudes to himself by my ministrations. 15. Thus my own experience, as well as the whole tenor of the gospel revelation, bears witness, for the encouragement of sinful men, that its grand or summary article may be depended on as infallibly true and faithful, and every way worthy to be universally believed and affectionately embraced by all men, viz., That the great end of Christ's assuming human nature, and coming into the world, under the character of a Saviour, to fulfil the law, and suffer and die for them; and of his being offered to them in the gospel; was and is that he might deliver them, Gentiles as well as Jews, from sin and wrath, and bring them to that eternal salvation which is in him;—a transcendent and amazing instance of which has appeared in me, who exceeded all other sinners, however notorious, in my malignant blasphemy of Christ, and persecution of his members. 16. And for encouraging the most enormous transgressors to believe in him, it must be remarked, that this astonishing instance of free, sovereign, and abounding grace towards me, was designed, by the infinite wisdom and goodness of God, not merely for the salvation of my soul, but that in me first of all, and as the very chief of sinners, Jesus Christ might set forth a distinguished example to what amazing length his patience and mercy can extend,—as an encouragement to every sinner who shall ever, by his grace, be called to trust in him alone for pardon and eternal life. 17. Let therefore that infinitely gracious Lord Jesus, who is the Sovereign of all things, and head over all things to his church,—everlasting, incorruptible, and purely spiritual,—and who, together with his Father and blessed Spirit, is the infinitely and only wise God, and Giver of all wisdom to creatures, be henceforth and for ever magnified and adored in the loftiest strains.—18. The above charge I have committed to your special care, that, according to some prophetic intimations concerning you before you entered on the ministry, you may be more excited to improve your superior gifts and miraculous powers, in acting the part of a diligent, courageous, and faithful soldier of Jesus Christ; in fighting under him against sin, Satan, and the world, and valiantly standing up for the truth against all opposition; 19. Holding fast the doctrines of the gospel in a firm faith and constant profession thereof, and holding it forth to others in your ministry, and studying to be conscientiously upright in preaching it, and living answerably to it: which some neglecting and rejecting, have, to their inexpressible danger, loss, and damage, entirely renounced its doctrines, and their profession of it, and abandoned themselves to error and immorality; 20. Of which apostates I mention two infamous ringleaders, that you, and all other Christians, may beware of them, and bear testimony against them; namely, Hymeneus and Alexander, whose notorious subversion of the faith and holiness of the gospel, and dangerous errors and immoralities, laid me under the disagreeable necessity of apostolically casting them out of the visible church, and delivering them up to Satan, as his subjects; that by means of such awful discipline, they might be brought to a conviction and repentance of their wickedness, at least deterred from persisting in their blasphemous defamations of the name, doctrines, and ways of the Lord.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Solemn and important, honourable and delightful, is that trust which God has committed to gospel ministers. But they have need of abundant grace and mercy from Christ and his Father, to fit them for, and assist them in their work, and support them under the trials they must undergo on account of it. For in manifold shapes of vain jangling, legal prattling, horrid blasphemy, and cruel persecution, Satan always labours to oppose the gospel, and them who faithfully preach it. And careless and erroneous teachers are great plagues to churches, and murderers of souls. It is absurd to inculcate or expect obedience to God's law, without the heart be first renewed by the Spirit of God, our consciences sprinkled with Jesus' blood, and an abiding principle of true faith be implanted within us. And it is the highest folly for unbelievers to seek happiness by that law which cannot but condemn them for their wickedness. Thrice happy are they who are delivered from it as a broken covenant, and are only under it in Christ as a binding rule of duty. Infinite is the excellency, and powerful the virtue of the glorious gospel. From an infinitely gracious God it springs, and to his high honour and praise it tends. Its matter is Christ, and all that is in or done by him. It suits, it extends to, and ought to be earnestly received by every hearer. The most guilty and obstinate cannot withstand its almighty force. And happy is it when ministers can recommend it from their own remarkable experience of its pardoning, regenerating, sanctifying, comforting, and self-abasing influence! But, alas! infinite is their danger who persevere in opposing it, or apostatize from their wonted profession of it.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. As some judaizing Christians, through prejudice against the Gentiles, reject the authority of Heathen magistrates, I therefore, as the apostle of the Gentiles, insist on it, as a matter of high importance, that Christians, in all their prayers, public, private, or secret, deprecate evils inflicted or feared; plead for every necessary mercy; and give thanks for favours received or promised —through Christ; with respect to all sorts or ranks of men; Jews or Gentiles, high or low; 2. Particularly for emperors, kings, or other magistrates, though heathens; that their persons and ministrations may be blessed, that they may be enabled to rule in the fear of God: that, under their protection, and encouraged by their example and influence, we may safely and peaceably exercise ourselves in public, private, and secret acts of piety towards God, and of honourable honesty and virtue towards every man. 3. For thus to pray, and live in a manner becoming Christians, is agreeable to the good and holy nature and will of God; and through Christ well pleasing in his sight, who has manifested himself to us sinful men under the endearing character of a Saviour: 4. Who, for the more illustrious display of the freeness, sovereignty, variety, and abundant riches of his grace under the gospel dispensation, intends effectually to save men, of all sorts and ranks, greater or lesser sinners; and has for this purpose appointed that the gospel of salvation be preached to every creature under heaven. 5. And it is the more proper that prayers and thanksgivings be made for all sorts of men through Christ, in whom all nations shall be blessed, since God now manifests himself equally the one only God of both Jews and Gentiles, and Jesus Christ, God-man, is set forth as the only Mediator, able, willing, and appointed to make up the breach between God and sinful men;—6. Who having an infinite dignity in his person, and being lord of his own life, offered up himself, soul and body, an atoning sacrifice and price of redemption to the offended justice of God, in the room of men of all sorts and ranks, to deliver them from the bondage of sin, Satan, the law, and death; that their salvation might be published to them, especially under the gospel; 7. For the publishing of which, I solemnly avow myself a faithful and sincere teacher, chiefly of the Gentiles, manifesting to them the infallible truths and faithful promises of God for their salvation. 8. And therefore, in the name of my glorious Master, the Saviour of mankind, I insist that ministers and Christians, without regard to any ceremonial sanctity of places, pray for all sorts of persons, as above directed, with fervour, purity, and elevation of heart to God, without any wrathfulness of temper against either Jews or Gentiles, and without doubting of, or disputing against, his fulfilment of his promises to all them that believe.—9. I moreover insist upon it, that women at all times, and especially in your religious assemblies, appear in a garb suitable to the modesty of their sex, and with an air of reverence to God and sacred things; and not after the manner of lewd women, with curiously plaited hair, or in showy deckings of embroidered, rich, or gaudy apparel, which mark the vanity and pride of their own heart, and tempt the beholders to frothiness or unchastity. 10. But let them, as women who profess godliness, and a superlative regard to the things of another world, labour to adorn themselves with such graces, tempers, and practices, as fulfil God's law, honour his name, and prove useful to others. 11, 12. And let no woman dare to preach in public assemblies, or in any case usurp authority over her husband or his sex, but learn, according to the dictates of nature and the law of God, to be duly submissive and obedient: 13. For the woman being at first formed after and out of the man, plainly intimated that she was made for him, not he for her; and that she ought to depend on and be subject to him, not he to her. 14. And being first seduced by the devil, that old serpent, in paradise, and made the primary instrument in the ruin of mankind, is a further reason for her humility and subjection. 15. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the particular threatenings issued forth against them immediately after the fall, women are generally preserved in the agonies of childbirth; and shall be saved as well as the man, yet generally in the endurance of this superior effect of the curse: yea, through the incarnation of Jesus Christ, the promised seed, all of them shall be saved, with an everlasting salvation, who exercise themselves in true faith in God through Christ, and in love to him, his people and cause, and in a holy, chaste, sober, meek, and temperate behaviour.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Nothing can more testify our love to men than much fervent prayer for them. And none ought to have a more certain share

CHAPTER III.

(1) Of bishops and deacons, their wives and families: 1—13. (2) The object of the apostle in writing: 14—16.

A. M. cir. 4069.
A. D. cir. 65.

THIS is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop,[a] he desireth a good work.

2 A bishop then must be blameless,[†] the husband of one wife,[‡] vigilant, sober,[§] of good behaviour,[‖] given to hospitality, apt to teach;

3 Not given to wine,[*] no striker,[†] not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous;

4 One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity;

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

6 Not a novice, lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach, and the snare of the devil.

8 Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 [a] Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well.

13 For they that have [•] used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly:

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in [b] the house of God, which is the church [c] of the living God,[†] the pillar and [†] ground of the truth.

[†] Were not translations in favour of the present punctuation, the meaning would seem more plain, and the structure of ver. 15 and 16 more natural, by adopting the following change, viz., "But if I tarry long, (I write) that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God. in our prayers than the rulers in church and state. It is greatly advantageous for the success and honour of the gospel when magistrates rule well, and are a terror to evil-doers, and a praise to them that do well. The extent of God's grace, and of Christ's mediation, to all sorts and ranks of men, should excite us cheerfully and powerfully to pray for them. And infinite is the mercy, that in God's grace and Jesus' merit there is room for us all. The gospel and ordinances of God are now confined to no place in the world; but faithful ministers may preach it to every creature; and men may everywhere have full access to God in his worship. But let us always remember the holiness and reverence with which we ought to approach him.—Since sin entered by a woman, what reason have women to be remarkably holy and humble, and to avoid all ostentation of dress, which is but a badge and memorial of sin! And there is need of faith and love, and a holy conversation, in order to their safe and sanctified endurance in childbirth.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. And with respect to offices in the Christian church, it is certain that he, who, having suitable qualifications, is inclined, from a regard to the glory of God and the edification of souls, to enter upon the office of a pastor or overseer in it, aims at a very honourable, important, and useful, though laborious office; 2. It is nevertheless necessary that you, and all others concerned in their admission, take care that their qualifications be truly proper and edifying. Every pastor or ruler in the Christian church ought to be of an unexceptionable moral character; must never be connected with more than one wife at once; must be very circumspect and diligent in his work; watchful against Satan and all his instruments, and over his own spirit, words, and actions, and for the souls of those committed to his charge. He ought to be very moderate in his appetites, passions, and pleasures;—to be affable, courteous, prudent, and engaging in his behaviour; to be ready, according to his ability, to relieve the necessities of the poor, and entertain godly ministers, or others properly recommended;—and should be furnished with a good stock of Christian knowledge and experience, that he may be capable of expressing his sentiments with freedom, clearness, and propriety, for the instruction of others, and for supporting and defending the truths of the gospel on all suitable occasions. 3. He must by no means be given to long or frequent drinking, nor be of a furious and quarrelsome temper; nor so fond of earthly riches, as to be ready to procure them by unworthy means; but should be of a meek, calm, peaceable, and forbearing spirit; not abusive, noisy, and clamorous, in talking or disputing; nor covetous of what belongs to his neighbour; nor inordinately attached to the things of this world. 4. And if he have a family, he must be one who maintains a prudent authority over his children and servants, obliging them to submit to his lawful commands respecting either religion towards God, or decent behaviour towards men. 5. For if a man do not govern his own family right, it cannot be expected that he has prudence or resolution enough to be a ruler in the more high and difficult affairs of the church of God, where everything must be conducted with decency and order. 6. Nor ought he to be a raw upstart; nor, in ordinary cases, one newly converted to the faith of Christ; lest, being lifted up with a high conceit of his own abilities, early honour, or popular applause, he should, through the instigation of Satan, fall by pride into eternal ruin, as the devil did. 7. Moreover, he ought to have a clear reputation among the unbelieving world around, whether Jews or Gentiles, who earnestly watch for the halting of church officers, lest the stain of his character should bring a reproach upon the name, doctrine, and ways of the Lord, and so the devil seize an advantage against him, to the hurt of his own soul, the marring of his usefulness, the discredit of religion, the triumph of its adversaries, the grief of the godly, and the stumbling of young converts.——8. The deacons also, whose office it is to manage the public funds of the church, ought to be men of a grave, decent, and venerable behaviour, and of good report; not given to speak one thing while they mean another, nor to talk contrarily at different times to serve a turn;—not indulgers of themselves in the too free use of intoxicating liquors, which would blemish their character, and render them unfit for their work;—not of an avaricious temper, that might tempt them to withhold from the poor, or apply it to their own use. 9. And as to their religious character, they ought to be steadfast adherents to the pure, unmixed, but mysterious and incomprehensible, truths of the gospel, with all the sincerity of a heart purified by faith, and purged from an evil conscience by the blood of Christ. 10. And it is proper that their qualifications, moral and religious, be well tried and manifest before they be admitted to their office. 11. And if they are in a married state, their wives, for the credit of religion and of their husbands, ought to be of a grave, chaste, and decent behaviour, free from all lightness of temper, words, dress, or deportment;—not slanderers, nor injurious tale-bearers, but watchful over their tongues and tempers; moderate in eating and drinking, and frugal in their management;—faithful to God, to their husbands, and every trust committed to them. 12. The deacons also, as well as the pastors, must have but one wife at a time, and should avoid all unlawful divorces; and, for an example to others, should rule their own children and servants in a truly Christian manner. 13. And to these things they ought carefully to attend, as their faithful and prudent execution of their office, for a considerable time, will render them highly respected in the church, and increase their gifts and graces answerably to their station; and will imbolden them to an open, free, and courageous profession of the doctrines of Christ, and of their faith in him, by which they have derived grace from him, to render them faithful in fulfilling their trust for his glory.—14. These things I write for the present direction of you or others, hoping, ere long, to see you at Ephesus, or somewhere else, and give you further instructions. 15. But if our interview should be deferred beyond my expectation, this letter will serve to direct your behaviour in that religious society which the only living and true God has formed and established, for his own spiritual residence and honour, of credible professors of his truths, animated by his Spirit; and which holds forth and maintains the doctrines of the glorious gospel upon which it is founded, and of which Jesus Christ is the sum and substance. 16. For, without all controversy, that doctrine which furnishes us for, and animates us to, the strictest piety towards God and love to our neighbour, is a great, glorious, and incomprehensible mystery; viz., that the eternal Son of God, one in nature, and equal in glory, to his Father and blessed Spirit, was manifested in his incarnation and debasement in this world;—and having satisfied God's law and justice by his obedience, sufferings, and death, was acquitted and accepted of God as the Surety and righteous Head of his church; and being by the Holy Ghost raised from the dead for our justification, was honourably attested in the miraculous confirmation and success of the gospel;—and as angels had all along admired and ministered to him, they did, in his resurrection and ascension, and will at his second coming attend him:—and being raised from the dead, and ascended to heaven, he was, is, and will be, preached to both Jews and Gentiles,—and by faith received by multitudes of them, particularly the latter, as their only and all-sufficient Saviour;—yea, as he was gloriously received up to his Father's right hand to receive all glory and power, so he has been and shall be gloriously received, owned, and professed, by multitudes under the glorious dispensation of his Spirit; and shall, after his judging the world, be solemnly introduced, with all his mystical body, into all the inexpressible glories and felicities of the eternal state.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Highly should we esteem the Christian church, which, animated by his Spirit, is the peculiar dwelling of the Most High. Yea, God, in infinite mercy, has provided for her officers to manage both her spiritual and temporal concerns. Earnestly then should such labour for the important qualifications of solid experience, knowledge, blameless character, faithfulness, gravity, generosity, and affability; and be the most exemplary in the regular government of their passions, appetites, tongues, and families. And the more faithful, prudent, and diligent they are in discharging the duties of their office, they will be the more honoured in the church, and bold in their holy profession.—While the church holds forth and maintains the truth, upon what a glorious mystery of godliness is she herself founded! Unfathomable is the depth, importance, and glory of it, as it shines forth in God manifested in the flesh, to make atonement for sin, and mediate between God and men;—raised from the dead, received up into glory, and attested by the Holy Ghost, in the justification of his person and cause, and of believers in him;—beheld, witnessed, ministered to, and adored by angels;—preached far and wide to, and believed on, by multitudes of Jews and Gentiles;—exalted to his Father's right hand, and to be head over all things to the church; and at last, after the final conquest of his enemies, entering heaven with all his angels and ransomed saints!

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. And to stir you and others up to a steadfast adherence to this mystery of godliness, and to the rules which Christ issues forth for the government of his church, know that the Spirit of God has revealed to me, as well as to the ancient prophets, that in some future period of the Christian dispensation many professors will apostatize from the doctrines of Christ, and give heed to such as shall seduce them into idolatrous principles and practices, viz. the worshipping of angels and saints as a kind of subordinate gods or mediators; 2. And who, under hypocritical pretences of zeal for religion, will utter falsehoods to delude their followers, and establish their own authority; and will refuse nothing, however wicked or absurd, to carry on their corrupt designs; their consciences being as unaffected with the guilt or dreadful consequences of sin, as flesh seared with a hot iron is incapable of feeling; 3. And will forbid clergymen or others to marry, thus exposing them to temptations to unchastity; and will prohibit the use of those wholesome meats which God at first created for the sustenance of mankind, and which now, under the gospel dispensation, he allows all Christians their full freedom to use; 4. For everything, as God made it, is answerable to the purposes for which he created it; and nothing that is proper for food ought to be forbidden or scrupled, providing it be received with religious acknowledgments of God as the author and giver of it: 5. For it is sanctified to our lawful use of it by the gospel of God, which has removed all ceremonial uncleanness from it, and by his commanding a blessing on it, in answer to our prayers before and after our meals. 6. If you, my dear son in the faith, warn the Christian brethren of this great apostasy, and other things which I have mentioned to you, you will act the part of a useful, wise, and faithful servant of Jesus Christ, ordering your ministrations suitably to the circumstances and dangers of the times, and as one who has thoroughly digested and experienced the pure doctrines of faith in Christ. 7. But as for the fabulous traditions and useless genealogies, either of Jews or Heathens, have nothing to do with them; but exercise yourself with the utmost labour, diligence, and vigour, in promoting and exemplifying the doctrines and duties of true piety and obedience to God through Jesus Christ: 8. For no labour, in the mere external acts of religion, is either acceptable to God, or useful to the souls of men; but evangelical, vital, and practical godliness in heart and life, is every way profitable, having manifold blessings annexed to it, by the promise of God, in this life and that which is to come. 9. And these promises of divine favours, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, are infallible in their accomplishment, and worthy of our highest regard, esteem, and entertainment, as they afford a rich encouragement to serve the Lord, and cleave to him, amidst all difficulties, oppositions, and dangers; 10. Yea, in virtue of our assured trust in these promises of God,—who has all life in himself, and is the Bestower and Preserver of all created life; and who is the providential Deliverer of all men, and the spiritual and eternal Saviour of true believers,—we patiently and cheerfully undergo the greatest fatigues and most abusive revilings in our holy ministrations, to advance his glory, interest, and kingdom, and gain souls to him. 11. These things therefore fully explain, and, by the authority of Christ, inculcate upon the consciences of your hearers. 12. Endeavour also, by his gracious assistance, to acquit yourself therein with such diligence, gravity, good judgment, prudence, and fidelity, and such evidence of your faith, and experience of what you preach to others, that none may have occasion to slight and contemn your person or admonitions, your office, or administrations of it, on account of your youth. And to prevent this, study to be always an amiable and shining example to other believers, in the excellency of your doctrine and edifying discourse;—in the regularity of your religious and moral behaviour;—in the sincerity and ardour of your love to God, to Christ, and to immortal souls;—in your spiritual-mindedness, fervent zeal for God, and abounding in the fruits of the Spirit;—in a steady and lively exercise and profession of your faith, and maintenance of the doctrines thereof; and in all chastity and purity of heart. 13. And, till I have an opportunity of seeing and further directing you, addict yourself to, and spend much of your time in, reading and praying over the Holy Scriptures, for the improvement of your own soul in gifts, graces, and comforts, that you may be the better qualified to instruct, exhort, and comfort others, for their conversion, or their establishment and growth in grace. 14. Yea, as God has richly furnished you with extraordinary gifts for his service, according to the predictions of the Spirit of God concerning you, and in consequence of your solemn ordination to your office by a meeting of church rulers, constituted in the name of Christ his Son, take care that you stir them up, and exercise and improve them to the best advantage. 15. Let the things which I have just now mentioned, and other important articles of divine revelation, be the constant subject of your most earnest meditation; let your attention to, ministration of, and prayer for, a blessing upon them be the entire and delightful business of your life, that your proficiency in wisdom, gifts, and grace, and the experience of God's love, may in all things appear evident to all about you. 16. And if you wish your ministerial labours to succeed, see that your heart be right with God, in its principles, frame, temper, motives, and ends; that your gifts be duly cultivated, and the whole of your behaviour towards himself, or your fellow-creatures, be well-pleasing in his sight through Christ; and then take heed what doctrine ye preach; that it be sound, clear, important, and seasonable; evangelical and practical; and that it be well explained, confirmed, defended, and applied. And in a constant, persevering, and increasing study of this kind, you will, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, be instrumental in promoting the spiritual and eternal salvation of yourself, and others who attend your ministry.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Dreadful plagues to the Christian church are apostasy and error, especially those of the Romish Antichrist! and yet what a verification are they of the divinity of the Scriptures in fulfilling their predictions! Seducers in a most fearful manner turn things upside down, pretending sin to be duty, and what is lawful to be sinful. But no uncertain traditions must be regarded in religion, and no bodily service must be rested in.—It is only lively practical religion that entails present or future blessings on men by the promise of God. And the more we labour for the spiritual edification of others, the more shall we be edified and fitted for our work.—With determined courage may ministers, or even Christians, both labour and suffer, if they trust firmly in God himself. And great exemplariness in faith, in love, in all holy conversation—much study of divine truth—much self-excitement—and heedfulness of their own state, temper, practice, and doctrine—is necessary to render ministers accepted of God in their work, or useful to souls. But it is infinitely absurd and criminal for ministers to indulge idleness, or apply themselves to worldly business, when their own and other men's eternal salvation so much depends upon their fidelity and diligence in their awful employment.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1, 2. And as the most decent behaviour is necessary to protect you, who are so young, from contempt, take care that you reprove aged professors, and especially church rulers, when they fall into any sinful infirmity, with the utmost humility and meekness, treating them with all honour and respect; but such as are young rebuke in a more free, yet meek, affable, affectionate, and evidently modest and pure manner. 3. Take care that Christian widows, who are poor, and have no relations able and willing to support them, be honourably provided for by the church. 4. But if any religious widows have children or grandchildren who are able to supply their necessities, let those children from a conscientious regard to God, and gratitude to their mothers for their labour, care, and kindness about them when young, exert themselves to provide for them; for such behaviour is in itself equitable, worthy, honourable, and well-pleasing to God. 5. Now a widow, who is a proper and encouraging object of the church's charity, is one who, being destitute of relations to relieve her, trusts her temporal and eternal concerns to the care of God, and in consequence thereof, is addicted to daily and fervent prayer for his gracious fulfilment of his promises. 6. But the widow who gives up herself to a jovial, loose, and voluptuous manner of life under the power of carnal inclinations, appears dead in trespasses and sins, while she enjoys a natural life, and renders herself unworthy of the care of either her friends or the church. 7. These things are of such importance to the edification of professors, and to the reputation, beauty, and order of churches, that you ought solemnly to declare and enforce them in your public and private ministrations; that such persons may walk orderly, and occasion no reproach to the church for misapplying her charity. 8. And if any professor unnaturally neglect, or refuse to do what he can for the support of his near relations, and chiefly his aged parents, wife, and children, he ought to be held as a practical renouncer of the gospel of Christ, and worse than a mere heathen. 9. Let no widow be admitted as an assistant to the deacons, in helping and administering to the poor and sick, unless she be at least sixty years of age, and have lived in a chaste and faithful manner with her own husband. 10. Nor, indeed, unless she be well known to have faithfully and prudently discharged the duties of the married state, in the careful and religious education of her own children, and in hospitable and kind entertainment of strangers, particularly ministers and saints,—and in tender compassion to the afflicted;—and, in fine, unless she has laboured with care and diligence to perform every good office toward God or men, as opportunity offered. 11. But let no younger widows be admitted; for they will perhaps grow voluptuous and lascivious, contrary to their profession of Christ, and consult their own ease and pleasure rather than his glory; and at last, to get rid of their restraints and labours, marry into a heathen family; 12. And thus expose themselves to shame and condemnation in the view of the world, to the censures of the church, and even to the righteous judgments of God here and hereafter, because of their rejection of their former Christian profession of faith in Christ, and desertion of the trust committed to them. 13. And, moreover, young widows addicted to pleasure, soon contract a habit of idleness, and trifle away their time, in gadding abroad for their amusement; nay, they even grow impertinent, flirting, loose, and foolish talkers, officious pryers and intruders into other people's affairs, and thus invent and carry about reports hurtful to the reputation and peace of their neighbours. 14. Instead therefore of admitting younger widows into the public service of the church, let them be allowed to marry in the Lord, if a proper opportunity offer itself; and in that station carefully educate the children which the Lord may give them, and manage their household and relative affairs with such faithfulness, prudence, diligence, sobriety, and modesty, as shall oblige their enemies to forbear reproaching them, or the ways of Christ on their account. 15. I speak the more particularly and earnestly on this point, as some young widows have, by the instigation of Satan, already turned aside from their Christian profession, and followed the sinful courses which I have just mentioned. 16. And I again insist, that, if any have mothers or grandmothers, or other near relations in widowhood, if capable, they shall supply their necessities, that the church stock, being eased of that burden, may be the more sufficient for the relief of such as have no friends able or willing to assist them: 17. It is very necessary that church rulers be duly provided for and honoured; let therefore all of them, who conduct themselves in a prudent and faithful manner, be reckoned worthy of high esteem and necessary maintenance; especially such of them as addict themselves to the painful and laborious work of faithfully preaching the gospel

18. For the ancient law, which allowed the oxen, while treading out the corn, to eat of it for their necessary refreshment, plainly hinted that they, who employ their time and talents in instructing and governing other church members, should, in return, partake of a liberal maintenance from such as receive spiritual benefit by them; and Jesus Christ has expressly declared, that his labouring servants are worthy of a proper subsistence. 19. And as the support of their character is necessary to their usefulness, another branch of honour due to them is, that no accusation be received against them but before sundry witnesses, and where two or three credible persons are ready to confirm the truth of it. 20. But if they, or any others, be found guilty of public and enormous crimes, they must, without respect of persons, be publicly rebuked in presence of the whole church, that others, as well as themselves, may be deterred from the commission of the like wickedness. 21. And as an impartial regard to the censuring of offenders, and to other things which I have mentioned, is of great importance to the church, and very irksome to the administrators, I solemnly charge you, as in the presence of the all-seeing and heart-searching God; and of Jesus Christ, the only Head of his church, who will shortly judge the quick and the dead; and of those holy angels whom he has chosen to everlasting happiness; and as you will answer at his tribunal at the last day; to take heed that you maintain and practise these directions without any partial respect to, or prejudice against any man whatsoever. 22. But in order that you may have as little of the disagreeable work of censuring church-officers as possible, be always extremely cautious, and careful and deliberate, in your inquiries into their character before they are admitted to their office: beware, lest, by any precipitant and unadvised steps, you render yourself a partaker in the guilt and mischievous influence of unsound and ungodly ministers. 24. For as some men's erroneous principles and practices are so notoriously sinful, as renders it a plain duty to refuse them admission to any office in the church, so there are others who can artfully conceal their sentiments and wickedness till after they have obtained a call or admission. 25. In like manner, the religious sentiments, gifts, graces, and moral temper and behaviour of some men, are so remarkably good and manifest as to render their admission perfectly clear,—while it will require much prudent, tender, and close converse with others, of a bashful and recluse temper, to satisfy a conscientious inquirer whether they be fit or not.

Reflections upon Chap. V.—Aged persons, and such as are in office in the church, should be treated with great veneration even when overtaken in a fault. And with kind concern should the very youngest be cautioned and reproved for their sins of infirmity. Friends and church rulers should take great care of poor widows. And it is necessary for the credit of religion, that all widows behave in a grave, prudent, orderly, and holy manner. Alas, that any of them, unaffected with their husbands' departure into eternity, should ever wax wanton against Christ and his law!—It is not merely in acts of devotion, but in all our business, and particularly in managing our families, that we should serve God.—Church governors, particularly preaching elders, have a divine right, from both Old and New Testaments, to high respect, and a liberal maintenance, from their people, according to their ability. And what awful obligations to faithfulness in their work lie on ministers! They are Christ's deputies, and to him they must give an account. With great prudence, faithfulness, tenderness, courage, and impartiality, must they therefore proceed in rebuking the scandalous, or ordaining other church-officers. And the damnation or salvation of souls is deeply connected therewith. An ignorant, careless, and scandalous ministry is a great plague and reproach to a church. And it is hard for the most faithful to keep themselves from being partakers in other men's sins. But great is the mercy that Jesus', their Master's, blood cleanseth from all sin. Yea, he kindly allows them a moderate use of creature refreshments as their labours and bodily infirmities require.

Chap. VI.—Ver. 1. As some judaizing teachers, to the discredit of religion, and the violation of natural rights, encourage slaves or other servants, when converted, to renounce their servitude, I earnestly admonish you, on all proper occasions, to instruct and urge servants, however enslaved, to honour, reverence, and obey their heathen masters; that so the honour of God, and credit of the gospel, may not be reproachfully stained, as if it discharged men from their just obligations, and the natural or civil duties of their station. 2. And if any Christian servants are so happy as to have masters of their own religion, let them prize it as a great privilege, and honour and obey them the more cheerfully, affectionately, and diligently, because they are faithful believers, beloved of God, and partakers of all the blessings of redemption through the blood of his Son. 3. If any man teach what is contrary to these directions, and does not, in heart, speech, and behaviour, embrace and practise the pure and salutary doctrines of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, concerning his person and offices, which is formed, designed, and blessed for promoting practical religion in all the branches of piety towards God, and relative duties towards men, from regard to his authority; 4, 5 Notwithstanding all his pretences, profession, or station in the church, he is but a haughty, self-conceited creature, puffed up by the vanity of his own mind, who knows nothing aright of the truth of the gospel, or of his own duty to God or to men; but, like a brain-sick person, is madly fond of impertinent, useless, and entangling questions, and empty disputes about words rather than matter; and which are fit for nothing but to kindle and inflame invidious thoughts and passions, angry debates, blasphemous and reproachful railings, injurious and ill-grounded jealousies, preposterously curious, vain, and froward disputings,—proper only for persons of erroneous minds and vicious inclinations, who are utter strangers to Christ and the gospel, and to the reality of grace in their hearts, and reckon religion only so far valuable as it is subservient to their carnal views. Have nothing to do with such persons; abhor their principles and practices; and if they continue obstinate therein, let them be excluded from the church.—6. But whatever such carnal men think,—true practical godliness, in which all suitable graces are exercised, in worshipping and serving God through Jesus Christ, under the influence of his Spirit, according to the gospel, attended with a holy and gracious contentment and satisfaction in the disposals of Providence towards us in this life, is the most pleasant, satisfying, and profitable course that can be conceived, and incomparably preferable to an affluence of temporal enjoyments, which at best are empty, precarious, and perishing; 7. For as we brought none of these earthly enjoyments with us into this world in our birth, but hold them by the mere bounty and sovereign disposal of God, so we must quickly leave them all behind us at death. 8. If then the kind providence of God supply us in this world with necessary food, raiment, and dwellings, we ought to be fully contented with our lot, and thankful for what we enjoy, as very good, nay, best for us. 9. But they, whose hearts are set upon riches, and resolve to have them at any rate, as if they were their chief good, plunge themselves into manifold temptations to dishonesty and other wickedness, and into the deep defilement of many foolish and hurtful lusts and passions, which will effectually swallow them up in temporal and eternal destruction: 10. For an inordinate esteem of and affection for wealth, is the pregnant source of all sinful, injurious, and miserable principles and practices, in which, while some have indulged themselves, they have apostatized from their Christian profession and practice; and, instead of finding the satisfaction they expected, have plunged themselves into the most painful agonies of mind, and distress of body.—11. But do you, Timothy, whom God hath so richly endowed with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and who have solemnly devoted yourself to his service, abhor and flee from these corrupt principles, inclinations, and practices, and, in the strength of grace, earnestly endeavour after the richest attainments of the knowledge and exercise of righteousness in all your behaviour towards men,—and of strict and evangelical piety in all your dealings with God,—of faith in Christ, and in God through him,—of that love which is the fruit of faith—of patience amidst wants, perplexities, and sufferings,—and of a humble and gentle temper towards all men. 12. In this manner contend earnestly for the doctrines of faith; and, in the exercise of faith, fight, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, against the devil, the world, and the flesh: press forward in faith and holiness, till you obtain the full possession of that eternal life to which you are effectually called by the gospel, and to the honour of which ye have, in your ordination, preaching, conversation, and sufferings, borne the most public and solemn testimony. 13. And as this matter is of infinite importance to the glory of God and the salvation of multitudes, I solemnly charge you, in the name, and before the face of that all-seeing and almighty God who quickens dead souls, and will quickly raise the dead to the last judgment,—and by the authority, and in the presence, of Jesus Christ the great Messiah, at whose awful tribunal you must quickly give an account of your conduct; and who, when arraigned before Pontius Pilate the Roman governor, set you a glorious example of courage and steadfastness, in bearing a free and open testimony to the truth, when he knew it would cost him his life;—14. That you faithfully and diligently, and to the end of your life, perform your ministerial work, and sincerely and exactly follow the instructions which I have given you,—in the full expectation of the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ to judge the world, and of the account we must give to him of our whole conduct; 15. Which appearance he will make in the most public view of angels and men in the appointed season thereof,—who in himself is the infinitely happy and all-sufficient God, the only supreme and almighty Ruler over, and source of, all authority to all kings and lords on earth, being infinitely more glorious and excellent than any of them; 16. And who alone has an absolutely eternal life of glory and blessedness, originally, necessarily, unchangeably, and independently, in himself, and is infinitely pure and inconceivable in his nature, and manifests himself on his heavenly throne in inexpressible and unapproachable glories. 17. In view of the importance of your trust, and of that awful account which you and others are to give of your conduct, solemnly and faithfully charge those Christians, who have some share of worldly riches, to beware of being lifted up with pride, self-sufficiency, and contempt of others, or of trusting in earthly possessions, which are so precarious and fleeting; and teach them to put their whole confidence in the only living and true God, who, of his infinite mercy, freely bestows upon us all the blessings of time and eternity. 18. Charge them also, that, instead of hoarding up their riches, or lavishly mispending them on themselves, they do all the good they can with them; and study to abound in better riches, to their own and others' advantage, even in every good work which their affluence renders them capable of, cheerfully and liberally bestowing it in supplying the necessities of the poor, and promoting the cause of Christ; 19. Making Christ, and him crucified, the sole foundation of their hopes of eternal life, as a purchased possession, and proving and exercising their faith in works of liberality, which, through Christ, shall be for ever graciously rewarded in heaven, when they shall have obtained the full possession of eternal life.—20. And, as it is a matter of infinite importance, let me conclude with solemnly beseeching you, my dear son and brother in Christ, carefully to maintain and hold fast the doctrines of the gospel pure and uncorrupted, and employ to the utmost all your gifts and graces, in fulfilling your ministerial office according to the directions I have given you, as a sacred trust committed to you by the Lord Jesus, to be managed in his name and for his glory, and of which you must give him an account; and for this purpose, avoid and detest the impious, trifling, and noisy talk of judaizing teachers, as well as the vain philosophy of the Greeks, by both which, under the name of knowledge, they wickedly carry on an opposition to the gospel of Christ; 21. And by an attachment to which, some professed Christians have already lost sight of, and renounced the doctrines of revelation.—And to direct, establish, and prosper you in all your important work, may the love and favour of God through Christ, in all its manifestations and fruits, be abundantly vouchsafed to you.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—It is a great honour and encouragement to believing servants, that in Christ and the new covenant they are on a level with the highest. But it is base and reproachful to their profession to abuse this privilege as a reason of disregard to their masters, whether profane or religious. The gospel was never designed to destroy civil distinctions, but to make men truly adorn them in performing the duties thereof. And the more kind and condescending masters are, the more respectful and obedient servants ought to be. Relative duties make a very important article of true Christian religion. And they who teach otherwise, or propagate any doctrine contrary to a holy practice, are evidently, but troublesome, selfish, and worldly-minded sedacers. But they who are fond of disputes in religion are seldom tender in their practice.—There is no true godliness but what springs from gospel principles;—no true contentment with our lot but what springs from true godliness;—no true care but where our soul is our first and chief concern.—What a poor empty world is this, where no enjoyment is certain to us for a moment! Nature is satisfied with little, grace with less, and covetousness with nothing, however much! The love of money, and hastening to be rich, is very ruinous to men's souls and characters, and even to their estates. What need then have the rich to be humble amidst their affluence, which tempts so many to pride; and to place their faith, hopes, and delights, not in wealth, but in God through Christ!—And carefully should they prove the sincerity of their faith, by such genuine charity as will entail a gracious, but everlasting reward. Large measures of gifts, grace, cares, and labours, are necessary for ministers to render them duly useful and faithful. For the opposition they will meet with is great, and their account very awful and solemn.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

There is generally in the human mind a strong desire to pry into the private life of individuals, especially of distinguished characters. Hence, on the death of such persons, every source of information is explored; and especially every letter, to any person, or upon any topic whatsoever, is sought out and published as a memorial and mirror of the mind of the dead. And when the eye of a prying curiosity has discovered such relics; and when, from whatever motive, they are published to the world, how many trifles do they often contain! how many "unthought of frailties" do they often reveal! and how many occasions do they furnish for the exultation of malice, the tear of pity, or the veil of charity!

To this ordeal Paul is here subjected. This epistle furnishes the first specimen of his private letters to his familiar friend. It admits us as to a mirror in which we can discover the most secret workings of his spirit. And oh, what a glorious discovery! What love, what holiness, what self-sacrifice! And then the church! Its most secret springs, its entire spiritual machinery, all laid bare! Its bishops and deacons, its old and young, its unmarried and its widows, its masters and servants, its rich and poor!—all are arrayed, not for public exhibition, but for private, most secret, and confidential inspection! And if any one can read this secret disclosure, without acknowledging the unparalleled holiness of the Christian system, his eyes may be blinded by the practical imperfections and sins of its professors, but he has not examined the glories of the system itself! Indeed, if any one will read this epistle, and thereby observe, not the outward garniture of the temple, but penetrate into its most secret chambers, it would appear impossible for him to deny that its "builder and maker was God."—Ed.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO

T I M O T H Y.

That this epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner is evident from i. 17. That it indicates a second imprisonment appears more than probable from the following considerations. In the first imprisonment he "dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came to him," (Acts xxviii. 30, 31); but when he wrote this epistle he was closely confined (ch. ii. 9.), so that Onesiphorus had considerable difficulty in discovering him (ch. i. 16, 18.) and his situation was extremely dangerous (ch. iv. 6, 8, 16, 18). At his first confinement Timothy was with Paul, and is joined with him in writing to the Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon; but the present epistle shows that he was absent in Asia. During his first imprisonment Demas was with him (Philem. 24), now he had forsaken him and gone to Thessalonica (ch. iv. 10). During his first imprisonment Mark also was with him (Col. iv. 10, 11; Philem. 24.), but at the date of this epistle Timothy is directed to bring Mark with him (ch. iv. 11). In the former epistle Paul looked confidently forward to his speedy liberation and departure from Rome (Phil. ii. 24. Philem. 22.), but in this he is "ready to be offered, and the time of his departure is at hand,—he has finished his course;" from which it is concluded that this epistle was written a short time before his martyrdom, which is generally referred to the 29th June, A. D. 66. And, as the apostle requests Timothy to come to him before winter (ch. iv. 21.), the epistle was most probably written in the summer of A. D. 65. Like the former epistle its chief object is to instruct a young minister in the nature and importance of his office and duties in the church, and prepare him, if need be, for sustaining the persecution of the world. It is written with all the affection of a parent, and with all the solemnity of a man about to die. It contains references to Ex. vii. 11, 12. & viii. 18. & ix. 11; Mat. xxvi. 24; Acts xiv. 22; 2 Pet. i. 20, 21.—Ed.

2 To Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord.

3 I thank God, whom [a] I serve from my forefathers† with pure conscience,‡ that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

4 Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears,* that I may be filled with joy;

5 When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up† the gift of God,‡ which is in thee by the [b] putting on of my hands.

7 For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

8 Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God;

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1. I Paul,—called and qualified to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the free and sovereign appointment of God the Father, to bear witness to, and preach the once crucified, but now risen and exalted Saviour, among Jews, and especially Gentiles; according to the promise of eternal life, which was given in him before the foundation of the world, and in due time made to Abraham, to be fulfilled in his divine seed, by whom that life is purchased and dispensed, and in whom it is deposited; and which is obtained through faith in him,—2. To Timothy, my dear son in the faith, of whose conversion to Christ, and appointment to the ministry, God made me the honoured instrument,—wish the most abundant and manifold manifestations and effects of God's free favour and infinite compassion; and all peace and prosperity, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, from God the Father, as the first Mover in the work of our salvation, and from Jesus Christ, our common Lord and Saviour, as the mediatorial Purchaser and Bestower thereof. 3. I heartily thank and praise that only true God, whom, after the example of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and other pious ancestors, I now religiously worship and adore, with a heart and conscience purified by faith in the blood of his Son, that, in my daily prayers, morning, evening, or at noon, I am particularly led out to recommend you to his grace and care. 4, 5. Being exceedingly desirous to see you once more before my approaching death, that I may leave with you my dying charges and paternal instructions;—and my desire is much inflamed by my deep and lively remembrance of that affectionate and filial grief which you manifested at our last parting, and by the manifold evidence you have given of that sincere and unfeigned principle of faith which dwells in your heart, as it did in the heart of your worthy mother and grandmother.—6. Therefore, in my great affection for you, and in consideration of God's distinguished favour in so remarkably fitting you for ministerial service, I again earnestly beseech you, by diligent reading, meditation, and prayer, to cherish, improve, and stir up to action those spiritual gifts which were so plentifully and freely bestowed upon you in your ordination to the sacred office of an evangelist. 7. And let no opposition of adversaries discourage you from or in the exercise of it; for God has not formed in us a cowardly temper of fear or timidity, but a spirit of holy fortitude and undaunted courage to encounter all difficulties and dangers,—and of fervent love to Christ, his cause, people, and the souls of men,—and of a sober and judicious government of ourselves, in steadfastly adhering to, and patiently suffering for, the gospel of Christ. 8. Never then be discouraged in, or ashamed of bearing a bold and open testimony to our Lord Jesus, and to his gospel, in which he attests his own character and work by the declarations and influences of his Spirit,—or of owning, vindicating, and visiting me his imprisoned apostle; but let your whole soul be animated to sympathize with me and others in our persecutions, and cheerfully to endure the like yourself for the sake of the gospel, in an humble dependence upon the supporting, encouraging, and strengthening assistance of that God of infinite mercy and grace, 9. Who, to glorify himself; and furnish us for every good word and work, has provided for us an almighty Saviour, and a free, infinite, and everlasting salvation in him,—and has by the gospel, and the influences of his Spirit, effectually called us to holiness and happiness,—not as influenced by any foresight of our good works, but entirely of his own free favour, according to his sovereign purpose and his mere unmerited kindness, which was fixed upon us in Christ our Head before the world was created: 10. Which gracious purpose lay, from eternity, as a secret in the mind of God, and was long concealed under dark types and predictions, but is now discovered, with illustrious brightness, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to purchase and apply our redemption;—who by dying for our sins in our nature and stead, and rising again as our conquering Head, has taken away the sting of death, broken its power, and turned it into a blessing to them that believe, and delivered them from eternal death;—and who, by the preaching of the gospel, has made a certain and plain revelation of a blessed, excellent, spiritual, and eternal state of happiness and glory for both soul and body in the heavenly world, and of the proper means of our arriving at it through him.—11. For the ministration of which glorious gospel I am immediately furnished and commissioned by Jesus Christ, as an authentic publisher and inspired messenger, to declare unto men, especially the Gentiles, the glad tidings of salvation therein contained, that they may hear and believe to the saving of their souls: 12. And it is for my faithfulness and zeal in discharging that office, that I now actually suffer all the disgrace and severities of my present imprisonment, and am daily expecting martyrdom; but, in consideration of the glorious excellency of the cause, instead of being ashamed of Christ, or of his or my sufferings, I glory in them, and have the most joyful expectation of a happy issue of them in the future state:—for, in the light of God's word, and upon long trial and experience, I well know what a gracious, all-sufficient, faithful, and divine Saviour he is whom I have received and relied on by faith,—and on the most certain and infallible grounds am persuaded that he has a firm purpose, full power, authority, and will, to secure my soul, and all its eternal concerns, with which I have intrusted him, against the day of the last judgment, in which the everlasting misery or happiness of every man will be publicly, solemnly, and unalterably decided. 13. Whatever trials therefore you meet with, or may expect in the cause of Christ, see that, encouraged by my example of faith, patience, and hope, you keep in memory, cleave to, and resolutely profess and publish, the platform of the uncorrupted, wholesome, nourishing, and healing doctrines of the gospel, so productive of faith and love, which I have taught you by word or writing—as things which you, through Christ's grace, heartily believe and love,—and in order that faith in and love to him may be produced among your hearers. 14. And those useful and edifying gifts and doctrines, and that ministerial office which have been committed to you in your ordination, see that you faithfully maintain and improve, by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, who, in his person and influences, dwells in us, and other faithful ministers and believers, to enable us to fulfil the duties of our station in the face of all opposition and danger.—15. In these things you ought to be the more faithful and diligent, as you cannot but know, to your grief, that the generality of the Asian professors of Christianity, at least those here at Rome, have shamefully deserted me in my present sufferings, as being afraid or ashamed to stand by me in them. 16—18. But may the God of all grace multiply his merciful favours, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, upon the family of Onesiphorus, as a return of his distinguished kindness to me; for, notwithstanding the cowardice of pretended friends, and the fury of open enemies, with a truly Christian courage and compassion, he often relieved, comforted, and refreshed me in my various distresses, by his kind visits and necessary supplies.—Yea, instead of being ashamed of me, or my ignominious imprisonment and reproach, from love to Christ and his cause, and to me, when he came to Rome, he took great pains to inquire after, and obtain access to me.—May that Lord Jesus, for whose sake he showed me this kindness, according to the riches of his grace, reward him, not only in this world, but especially in that which is to come, mercifully owning him in the last judgment before his Father and an assembled world, and publicly adjudging him to eternal life.—And you know that at Ephesus, in many instances and forms, he supplied and comforted me under my trouble.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—It is delightful for ministers to have a clear call from Christ to their work, remarkable success in it, and a habitual practice answerable to it. It is a singular mercy to have religious parents; and great is the blessing when God's grace is continued from age to age in a family. Happy they who receive the gospel with unfeigned faith and love, and serve God with pure hearts, after the example of pious progenitors, and diligently apply themselves to propagate it to others. For O the transcendent excellency of the gospel! It promises eternal life through Christ; it lays open the gracious purposes of God; it is the mean of our effectual calling by his power and grace; it manifests death conquered, and immortal blessedness secured for men in Christ. Who would not delight to be an authorized teacher of it! Who would not, without fear or shame, cheerfully undergo the severest persecution for the sake of it and its blessings! Who would not, on the footing of it, commit his eternal salvation to the care of God!—A deep concern to discharge their office and improve their gifts; a holy fortitude, love, sobriety, wisdom, and sound judgment; great regard of, love to, sympathy with, and earnest prayers for, their fellow-labourers, should signalize every minister of Christ. And infinite is the mercy, that, when some shamefully desert the cause of Christ and his persecuted servants, others are, by his grace, imboldened to own and regard them; nor shall they, in the last judgment, lose their gracious reward.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. Considering therefore the importance of your work, and the danger of mistakes in it, or apostasy from it, I beseech you, my dear son in the faith, fellowship, and ministry of the gospel, not to be self-confident, nor to trust in any grace that you have already received; but always to depend on the inexhaustible fund of grace which is treasured up in Christ your Head, and in the free favour of God, residing, manifesting, and exhibiting itself in him, that out of his fulness you may continually receive grace for grace. 2. And, setting out in this strength for every duty, and for propagating the true doctrines of the gospel, which are so abundantly attested by the law and the prophets, and which, in a most public manner, I committed to your trust at your ordination,—take heed that you transmit them pure and uncorrupted to such other ministers as manifest themselves faithful believers, who have the glory of Christ and the welfare of souls at heart, and are furnished with knowledge and utterance, gifts and graces, to dispose and qualify them for explaining, proving, defending, and applying the whole counsel of God to their hearers. 3. And, as your office and work are so honourable, let no difficulties nor dangers discourage you: but, considering your sufferings as lying in the way to victory and triumph, act always with holy resolution, vigour, and courage, like a good soldier, that voluntarily fights in the cause, and under the banner, of Jesus Christ, who is able and willing to support you under, and carry you through, all your toils and troubles, and to † The form of the doctrine here condemned is not precisely known. Still it is evident that these erroneous teachers must have asserted, either, 1. That the resurrection was altogether mental, and was "past" when men believed; or, 2. That it was altogether personal to Christ, and was "past" when he arose from the dead; or, 3. That it was altogether emblematical, and was "past" in the act of baptism. One of these, or, perhaps, all three forms combined, constituted the error which the apostle here so forcibly condemns.—Ed.

crown them with everlasting honours. 4. And, to carry on the allusion, you must give yourself wholly to your ministerial work; must not follow any civil calling, unprofitable reading, or unnecessary diversion, to entangle your thoughts or swallow up your time; but your whole time, thoughts, words, and actions, must be occupied in the spiritual service of Christ your sovereign Lord, that you may acquit yourself agreeably to his will, who has appointed, called, and authorized you to fight the good fight of faith, till you lay hold on eternal life. 5. And, in allusion to the laws of combatants in the Grecian games, you, who have entered into the service of Christ, must exert yourself, with the utmost labour and diligence, according to the prescriptions of his word, for overcoming all the opposition of sin, Satan, and the world, as ever you expect that Christ should crown you with a glorious reward. 6. Yea, again, to allude to labourers in a field or vineyard, you must first be laborious in preaching the gospel for the glory of Christ and good of souls, and wait with patience for the coming of the Lord, when you shall abundantly share the fruits of your work. 7. Consider these things seriously, that you may look on yourself as a soldier, combatant, and husbandman, in the work of the Lord, and may expect labours and hardships in attending your service, but comfortably hope for a blessed and gracious reward at the end of it. And may the Lord Jesus enable you thoroughly to understand and practise these instructions, and every other thing which concerns you, as a Christian or minister of Christ. 8. The grand article which I enjoin you constantly to bear in mind, for your own support and encouragement under your trials and sufferings, and to preach to others, for their conversion and establishment in the faith and hope of the gospel, is, that Jesus, the anointed Saviour, who, according to the flesh, proceeded from the loins of David the renowned king of Israel, having suffered unto death as a sacrifice for sin, was raised from the dead for our justification, according to those glad tidings of salvation which I have laboured to preach chiefly among Gentile sinners: 9. For the preaching of which I am at present persecuted and restrained as an evil-doer, not fit to live; but thanks be to God, that, though I am restrained from preaching the gospel in my wonted manner, yet it is still published far and wide with remarkable success by others, and even confirmed by my patient and joyful sufferings for its sake. 10. And, in view of that which God hath and will do by the ministrations of it, I cheerfully submit to all the distresses which are or can be laid upon me, from a principle of love and zeal for the spiritual and eternal welfare of those whom God has from eternity chosen to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth,—that they, encouraged by my example, may be induced to believe, cordially embrace, and boldly profess the truth and excellence of the gospel, notwithstanding the violence and persecution of the times; and may, in this way of God's appointment, arrive at the full possession of that eternal blessedness and glory which is purchased by and reserved in Christ, and to be enjoyed in immediate fellowship with him. 11. Nor is this doctrine of Christ's death and resurrection, and the future glory of his people, more important, than true and comfortable; for if, in conformity to him in his death, and by virtue derived from him, we, in our state of vital union with him, be dead to sin and to this world, and willing to lay down our lives for his sake, we also, in conformity to him, in and by the power of his resurrection, shall certainly be quickened, and raised up to a glorious and eternal life with him in the heavenly state. 12. If we patiently endure reproach and trouble for his sake, as he did for ours, we shall also be exalted to sit with him on his throne, as kings and priests unto God; but if, for fear of losing our worldly honours, ease, wealth, liberty, or life, we, as ashamed of him, renounce our profession of his truth, or give up our Christian practice, he also will be ashamed of us, and publicly profess, before an assembled world of angels and men, that he never approved of, nor accounted us his children or servants. 13. And whether we believe these comfortable truths on the one hand, or awful denunciations on the other, he, who is the God that cannot lie, the faithful and true Witness, will certainly perform his gracious promises to all true believers, and execute his just threatenings on apostates. For it is not consistent with the perfections of his nature or will to act contrary to his settled declarations of mercy or judgment.—14. Of these points, so closely connected with the eternal salvation of souls, seriously and solemnly, on the authority, and as in the presence of Christ, put them in mind, who are in, or may be admitted to, the ministerial office; that they may attend to what is really substantial, and not to trifling debates, which tend only to puzzle men's minds, and pervert them from the truth of the gospel. 15. And let it be your constant care to yield and manifest yourself as a faithful and approved servant of God, who has no occasion to be ashamed on account of neglect, unskilfulness, unfaithfulness, or imprudence; but who, with care and judgment, separates between truth and error, things important and trifling; and applies the word of God to men according to their circumstances; and, by ministration and example, marks out before them the right way of truth, holiness, and happiness. 16. But always avoid and oppose all irreverent, defiling, and noisy, but daring and empty discourses, which degrade the nature or perfections of God, or the purity of the gospel;—for these will gradually render men more and more erroneous and profane; 17. And will, by degrees, infect, and, as it were, incurably eat out the whole system of truth, and vitals of religion in the church; as too plainly appears in the case of Hymeneus and Philetus. 18. Who, by such vain babblings, have been carried away from the truths of revelation into the most destructive errors, supposing that whatever Christ, or any of the inspired writers, have spoken of the resurrection of the dead, is to be taken mystically, with respect to some events already past, and not to any resurrection of the bodies of men at the last day; and by their bold and subtle reasonings they have seduced some from the truth which they once professed. 19. But notwithstanding all this, the doctrine of the general resurrection is certainly a fundamental truth of God, sealed by his miraculous approbation of the preachers of it. And notwithstanding such melancholy instances of apostasy, the electing purposes and gracious promises of God—and Jesus Christ, as the sure foundation of eternal salvation, and the state and structure of grace built upon him—shall remain firm and unchangeable; plainly manifesting, that whatever becomes of others, the Lord will claim, and for ever keep, through faith unto salvation, those whom he chose in Christ before the world began, and in time united to him by faith; and that, as holiness and happiness are inseparably connected in the decree, and every step of the execution of it, all such as profess to trust in Christ for eternal happiness, must labour, in heart and life, to keep at the farthest distance from sin. 20. But as in the houses of great men there are vessels of different materials, excellency, and use; so in the visible church there are ministers and professors, some excellent, honourable, and approved of God, and others who are mean, contemptible, dishonourable to, and disapproved by him. 21. If any one, who claims a share in the blessings, privileges, and services of the great Lord of the church, keep himself from corrupt teachers, errors, and practices, he will appear formed for the noblest purposes, and purified, consecrated, and qualified by the Holy Ghost for whatever use he may be called to. 22. And if you, Timothy, would approve yourself to God, and to your own conscience, in the discharge of your work, labour diligently, by his grace, to flee from all youthful ambition, self-conceit, rashness, or sensuality, and in your preaching and practice pursue after what relates to righteousness before God and men, faith in, and fidelity to Christ, and to God through him, and to a charitable and peaceable temper and carriage towards all those worshippers of him whose hearts are sincere, and consciences purified by his blood. 23. But shun, as an infectious plague, all impertinent and fruitless inquiries and debates, knowing for certain that they tend only to beget angry contentions, to the disturbance of the church, and the hinderance of the success of the gospel. 24. It is very unbecoming for any minister of the gospel of peace, or even private Christian, to engage in disputes with a litigious temper of spirit; yea, on the contrary, he ought to be kind and courteous towards all men, conveying the truth into their minds in the most clear and scriptural manner, patiently bearing with their infirmities, and even their prejudices. 25. Endeavouring to win upon the adversaries of truth by softness, calmness, and sweetness of temper, as well as by strength of argument,—in hopes that God, in due time, may convince them of their error, and lead them to embrace and boldly profess the truth as it is in Jesus; 26. And that by these means they may be awakened out of the insnaring errors and practices by which they had been lulled asleep and intoxicated, and in which Satan had caught and held them fast as captives, to be enslaved, domineered over, and ruined by him, according to his malicious will and pleasure.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Ministers have need always to depend on, and receive constant supplies from the inexhaustible grace of Jesus Christ. And transcendent is their encouragement to depend on, confess, and honour him. He is raised from the dead; his purpose, his promise, his love, secure his people's salvation, while, in the most endearing manner, they oblige and animate them to depart from iniquity. They who bravely suffer for him in this world, shall for ever gloriously reign with him in the next; and in the last judgment he will proceed according to his promises and threatenings in his word. With great care and openness ought the gospel ministry to be committed to able and faithful persons. And with what careful disentanglement from secular affairs—what readiness to undergo the hardest labours or sufferings—what deep concern for the eternal salvation of the elect—what desire to approve themselves to Christ, as faithful, diligent, and prudent—what zealous avoiding of dangerous errors—what exemplariness in practice—what care, by scriptural arguments and Christian tempers, to convince and reclaim the erroneous or unruly—ought they to begin and persevere in their work! Happy is it if by all these they become instruments of recovering souls out of the hand of the devil! Alas! how few, called ministers, have these things written on their heart, and exemplified in their conduct!

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. And there is the more need that you, and other ministers, should act with the greatest faithfulness and caution, as, even in the gospel period, manifold troubles, persecutions, and especially corruptions in doctrines and manners, will gradually work in the church, till they issue in the great apostasy of Popery, towards the latter part of this dispensation: 2. For a set of men shall arise, under the Christian name, who shall be of a notoriously selfish spirit, aiming merely at their own secular honour and ease, without any regard to the good of others; insatiable in their desires and pursuits after the riches of this world; —vain-glorious boasters of their own endowments, advantages, and merits;— defamers of Christ's offices, people, doctrines, and ways;—undutiful to parents, contemning their authority over their children;—basely ungrateful to God, princes, and other benefactors; 3. Destitute of that natural affection due to relations and neighbours;—perfidious violators of the most solemn engagements, promises, and contracts;—false and diabolically malicious accusers of others;—abandoned to ungovernable lusts and passions;—furious and cruel in their tempers and treatment of others;—contemners and haters of persons or things that are good; 4. Betrayers of civil or sacred trusts, or of their neighbours and relations;—headstrong, rash, daring, and precipitant in their words and behaviour;—puffed up with self-conceit of their own excellencies or prerogatives;—entirely addicted to sensual pleasures; 5. Cloaking and disguising their horrible wickedness with fair shows of holiness and zeal for Christ, and many external forms of piety and devotion, while they remain utter strangers and enemies, in both heart and life, to their powerful influences.—Such false pretenders to the Christian name abhor and reject, and hold no spiritual fellowship with them as church members. 6. For many of them are extremely subtle in their insinuations; with a show of innocence, they will, like snakes, wind themselves into families, pry into their secrets, and exercise an absolute tyranny over their estates and consciences, and surprisingly entice and insnare the hearts and affections of weak women, or other simple and ignorant persons, who are under the power of sinful lusts and passions, and are easily misled by everything which soothes and flatters their corrupt imaginations; 7. And so are always running after every new teacher, and imbibing every new doctrine,—and hence never attain to any clear, judicious, and saving knowledge of the true gospel of Christ. 8. Now, as the two famous magicians of Egypt set themselves, by wicked reasonings and false miracles, to oppose Moses, when he came, by God's appointment, to deliver the Hebrews from their bondage; so will these Popish, or other false teachers, set themselves in opposition to the scriptures and truths of Christ, and to his servants whom he hath sent to preach spiritual deliverance to the captives of sin, Satan, and their lusts,—having their minds altogether corrupted with ignorance, error, and vice, and quite alienated from the pure doctrines or grace of faith: 9. Nevertheless, God shall limit and restrain, and in due time stop, their success, and manifest to all men the folly and madness of their sinful opinions, and the baseness of their conduct, as he did in the case of the Egyptian magicians. 10, 11. But, to guard you against all such seducers, and their corrupt principles and practices, I recommend to your imitation what you have seen in my behaviour;—for having been so long my companion in travels and ministrations, you cannot but thoroughly understand the excellent doctrine, according to godliness, which I taught;—and my self-denying, holy, and religious conversation, in a manner answerable to those doctrines;—the sincerity and steadiness of my aims and pursuits for promoting the glory of God and the good of souls; my fidelity in preaching the pure gospel of Christ, under the power of that faith which I have in him, and endeavour to promote in others; the forbearance and lenity which I have all along shown toward the weak, ignorant, or unteachable;—the love which I have shown to God, to Christ, and the souls of men, and the patience I have exercised;—under all the abuse and persecution which I have, in different places, met with for the sake of the gospel;—but under all which, for your and others' encouragement, the Lord graciously supported, and at last delivered me. 12. And indeed such is the general corruption of mankind in every age, particularly in this, that whosoever will resolutely and perseveringly live in a truly religious manner, in a holy profession of Christ's name, in his strength, and after his example, and according to the rule of his word, will be exposed to suffering for his sake; and God has appointed that all his mystical members, like himself, shall, through much tribulation, enter into their eternal glory. 13. But hypocritical professors, and particularly seducers, instead of submitting to suffering for righteousness' sake, refuse nothing to avoid it, and are continually going further and further into error, violence, and wickedness, doing all they can to seduce others to follow them, while themselves are miserably deceived by Satan and their own lusts. 14. But whatever others do, see that you, Timothy, steadfastly and immovably continue in the belief, profession, and preaching of the pure, uncorrupted, and important doctrines of the gospel, which you have embraced upon the fullest conviction, having learned them from Jesus Christ, the faithful and true Witness, by the ministrations of me his immediately-commissioned and well-attested servant; 15. And which, by means of your early religious education, you cannot but perceive to be entirely consonant to the writings of the Old Testament, which were indited by the Holy Ghost, and delivered by holy men about holy things; and which contain all the principles of, and directions, obligations, and motives to holiness; and, together with those of the New, are, by the blessing of God, sufficient and effectual to instruct you in every important truth, and render you duly wise in everything necessary to the obtaining of eternal salvation through faith in Christ. 16. All these writings of the Old and New Testaments are of a divine original, God having, by his Spirit, directed and inspired holy men to deliver them exactly according to truth;—and they are of manifold and excellent use for revealing important doctrines concerning himself and ourselves, our duty to him and to one another, and concerning our state by nature and grace, and the whole scheme of salvation through a Redeemer;—or for reproving and convincing of, and reclaiming from sins and errors;—or for directing how to obtain righteousness in Christ, and derive renewing and sanctifying virtue from him, to render us holy in heart and life; 17. That, by this absolutely perfect rule of faith and practice, every Christian, and particularly ministers, may be perfected in knowledge, faith, and holiness, and thoroughly furnished, in their station, to instruct, convince, and comfort others.

Reflections upon Chap. III.—There is great need to be well furnished with the knowledge and grace of the gospel in these perilous times. And it is dreadful to think how many selfish, worldly-minded, vain-glorious, proud, ungrateful, impious, profligate professors of Christianity are in the world. With wonderful art and assiduity seducers propagate their delusions and entice followers, especially the ignorant and unsettled. But great is the mercy that God has them under his control, and can confute, restrain, or expose them whenever he pleases. And it is very necessary for ministers to avoid connexion with them. It is a great honour and happiness for the church when Christ's ministers are proper patterns of soundness in doctrine;—of steadfast regard to the honour of Christ and welfare of souls; of faith and faithfulness; and of lenity, love, and patience under troubles; and are sharers in happy and wonderful deliverances. It is a mercy to have early instruction in the oracles of God, and to persevere in adherence to the truths therein contained. For complete is the authority, fulness, and fitness of the Scripture for instructing, directing, exciting, and encouraging men in every necessary sentiment, word, or work. May they make me wiser than my teachers, and be my heritage for ever!

Chap. IV.—Ver. 1. Since therefore you are so much surrounded by enemies, and so richly furnished with the infinitely excellent and useful oracles of God, and the gifts and graces of his Spirit, I solemnly charge you, as in the immediate presence of the all-seeing God and heart-searching-Saviour, and as you will answer it to him, when he shall appear in all the glories of his divine and mediatorial dignity to judge the world, 2. Preach the inspired truths of God with the utmost earnestness, diligence, and perseverance on the Lord's day, or other occasions;—in times of peace and of persecution, in public or in private, as often as you have opportunity;—and in a free, open, and faithful declaration of the whole counsel of God—with all meekness, patience, constancy, and perseverance—apply them, as occasion offers, for convincing, reproving, and reclaiming the erroneous and immoral, and for counselling, exhorting, and encouraging believers to go on in the way of righteousness. 3. For as already some Jews, so hereafter many pretended Christians, being, through their own pride, lusts, passions, and prejudices, provoked at and enraged against the wholesome, pure, unmixed doctrines of the gospel, will not endure to hear them, but will seek out, and multiply to themselves, such false teachers as will tickle their ears with new and unscriptural notions, agreeable to their vitiated taste; 4. And through their love of novelties, to gratify their curiosity and corrupt inclinations, will turn a deaf ear to the truths of the gospel, and eagerly listen to, and favourably embrace, every vain, empty, or senseless story, to amuse themselves and keep their consciences easy: 5. Be therefore on your guard against such persons and their errors, and take every opportunity to confute them, and establish the truth in opposition to them; watch against all temptation, and over your own spirit and conduct, and for the souls committed to your care, in every circumstance. Bear, with meekness and patience, whatever tribulations your adversaries bring upon you; and notwithstanding all their attempts to dishearten and silence you, go on in the name and strength of the Lord, thoroughly performing all the parts of your ministry with fidelity, care, and diligence, to the edification of believers and the conviction of gainsayers. 6. For, as for me, I am on the point of pouring out my blood, as a martyr for Christ, and in confirmation of the doctrines which I have preached; and the time when my soul shall leave my body, and depart from earth to heaven, there to be for ever with the Lord, and my body to be dissolved into its original dust, is now at hand. 7. Yet in this situation I have the comfortable testimony of the Spirit of God, and of my own conscience, that I have been enabled to act, like a good soldier of Jesus Christ, with courage, fidelity, and success, in fighting under his banner and direction against all his and his church's enemies. I have held on my way, through all the trials, labours, and difficulties, to which I have been called; and am just finishing my course of life, obedience, suffering, and services: and I have all along lived by faith on the pure doctrines of the gospel, and been faithful in professing, publishing, and defending them, and acting agreeably to them. 8. And the rich experience I have had of the grace of God assisting, animating, and succeeding me in my work, encourages my joyful hope and confidence that I shall in a little time receive that glorious reward which is laid up in Christ and reserved in heaven,—that perfection of holiness and happiness purchased by his righteousness; and which he, as the faithful and righteous Whatever it was, the mention of it affords a striking evidence of the disinterestedness of the apostle, who now, at the close of a long and laborious ministry, needed to send to such a distance for an article apparently of so little value. Of the other articles—"books and parchments"—nothing certain can be discovered; and in all such cases conjecture is of little value.—Ed.

† Surely this prayer of the apostle needs no such apologies as commentators have laboured to make for it. Judge of the world, shall publicly and freely bestow upon me in the last judgment; and not only on me, but on all those who have by faith, and with pleasure and suitable preparation, waited, looked, longed, and hoped for his second and glorious appearing. 14, 15. Alexander the coppersmith has, by his false accusations and otherwise, proved a most malicious and bitter enemy to me. I therefore leave him, as an utter and irreclaimable apostate, to the righteous vengeance of God, to be punished according to his deeds in time and eternity. Beware of him, for he has violently set himself against, and inflexibly opposed, the gospel of salvation, which I preach to the Gentiles as well as Jews. 16, 17. At my last appearance to take my trial before the emperor Nero, none of my Christian friends, who might have been of use to me, had courage enough to own and countenance me, or to appear as witnesses on my behalf, but all deserted me, as his disciples did my Master Christ. I heartily pray the Lord may forgive them their sin in so doing, and render them deeply penitent for it. But, while they deserted me, my almighty and fast Friend, the Lord Jesus, appeared for me, and strengthened me by his Spirit, to make such a bold and plain representation of my cause, as fully manifested that the gospel, in its matter and success, is of God, and no way hurtful to the interests of civil government, and gave many of the Gentiles who were present an opportunity of hearing it; yea, he marvellously delivered me from the rage and cruelty of the emperor, who, under the influence of his father the devil, sought to destroy me. 18. And, by his word and my past experience, I have an entire confidence in his power, faithfulness, and grace, that he will always keep me from doing anything unworthy of the Christian or minister, though it be to escape the most cruel persecutions or death, and enable me, with faith and patience, to persevere in his way till he transport me to his glorious kingdom above. 22. May the Lord Jesus dwell in, and fill all the powers of your soul with his presence, graces, and influences,—to guide, support, strengthen, comfort, and sanctify you.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—Ministers, as well as others, have great need to be excited to their work by serious reflections on the last, the general judgment.—How extensive is their office! There is need of much activity, patience, perseverance, boldness, and impartiality—and happy and honoured are they who are faithful—in it. Christ stands by, assists, and delivers them in their warfare, and at last graciously rewards them, and all his friends, with inexpressible blessedness. And it is a mercy to have him with us, when some basely desert or oppose us, or are necessarily at a distance from us. To what dreadful lengths in wickedness apostates from Christ will go! and to what certain ruin they expose themselves! But not the best can stand fast, unless the Lord Jesus be with their spirit.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

This, though not the last in order of position, is probably the last the apostle ever wrote. About this time Nero, an emperor proverbially cruel, had set fire to Rome, and, in order to divert the public odium from himself, charged the crime against the Christians, and had them condemned to death in great numbers; some were crucified; others being covered with combustibles and burned as night lights in his gardens; others covered with skins of wild beasts and exposed to dogs; others cast to the lions (Tacit. Ann. Lib. xv. c. 44). Under these circumstances, and in prospect of some such death, the apostle wrote. And certainly it thus serves in an especial manner "to show with what composure a Christian can die."—Ed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO

T I T U S.

This epistle, as well as the two preceding to Timothy, chiefly contains directions for those in the ministerial office. Titus, to whom it was written, was a Gentile, early converted to Christ, perhaps by Paul's ministry. Being found faithful and diligent in the improvement of his spiritual gifts and evangelical trusts, Paul left him in Crete, now Candia, a large island in the Mediterranean sea,—as an evangelist, to put in order the affairs of that infant church.—In this epistle, he directs him to appoint proper officers, who might, by their life and doctrine, confute the judaizing preachers and wicked heathens, chap. i.; and to recommend, by his example and instruction, a truly religious behaviour to Christian professors in every station, answerable to that grace of the gospel which they had heard and experienced, ii, iii.

Of Titus nothing is certainly known than that he was a Greek, and one of Paul's early converts who frequently attended him in his journeys (chap. i. 4; Gal. ii. 3; 2 Cor. ii. 13; vii. 6, 7, 13, 15; viii. 16, 23; xii. 18); neither is there any certain record of the time when, or the individual by whom, Christianity was first introduced into Crete. But it is probable it was introduced at an early period; for, on the day of Pentecost, there were Cretians present (Acts ii. 11,) who would naturally carry with them the account of what they had seen and heard, and thus, either prepare the way of the gospel, by the excitement of curiosity and inquiry, or actually found the church which Titus was now instructed more perfectly to organize. Nor is there any account of Paul's labours in the island, except the bare fact of his visit, which may be inferred from this epistle, (ch. i. 5,) though Luke mentions that he touched at the Fair Havens and Lasea on his voyage to Rome. It may therefore, with considerable probability, be inferred that Paul's ministry in Crete was subsequent to his first imprisonment at Rome, and previous to his second, about A. D. 64. It is evident that Paul must have found the inhabitants of the island considerably advanced in the knowledge of the gospel, or that his own ministry had been crowned with much success. But it appears that, from some cause unknown, he was hurried away, and was necessitated to leave Titus behind to assist in completing the apostolic organization of the infant churches. Titus is represented, in ecclesiastical records founded upon early traditions, to have continued in Crete till the age of 94, and to have died and been buried there. The epistle contains references to Deut. vii. 6; xiv. 2; Is. xxix. 13; Ezek. xxxvi. 25; Acts x. 45; Rom. iii. 20; Eph. v. 2; 1 Tim. iii. 2; 2 Tim. i. 9; Heb. ix. 14; 1 Pet. ii. 9.—Ed.]

PAUL, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect,* and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness;

2 In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began;

3 But hath in due times† manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour;‡

4 To Titus, mine own son after the common faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are †wanting, and ordain elders§ in every city, as I had appointed thee:

6 If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly.

7 For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre;

8 But a lover of hospitality, a lover of ‖good men, sober, just, holy, temperate;

9 [a]Holding fast the faithful word †as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince‡ the gainsayers.

10 [b]For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision:

11 Whose mouths must be stopped;§ who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.

12 One of themselves, even a prophet‖ of their own, said, The Cretians are alway liars, evil beasts, slow bellies.

13 This witness is true: wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith;

14 Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth.

15 Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

* "According to the faith of God's elect," "chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." 2 Thes. 2. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 2.—Ed.

† Literally, "in its own," or, "his own times"—the times eternally purposed in divine wisdom and prophetically foretold by his Spirit through the prophets.—Ed.

‡ On comparing the phrase, "the commandment of God our Saviour," with the narratives of Paul's conversion and designation to the apostleship, Acts 9. 15. & 26. 16, it will be utterly impossible to deny that he believed Jesus Christ to be "God manifest in the flesh."—Ed.

§ After comparing ver. 3, in which Titus is appointed to "ordain elders in every city," with ver. 6, in which every such elder is required to be "blameless," and then with ver. 7, in which every such blameless elder is described as a "bishop," it will be difficult to deny that in the apostolic church "elder" and "bishop" were but two names for the same person—one the title of qualification derived from age, or its equivalents, wisdom and gravity; the other the title of office and duty, the rule and oversight of the church.—Ed.

§ Whose mouths must be stopped—not by secular power, for Titus had none, either on his side or at his command; but by quotation of scripture, such as our Saviour employed against the Sadducees; and the unmasking of hypocrisy, such as he practised against the Pharisees. Mat. 22. 23—46.—Ed.

‖ Jerome, Socrates, and Nicephorus apply this to Epimenides, who was born at Gnossus in Crete, and to whom several prophecies are ascribed by Diogenes Laertes, Plato, and Cicero. The work in which the words are said to have been contained is lost. If he prophesied through mere human sagacity, and yet pretended to be an inspired prophet, the apostle merely gives him the title by which the Cretians recognised him; but if he was in any degree really inspired, and yet not a true follower of God, even so was Balaam, and so was Caiaphas, for the one "loved the wages of unrighteousness," and the other condemned to death the Lord of life and glory.—Ed.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1. Paul,—who, as a Christian and minister, is the devoted servant of the ever blessed God, and who is graciously dignified with the commission, qualifications, and powers of an extraordinary messenger of Jesus Christ, to preach his gospel of salvation in all its extent to Gentiles as well as Jews,—according to the doctrine of faith which is embraced by, and the means of working faith in, all those whom he chose for his peculiar people before the foundation of the world; and according to their knowledge, approbation, and confession of its infallible truth, which is suited, designed, and made effectual to them for promoting practical godliness in heart and life, in all the duties thereof towards God or man: 2. Which truth is believed and professed, and godliness practised, in the exercise of a lively hope of the incorruptible and undefiled inheritance of eternal life, which the infinitely sincere and infallibly faithful Jehovah promised to them in Christ, as their covenant head, before the world began, and quickly after the fall published to our first parents in paradise; 3. And which now, in the fulness of time, he has clearly made known by the publication of his gospel, which is revealed and committed to me, as his apostle, to dispense it to Gentiles as well as Jews, according to the express commandment of Jesus Christ our divine Saviour, from sin and wrath:—4. To his dearly beloved Titus, of whose instruction in the principles of the Christian religion, spiritual regeneration, and saving faith, God made him the instrument,—heartily wishes all the abundant manifestations of divine favour, and all peace and prosperity, in time or eternity, from God the Father as the fountain of all good, and from our Lord Jesus Christ as the revealer, purchaser, and bestower of it. 5. You well know that I left you at Crete, when I departed from it, that you might complete whatever remained unfinished, with regard to the doctrine, worship, discipline, and manners in the Christian congregation there planted; and particularly that, as an evangelist, you might preside in the election and ordination of teaching and ruling elders, or bishops, to take the oversight of the professed Christians in every city there, and feed them with knowledge and understanding according to the orders which I left with you: 6. Remember therefore, that these overseers ought by all means to be persons of an unspotted moral character, unblemished with polygamy or causeless divorce;—careful to bring up their children in the nurture, admonition, and ways of the Lord;—and never suffering them to live disgracefully in a luxurious, dissolute, refractory, ungovernable, disobedient manner. 7. For the nature of an evangelical office, the honour of religion, and the good of souls, require that church rulers, particularly ministers, be under no reproach or scandal in their life and conversation, be not chargeable with neglect, unfaithfulness, or partiality in dispensing the mysteries of God;—nor of a headstrong, conceited, obstinate, inflexible temper,—nor of a hasty spirit, falling into a passion upon every slight provocation;—nor lovers of, nor addicted to, immodorate drinking of liquor;—nor contentious nor violent in their behaviour, ready to strike such as displease them;—nor of a niggardly, sordid, covetous spirit, bent to catch and keep all that they can of base worldly gain, by which the consciences of men are so frequently defiled: 8. But persons who take pleasure, on all proper occasions, to exert themselves in acts of benevolence, particularly to religious strangers, travelling preachers, and persecuted Christians;—being hearty lovers and encouragers of whatever is good, having a cordial affection for all sincere and pious men,—and being modest and humble, grave and prudent, upright and faithful, in all they say and do;—exemplarily holy in their whole conversation,—and chaste and moderate in their desires and pursuits after the pleasures of this life.—9. They ought also to be well enlightened and established in their faith and profession of the pure truths of the gospel, as they have learned them from their inspired writers and publishers; that, by a due application thereof, they may be able to comfort believers, and excite them to their duty; and to confute the errors, silence the cavils, and rebuke the perverseness of opposers.—10. For in Crete, as well as in other places, I understand there are many pretenders to Christianity, especially Jewish zealots for the Mosaic ceremonies, who are refractory and disorderly, not submitting to any divine rule in their doctrines or manners; but are most pernicious, proud, self-conceited, disputers about trifles, and crafty seducers of the simple; 11. Whose mouths ought to be stopped, and their errors confuted, by scriptural proofs, solid arguments, and good examples, since they are so indefatigable and subtle, insinuating themselves into Christian families, and carrying them off from Jesus Christ and the gospel to the ceremonies and law of Moses,—teaching and urging upon them things utterly false, and inconsistent with the true method of salvation by Christ alone;—and all this to procure for themselves the sordid and defiling treasures of this world, by methods suited to the lusts of the Cretians;—12. For you well remember that Epimenides, their own poet and supposed prophet, describes that nation as constantly addicted to lying, and as crafty and savage in their temper; luxuriously and even ravenously gluttonous, and exceedingly lazy and idle, and so exposed to every temptation. 13, 14. And indeed the perfidious, mischievous, and sensual conduct of the judaizing Christians and their disciples, still confirm the justness of that description;—it is therefore necessary that you deal plainly and sharply with them, that neither seducers nor seduced may dare to persist any longer in their evil principles and practices, but be recovered to and settled in the true and uncorrupted doctrines of faith, and may no more attend to, or believe, and be carried away with, the fabulous traditions of the Jews, or the imperious injunctions of men prejudiced against, and gone off from, the truth of the gospel,—relative to ceremonial rites of clean and unclean meats or drinks, which are no longer obligatory under the New Testament dispensation.—15. By real Christians, whose hearts and consciences are, through faith, purged by the blood of Christ, every kind of wholesome food may be lawfully eaten; but by those who are still unregenerated, and under the power of unbelief with respect to gospel

11 For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us, that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

13 Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;[§]

14 Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto truths, and who are cleaving to Mosaical institutions instead of Christ, nothing, however good or lawful in itself, can be used without sin or defilement, as their own understanding and conscience, those leading and directive powers of their soul, are quite misguided and corrupted. 16. They indeed make high professions and boasts of their knowledge of God and his will; but their practices are a plain confutation of all such pretences, and manifest them to be detestable enemies to God and godliness, unbelievers of the gospel revelation, disobedient to its authority, and utterly injudicious and unfit for performing anything good; and so disapproved of God.

Reflections upon Chap. I.—Nothing is of higher authority, for our direction, than such inspired epistles. Nor can anything be more honourable than to be a servant of God and an inspired messenger of Christ. Nothing is more answerable to our need, or conducive to our happiness, than grace, mercy, and peace. Nothing more sure or comfortable than a promise of eternal life from God, who cannot lie. Nor can anything be better framed to convey these blessings to us than the gospel of Christ. As the work of preaching is of infinite importance, and the opposition to it strong and manifold, it requires many great qualifications in ministers, and great care in trying and setting them apart to their office.—False teachers and unruly professors create ministers much and hard work. But where wickedness abounds, professors are apt to be tainted with it. Men hardened in error need plain refutations; and stubborn sinners need severe rebukes. Such as have not right principles of grace implanted in their heart, and sound principles of truth in their belief, must necessarily err in their conduct. And it is not high professions, but holy lives, that characterize true Christians.

Chap. II.—Ver. 1. While therefore so many deluding and deluded persons of corrupt minds and practices surround you on every side, take peculiar care to preach, and insist upon, such truths and duties as are agreeable to, and put honour upon, the solid, pure, wholesome, and soul-healing doctrines of the gospel of Christ, and which lay all the professors thereof under the strongest obligations to piety and virtue, of whatsoever sex or station they be. 2. Exhort therefore the more aged Christian brethren to be very watchful, circumspect, and sedate, in their temper and carriage;—to behave with a venerable gravity in their words, actions, deportment, and dress;—to be prudent in their conduct, and temperate in eating and drinking;—to be sincere believers of the pure doctrines of the gospel, and to live answerably to them; fervent in love to God, to the saints, and to all men; not peevish, but patient under weakness, tribulations, and offences. 3. Exhort aged women to be exemplary in their dress and deportment, as becomes the professors of religion and holiness;—not false accusers, slanderers, or backbiters of others;—not inclined or addicted to immoderate drinking of liquors;—but careful instructors of children and others in the solid truths of the gospel, and laudable practices of virtue. 4, 5. And let them particularly instruct and encourage young women to be wise, cautiously avoiding everything that savours of lightness or lewdness; and, if married, to love their husbands and children in the most affectionate, endearing, and dutiful manner;—to be discreet, prudent, and obliging, in their whole behaviour; quite modest, virtuous, and chaste;—careful and industrious in their attention to their families; of a meek and humble temper;—kindly submissive and obedient to their husbands in everything lawful;—that so God and his gospel may not be reproached as encouraging disorderly practices. 6. In like manner, advise and excite young men, professing Christianity, to be considerate, chaste, meek, and sober, and to guard against the impetuous, rash, proud, wilful, and frolicsome temper common to youth. 7, 8. And if you would have these things believed and practised by others, be yourself an exact pattern of everything good and beneficial:—and in all your preaching, deliver nothing but the pure and unmixed doctrine of Christ, with a disinterested and single aim at the glory of God and good of souls; with becoming seriousness and gravity, with all simplicity and godly sincerity, and in plain, significant, scriptural, and determinate language,—that none may misunderstand it or be misled by it; that so your most critical, carping, and cavilling enemies may be put to shame, when they can find nothing to object either to your doctrine or practice.—9. And whereas some judaizing teachers attempt to persuade converted slaves that they are not bound to remain in subjection to their heathen masters, be you careful to inculcate on believing servants to continue, as much as ever, and from better principles, obedient to their masters in everything lawful; and to behave towards them in the most courteous, obliging, and diligent manner, cheerfully executing their commands without murmuring or disputing, and never returning any insolent or saucy answer when reproved or ordered to work. 10. Charge them to be strictly honest, never daring to waste, embezzle, or apply to their own use, any part of their master's goods, money, victuals, or time, beyond their allowance;—but always faithfully obeying their orders, and doing all they can for their honour and advantage,—that thus they may be a credit to the gospel, and their profession of it, and may even strike conviction into the consciences of their heathen masters, of the excellency, purity, and power of it, to render men virtuous in every station of life.—11. For the gospel of the grace of God, particularly in the New Testament dispensation of it, which so clearly displays the free favour of God, and so powerfully works grace in men's hearts, as it brings glad tidings of deliverance from sin and misery of every form, and of eternal happiness, and shows the way of obtaining salvation by faith in Christ, has now shone forth upon all nations, and upon all sorts and ranks of men.—12. Instructing, and effectually determining and obliging us who believe, that, renouncing, abhorring, and utterly forsaking all infidelity, idolatry, and impiety of every kind, contrary to the first table of the moral law, and all irregular inclinations and desires, which worldly men indulge and gratify, contrary to the second—we should carefully live in all purity and holiness, in a due government of our passions and appetites, and in a just, honest, and benevolent behaviour towards men, and in all acts of public and private devotion towards God, in the exercise of every grace, and celebration of all his ordinances, and observation of all his commandments, as long as we continue in this insnaring world. 13. Always encouraging and animating ourselves, by believing, expecting, and patiently waiting and longing for, the perfect, all-comprehending, and everlasting felicity which is the great object of our hopes, and for the glorious appearing of the great and mighty God, even our Lord Jesus Christ, who at the last day will manifest himself on his throne of judgment, in all the majesty, beauty, grandeur, and brightness of his divine and mediatorial glory, and in all the glory of his Father, and of all his holy and surrounding angels, and to be glorified in his saints. 14. And what may we not look for and hope from him, who so loved us as to give himself, soul and body, to the most painful ignominious death of the cross, that he might effectually redeem us from all the guilt, pollution, power, punishment, and inbeing of our sins; and sanctify, cleanse, and separate us to himself, as his own special, precious, and peculiar people, made his by his Father's gift, his own purchase, and our free and full consent in the day of his power,—that we might, with the most fervent zeal, glorify him in the performance of every duty appointed in his word, from the best principles and motives, and in the best manner, to the [*] 1. Does "the washing of regeneration" signify baptism, and does the apostle mean that "the renewing of the Holy Ghost" necessarily accompanies or flows from it? or, 2. Does "the washing of regeneration" signify baptism as merely a ritual sign to all, and seal to believers of "the renewing of the Holy Ghost?" or, 3. Is "the renewing of the Holy Ghost" merely expository of "the washing of regeneration?" The first of these views is supported by Hooker, Beveridge, G. Ridley, &c.; the second, by Bishop's Bible, Hall, Wells, Brown, T. Scott, A. Clarke, &c. The first of these views we unhesitatingly reject, and to the second, though supported by such eminent names, we prefer the third, translating the passage "by the washing of regeneration, even the renewing of the Holy Ghost." best ends. 15. These are things of such vast importance, and so vehemently opposed or corrupted by the enemies of Christ and his gospel, that you ought, in his name and authority, earnestly to explain and inculcate them, and sharply to confute and reprove the contrary errors and vices. And let your whole conduct be regulated with such prudence, faithfulness, and gravity, as may raise you and your office above the contempt of your most inveterate and scornful enemies.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—With gravity, sincerity, faithfulness, authority, and scripture evidence, ought ministers to preach the gospel, and apply it for exhortation, comfort, or reproof, as there is occasion. Nor can they expect that others will believe, or adversaries be silenced, unless their practice be answerable to their doctrine.—To adorn his profession, and honour the Lord Christ, every professor, according to his age or station in the world, must act up to God's commands himself, and promote holiness in others. The aged should be patterns and teachers of every Christian virtue and work; and the younger heartily disposed to receive their instructions and follow their advice. Sound principles, sober gravity, temperance, chastity, holiness, humility, diligence, honesty, and faithfulness, should deeply mark every Christian character. The grace of God, the tenor and scope of the gospel, the certain appearance of Christ to judgment, his death to redeem us from all iniquity, and the heavenly glory which he has prepared for us, in the strongest manner require and enforce our mortification of every lust, and earnest performance of every holy duty. A gospel of God's redeeming grace, manifested to all ranks and sorts of men, requires universal holiness from all. We cannot manifest grace to be in our heart unless we renounce every known sin. We can have no right hopes of heaven, unless we are given to the study of holiness as the preparation for it. We have no marks of being Christ's redeemed while sin is our pleasure and work. And we can have no evidence of being his peculiar people, if, in our temper and conduct, we are conformed to the world that lieth in wickedness.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. And as the same judaizing teachers dissuade Christians from owning the authority of heathen magistrates, see that you earnestly admonish and charge your people to be peaceably submissive to their supreme or subordinate civil governors, as the deputies and ministers of God; and to pay a conscientious obedience to all their just laws; and to perform every duty becoming their stations, whether it relate to God or to men. 2. Caution them against eviling any, of whatever rank, nation, or religion, or charging things falsely upon them, or even exposing their real faults, but in so far as some valuable end is to be gained thereby. Warn them against a litigious quarrelsome temper and behaviour; and teach them, on the contrary, to be of an equitable, candid, yielding spirit; and to manifest an humble, mild, and good temper in all their words and actions, towards all sorts of men, the very worst not excepted. 3. For indeed none can be worse than we once were, and should still have been, if left to ourselves; for, in our unregenerate state, we were destitute of all spiritual wisdom and knowledge relating to duty or happiness;—were disobedient to God, and his holy, just, and good laws;—were wanderers from him, and the way of life and peace; seduced by Satan, the world, and our own treacherous hearts;—were perfect slaves to many diversified sinful inclinations and sensual pleasures;—were foolishly spending our time in maliciously wishing and doing all the hurt we could to such as did not please us; and envying the honour or happiness of such as were above or around us;—and, on the whole, were most hateful and detestable in ourselves to God and to all good men, and full of bitter and implacable enmity one against another, according to our different passions, interests, or nations. 4. But, while we were in these awful circumstances, the transcendent kindness and infinite mercy of God, (the original Fountain of our salvation, through Jesus Christ,) towards men, shone forth with reviving and almighty efficacy, in the preaching and application of the gospel, to make a holy and happy change on us. 5. And it neither was, nor could be, any good work which we, who were so detestable and wicked, had performed, but merely of his own free, self-moving, undeserved, nay, abused and provoked mercy, and its compassionate propensions, that he brought us out of that deplorable condition into a state of salvation, through the cleansing virtue of regenerating grace, represented in baptism, and effected by the powerful operation of the Holy Ghost, 6. Whom, in his gifts and graces, God the Father graciously and abundantly bestowed upon us, according to his promise, through the mediation, merit, exaltation, and intercession of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; 7. That being, by the free gift of God, discharged from guilt and condemnation, and accepted as righteous unto eternal life on account of the righteousness of Jesus Christ imputed to us, we might be adopted into his family as his children, and made heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, according to the ground of hope laid down in the promises of the gospel given to us, and according to that grace of hope wrought in our souls, by which we expect eternal life through our Redeemer.—8. The important things which I have mentioned are true and faithful, and to be firmly believed, and frequently insisted upon in your ministrations, that they, who have believed in God through Christ, according to the gospel revelation, may be induced and excited, with all carefulness and diligence, to abound, excel, and lead the way to others, in all such works as are honourable to God, to Christ, and to their Christian character. And these doctrines, and the good works to which they manifestly tend, are every way excellent in their own nature; and, though God cannot be profited by them, they are exceedingly useful and beneficial to mankind. 9. But avoid and discountenance all senseless and idle debates, of which judaizing teachers are so fond,—as about descent from this or that particular tribe or family of Israel, or about the sense and obligation of the ceremonial law, which they desire to introduce into the gospel dispensation.—10. If any professed Christian entertain, and boldly assert, such errors as overthrow the fundamental principles of the gospel, especially if he appear to do it from prejudice against the truths themselves, as directly contrary to his own lusts, or out of a proud inclination to make himself the head of a party, let him be, once and again, solemnly, and in the most convincing manner, admonished of his sin and danger; and if after all this he obstinately persist in his destructive errors, let him be excommunicated from the visible church, and all familiarity with him, not required by the laws of nature, be carefully avoided by her members; 11. For it is sufficiently manifest that such a man hath utterly turned away from Christ the foundation, and from all true goodness, and that he sins against his own soul, and against the divine authority, light, and truth of the gospel revelation, if not against the convictions of his own conscience. And his persisting to avow such error is sufficient proof against him; yea, thereby he practically condemns himself, as not fit to have any fellowship with the true church of Christ.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Nothing is more absurd than for princes to hate and persecute true Christianity, which so effectually renders men good subjects. For nothing can more effectually influence men to every good word and work, than the believing consideration of their marvellously gracious redemption by God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Dreadful is the wickedness in heart and life of every man by nature: and transcendent the grace, precious the blood, and almighty the influence, that can save such sinners;—that can without, nay, contrary to, their own deserts, renew their hearts after the image of God, justify their persons before him, and render them his adopted heirs of eternal life. Base is our conduct if, after all, we willingly employ either heart or tongue, hand or foot, in iniquity. The doctrines of the gospel, believed with the heart, are the most real and effectual means of making us careful to maintain good works. Honourable would it be if every professed Christian were thereby distinguished from others. And happy would be the church if all useless controversies were shunned and stifled; every erroneous and schismatical person, after due pains taken for his conviction, were solemnly excommunicated; and faithful ministers were all of one mind, heart, and way, in the truth as it is in Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

How much Christianity is intended to cultivate the domestic, the political, and the social virtues, appears from the admirable precepts of chap. ii. and iii; and how much the success of their cultivation depends upon ministerial faithfulness, is obvious from the personal charges addressed to Titus, ch. 2. 7, 15. & 3. 8. This epistle has also a special value in the authority which it furnishes for the exercise of a careful and efficient discipline, not merely over church members guilty of gross immorality, as in 1 Cor. 5. 4, 5, but also over such as adopt, assert, or propagate erroneous doctrines contrary to the word of God. These the apostle instructs Titus to admonish; but, if obstinate, he commands him to reject them from the fellowship of the church.—ED.

PAUL, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon* our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer,

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-soldier, and to the church in thy house:

3 Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers,

5 Hearing of thy love and faith,† which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

6 That ‡ the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

7 For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

A. M. cir. 4069. A. D. cir. 64.

* This address has evident reference to the meaning of the several names: Philemon, "affectionate, beloved;" Apphia, the title of affection from a brother to a sister; Archippus, "the ruler of a horse" — consequently addressed as Paul's "fellow-soldier." And it is not improbable he might have been such —as in our own days the army has trained up some of the most valiant and faithful soldiers of the Prince of peace.—ED.

† Philemon's "love and faith toward the Lord Jesus" is a phrase perfectly intelligible; so also is "love toward all saints;" but what is the meaning of "faith toward all saints"? even a faith that, taking Christ for the head, takes them for the members, and works toward them by love in every possible communication of good (ver. 6).—ED.

EXPLANATORY NOTES.—Ver. 4—7. In reflecting on your well-known faith in Christ, and love to all the saints, I heartily thank God for his kindness bestowed upon you; and pray that your faith and love may be still more and more effectual to render you still more generous and benevolent; that they, who hear of, and especially they who receive your favours, may be excited to make the most grateful acknowledgments of those kind and holy dispositions, which, by virtue derived from Christ, and to his honour, work for the relief and support of his servants and poor members for his sake.—It is a great comfort to me in my imprisonment, and to Timothy, my brother here, to understand that the hungry appetites of poor private Christians, and holy ministers, are abundantly relieved and satisfied by your charitable donations.

another's gracious comforts and success. And it is an honour for the wealthy to bestow abundantly on the cause, servants, and poor members of Christ. God can marvellously bring good out of great evil—can make robbery, and the running away from lawful service, an occasion of bringing a person to the gospel, attended by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven—and sinful falls the means of bringing about saving conversion. What an inexpressible alteration for the better converting grace makes on a person! And readily we ought to forgive such as have offended and injured us, if they return to their duty, and especially if God's grace has made them our brethren in Christ. A high esteem and affectionate regard should Christians show to the instruments of their conversion. And with earnestness and prudence ministers, or others, should interpose their influence in favour of those who penitently return to their duty. Thrice happy is that church where ministers and people are knit together in cordial affection, and labour for one another's real welfare, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, by much fervent prayer; and where peculiar care is taken to refresh, comfort, and provide for the aged, poor, and persecuted.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

This epistle possesses a special value as it exhibits the true and only principle of human equality—union in Christ Jesus. Onesimus, the slave, is now a son to Paul, and a brother to Philemon; yet this epistle equally sustains the distinction of rights and ranks, and even Paul beseeches as a friend, but does not command as a superior (ver. 10, 13, 14). It also possesses a special value as teaching the doctrine of restitution, unless the injured party choose freely to forgive. Nor is it less remarkable as it depicts Paul not merely in the public character of an apostle, but in the private character of a domestic friend, and discovers him as truly amiable and childlike in the one, as he is great and manly in the other.—Ed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL, THE APOSTLE,

TO THE

H E B R E W S.

Ancient copies and translations, the testimonies of the highest ancient and modern authorities, the style of the writer's quotations from the Old Testament, his method of reasoning from them, his imprisonment in Italy, his intimate connexion with Timothy, (chap. xiii. 23), as well as the manner of his closing benedictions —all concur in testifying that Paul was the writer of this epistle. The omission of his name and office, as well as of the residence and characteristics of the parties to whom he wrote, contrary to his uniform custom in his other epistles, is an objection of no weight against all this array of testimony. That the parties to whom it was sent were well and personally known to the writer, appears from chap. x. 34, and xiii. 18, 19, 23; and that they were Jews converted to Christianity, is evident from the nature of the subjects handled, the scriptural evidence adduced, the hopes expressed, and the exhortations to constancy so earnestly enforced. That it was written from Italy appears from these words, "they of Italy salute you;" and that it was near the end of his first imprisonment seems to be intimated by the confident manner in which he says, "I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner," chap. xiii. 19. The omission of the apostle's name and office, as well as of the parties to whom he wrote, has been accounted for on the supposition, that as the unconverted Jews were strongly prejudiced against Paul, and, by consequence, against his friends, nothing was put forward that might alarm their prejudices, and cause them to throw down the book unread. This supposition is highly probable; for the apostle, whom the light of Christianity had set free from all prejudices, felt great tenderness for the prejudices of others, and was always ready to sacrifice self, and, so far as a good conscience would permit, to become all things to all men, that he might gain some.

The substance of the epistle may be stated as follows:—1. The superiority of Christ's person, not merely above Moses, but above the angels, by whose ministry the Jewish institutions were promulgated—with the most careful enunciation, that while he was "Jehovah who laid the foundations of the earth," he was also "partaker of flesh and blood." These are the main objects of the first two chapters. 2. The superior dignity and perfect efficacy of Christ's priesthood, and the insufficiency of the priesthood of Aaron; together with the special advantages of Christ being a suffering Redeemer, instead of a temporal monarch, as the Jews had expected, occupy from the third to the end of the eighth chapter. 3. The emblematic nature and utter insufficiency of the Levitical ceremonies, farther than as shadows of the substance, copies of the original, with the perfect sufficiency of the sacrifice of Christ for the redemption of all that believe, is the purpose of the ninth and tenth chapters. 4. To obviate the Jewish objection, that to embrace Christianity was to apostatize from the religion of Moses, the old religion, he proceeds to show, in the eleventh chapter, that, since the beginning of the world, the servants of God have all acted upon one simple and identical principle—faith in the truth, promises, and personal attributes of God; and, consequently, that to embrace Christianity, so far from being apostasy, was merely a farther and more noble extension of the original and unchangeable principle of all true religion. 5. In the last two chapters, he follows up all his reasoning with directions and exhortations to patience under persecution for the truth's sake, and closes with the benediction "Grace be with you all."—Ed.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1. To convince you of the superior excellency of the gospel dispensation above that of the law, I would have you seriously observe, that God, who anciently, at different times and in several degrees, and in different forms of dreams, visions, and immediate impulses, gradually communicated his mind relative to the redemption of sinful men to our forefathers by his servants the prophets, 2. Has now, when the Jewish constitution is drawing to an end, and under the last dispensation of his grace, given us a far more complete manifestation of his will in the gospel, by a messenger infinitely more glorious, even his eternal, only begotten, and incarnate Son; who, being by nature the most high and only true God, has an original right to inherit all things; and who, as Mediator, is God's first-born, Head over all things to his church; and by whom, in the strictest connexion and co-operation, he made the heavens and the earth, and all that is in them, and forms all the different ages and dispensations of time and eternity; 3. Who being, in his divine person, the illustrious brightness of the glory, and the most exact character and image of the person, of the Father, having the very same nature and essential properties,—and supporting and governing all ranks, orders, and individuals of creatures by the almighty operation of his mere will,—when, as our great High Priest, he had, by his own obedience and suffering, fully expiated all the sins of his people, did, in virtue of his finished atonement, and in correspondence to the dignity of his person, ascend to heaven in our nature, to take possession of a glorious state, the most fixed, durable, and inexpressibly exalted; 4. Being in his person, and in his office of Mediator, inconceivably superior to the highest angels,—having by nature and by his Father's appointment, a name, title, and character, far too high to be applied to any of them. 5. For (to consider this matter with respect to his divine nature) whom, even of the loftiest angels, did God ever represent as his essential, his eternal, his only begotten Son? 6. Nay, when he brought him into our lower world to obey and suffer in our stead, he required all his holy angels to pay all divine honours to him, as his Son and their Creator. 7. Again, when he speaks of angels, those noblest of creatures, he represents them as created to be his servants, for executing his will with great strength, speed, and activity. 8. But, in a manner inexpressibly more exalted, he represents his Son Christ as a divine person, the true God, whose dominion is everlasting and unchangeable, and as ruling his extensive empire over all things with infinite equity, truth, and righteousness; 9. And as one who has a natural and necessary regard to holiness and equity, and hatred of all iniquity, and who has brought in an everlasting righteousness, and is furnished with gifts, graces, and glory, infinitely above the measure of angels or believers. 10—12. Yea, as the Creator of heaven and earth, who himself existed from eternity, and as unchangeable in himself, while he changes all creatures at his pleasure: 13. But which of the loftiest angels did ever God call to sit enthroned in majesty, power, and glory, at his right hand, till sin, Satan, death, and all his and his people's enemies, should be subdued under his feet as vanquished rebels? 14. Nay, are not all these spiritual beings placed in an infinitely lower station, being no more than messengers and servants of Christ, whom he employs in revealing his mind to, and in protecting, serving, and assisting in life or death, his chosen people; who, under him, and in his right, are, through grace, appointed to be highly honoured, and eternally to enjoy his complete salvation?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Blessed be God that he hath spoken so much in mercy and grace to men, and that we have so full evidence of the divine authority of both Old and New Testaments. Wisely hath he suited the manner of his revelations to the state of his church and the necessities of mankind. And now we enjoy the fullest, the clearest, and last discovery of his will that is to be expected on earth. Unbounded is the glory of our Redeemer, as the Son of God and our Mediator. Being essentially one God with, but personally distinct from, and equal to, his eternal Father, he is the creator, proprietor, and preserver of all things. His blood, infinitely precious and powerful, atoned for, and purges away our sins; and in virtue thereof he is enthroned at the right hand of God;—there he for ever reigns the self-existent JEHOVAH, the eternal and immutable God, the object of adoration to angels and men! How honoured then are his saints, who are members of his flesh, his blood, and his bones! Safe are they under his care, and guarded and ministered to by millions of his angels. And rich is their provided, their prepared, their infallibly secured inheritance of eternal salvation. How dead then ought they to be to this perishing world and all its concerns!

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. Since Christ is thus infinitely superior to the ancient prophets, and even to the loftiest angels, it highly concerns us, who live under the more eminently glorious dispensation of the gospel, both in respect of duty and interest, to attend the more diligently, affectionately, and steadfastly, unto—and with humble faith and love to esteem, embrace, meditate upon, and seriously improve—the everlasting doctrines thereof, which have been delivered unto us in the ministry of the word; and to retain them carefully in our hearts and memories, and persevere in our holy profession of them: lest at any time, through the corruption, heedlessness, treachery, and prejudices of our hearts, or the temptations of Satan and the snares of this evil world, we should be carried away from the truth, and suffer it to slip out of our minds, and so should lose the benefit of it, and perish under its gracious administrations. 2. For if the law of Moses, which was given at mount Sinai by the ministration of angels, acting as Christ's messengers, was established by divine authority, and enforced with an awful sanction; and every contemptuous violation of any of its precepts, or act of wilful disobedience to the authority of God in it, was severely punished with death; 3. How can we expect to escape the judgments of God, in time or eternity, if, through carelessness or unbelief, we despise and reject the glorious gospel; which alone reveals, exhibits, and offers to us that spiritual, heavenly, and eternal salvation which was purchased by the infinitely precious blood of Christ, and comprehends in it deliverance from so great sinfulness and misery, and an advancement to so great holiness, happiness, and glory, as answers all our wants, and infinitely transcends all our conceptions:—the first clear publication of which, without the vail of typical shadows, was begun in the personal ministrations of our Lord Jesus Christ himself on earth, and was further explained and confirmed to us Jews by his inspired apostles, evangelists, and others, who themselves heard him preach these glad tidings of salvation! 4. Yea, to assure us of the infallible certainty of their testimony, God himself attested their integrity, and the truth of their doctrine, by manifold miraculous operations and effects on the bodies of men; and by an abundant bestowal of spiritual gifts; such as prophecy, wisdom, knowledge, and and [e]gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the [d]world to come,[†] whereof we speak.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, [e]What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

7 [f]Thou madest him [‡]a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

8 Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him:

9 But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.[§]

10 For [g]it became him, [h]for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing [i]many sons unto glory, to make [k]the Captain of their salvation perfect[‖] through sufferings.

11 For both he that sanctifieth,[*] and they who are sanctified are all of one:[*] for which cause he is not ashamed to call them [l]brethren, 12 Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.

13 And again, [m]I will put my trust in him. And again, [n]Behold I, and the children which God hath given me.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, [o]he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death [p]he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 [q]And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

16 For verily [†]he took not on him the nature[‡] of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

18 For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour[§] them that are tempted.

utterance, speaking with, or interpreting, languages they never learned,—which were dispensed by the Holy Ghost, in their different kinds and degrees, according to the good pleasure of his sovereign will. 5. But to proceed in our comparison of Christ with the holy angels,—it is manifest that, in his mediatorial office, as well as in his divine Person, he is infinitely superior to them;—for though God employed them as his heralds in publishing the law at Sinai, and employs them as ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation, yet he has not given them any headship or ruling power over the New Testament church, nor are its doctrines, ordinances, privileges, or blessings, derived from, or even published by them. 6—8. But the inspired Psalmist David, when contemplating the magnificent works of God, breaks out into a rapture of admiration, that God should so favour, support, and assist man; and, after a short debasement, constitute him the universal Lord and Sovereign of all his creatures, not one excepted;—that he might conquer, subdue, and triumph over his enemies, casting them, like slaves and captives, beneath his feet. Now it is fully evident, from observation and experience, that never, since the fall, neither mankind in general, nor any particular one of them, has ever had an absolute and universal dominion over all things. 9. But though Jesus Christ has not yet put an end to all the opposition of his and his people's enemies, we certainly know, from the testimony of inspired writers, and from the marvellous effusion of the Holy Ghost in his miraculous gifts and graces, and the wonderful effects of the gospel in convincing and converting multitudes,—that he, in consequence of his debasement, obedience, sufferings, and death, in the stead of all his children, Jews and Gentiles, is exalted to the highest glory, power, and authority,—that he might be in full capacity to accomplish the great end of his death in their effectual salvation. 10. For however offensive the doctrine of his debasement may be to carnal Jews, who only look for a temporal deliverer, it infinitely well became, and tended to the singular glory of, the justice, holiness, wisdom, goodness, and other perfections of God the Creator, Preserver, and last End of all things,—and of his holy law and government,—in bringing his chosen, adopted, and regenerated, children to their complete happiness in heaven, to prepare and consecrate his only begotten Son, as their Prince, Leader, and Author of eternal salvation, to his heavenly work of intercession and government, by his suffering on their behalf and in their stead. 11. For both Jesus the Redeemer, who, by his blood, purges away the guilt and filth of our sin, and we, his redeemed, who have our sins purged away, are, by the constitution of the covenant of grace, one in the view of the law; and are partakers of the same human nature, in the same condition of weakness, trouble, and mortality; on which account Christ, however great and glorious, does, and in the last day will, more openly avow us, however mean and despicable, to be his brethren; 12. Engaging to his Father that he, in his personal ministrations, and by his servants, will make known the glory, and celebrate the praises of his perfections and counsels among his brethren, effectually called and gathered to him as his peculiar people. 13. And, like one having communion with us in human affections, sufferings, and graces, he represents himself as trusting in God for support, assistance, success in, and reward of his work, and as ready to do whatever is necessary for our future or eternal salvation, who, as his spiritual seed, were given to him by his Father. 14. Since therefore these children, whom God has given to his Son to be saved by him, are equally partakers of immortal souls and mortal bodies as the rest of mankind, he also, having existed the Son of God from all eternity, did, in the fulness of time, assume a true human nature, with all its essential properties and sinless infirmities, into personal union with himself, that he, as their Kinsman-redeemer, in the same nature which sinned, might make a proper satisfaction to the law and justice of God; and that thus—by means of his meritorious death, which he suffered in their room and stead, to take away their sins and the curse of the law, and to purchase their happy resurrection and eternal life—he might entirely conquer, overthrow, and make void the power of that great destroying adversary the devil, who, by means of Adam's first transgression, had brought sin and death upon men, and has a limited empire over death, to inflict it upon obstinate and incorrigible sinners, and to be their everlasting tormentor in eternal death; 15. And that through his suffering of death he might destroy death in its destructive influence; and deliver his people from the sting, dominion, and terrors of it, and in due time give them a complete victory and triumph over it,—even though their inward sense of guilt, the terrors of the Jewish dispensation, or Heathen ignorance of a happy immortality, had long rendered the thoughts of their death enslaving and terrible. 16. For, to accomplish these important ends, he did not lay hold upon the nature of angels, by taking it into personal union with his divine, as if he intended to recover any of them who fell from their original holiness and happiness; but, passing by them, he laid hold on, and personally united to himself, the far inferior nature of man, as derived from the patriarch Abraham, to whom God promised that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. 17. From which it is plainly evident, that, in order to Christ's duly answering the great design of his office as their Redeemer and Saviour, it was thought fit and necessary that he should partake of their nature in all its essentials; and be made in suffering, and everything but sin, like unto those brethren whom he was to bring to glory;—that so, by his own experience of sufferings in their stead, he might be the better qualified, and the more feelingly engaged, to act the part of a compassionate tender-hearted High Priest for them towards God, in making satisfaction to his Father's justice for their sins, and in purchasing and procuring peace and reconciliation for them. 18. And having thus experimentally endured the temptations of Satan and troubles of this world, as well as the weight of his Father's wrath, and triumphed over them, he is the more fit and inclined to sympathize with, support, comfort, and relieve his brethren, when exercised with any like temptations, afflictions, or trials.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—In the superior excellency of its principal preacher, in its manifold and marvellous attestation, and in the full and extensive salvation which it exhibits, the gospel far transcends the law of Moses. With great care and reverence then ought we to hear, receive, and retain it, and all the spiritual and eternal blessings which it conveys. To neglect so great a salvation is one of the most atrocious crimes, and exposes men to the most terrible vengeance of God.—How astonishing is it that God should leave angels to perish in their sins, and fix his love upon men, and unite his Son to them! But never can we sufficiently adore the excesses of that love through which we behold him in our nature, for a time debased, suffering, and dead; and then gloriously exalted to his Father's right hand, as head over all things to his gospel church, and expecting till all his enemies be made his footstool. Infinite is the mercy that God should thus bring many sinful men, as his chosen, adopted, and regenerated children, to eternal life through the sufferings and death of his Son. Yea, herein all his perfec-

7 Wherefore, ([g]as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

14 For we are made [h]partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end;

15 While it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

Delightful is Jesus' connexion with us, as our elder Brother, and the source of all our sanctification, comfort, and victory over sin, Satan, fears, troubles, and death. And amazing is his Priesthood, and kind his manner of executing it. But great indeed are the effects of this love, that by the death of my divine Saviour I am made alive and free; and sin, devils, and death, are conquered;—that, by his temptations and trials, I am succoured under and delivered from mine! Since he then is merciful, let me always flee into his bosom: and since he is faithful, let me always adore and trust him.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. Since the great Author of the gospel is so much more excellent and useful than all the former prophets, and even angels, let me beseech you, my dear brethren by descent from Abraham, and in the judgment of charity, brethren not only to me and all the saints, but even to Christ himself,—separated to him by profession, devoted to his service, sanctified by his blood and Spirit, and effectually called by the gospel to a state of union and fellowship with him, and to a full right to, and anticipating possession of, all the privileges of the new covenant, more attentively to consider, and seriously reflect upon, the supereminent dignity of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, as the messenger of God, reveals to us the whole of the gospel truth which we profess, and as our great High Priest is the subject matter thereof, who confirms and ratifies it by his death,—and so is the author, life, and glory of our heavenly calling, and of our holy profession of his name, and of all our love to and hopes towards God through him; 2. Who being chosen, called, ordained, and sent by God, to declare his whole will relative to the faith, worship, obedience, and salvation of the church, performed his work with a fidelity infinitely superior to Moses, his noted type, whom God himself attested as singularly faithful in publishing the whole system of laws and revelations given him, and in his whole government of his chosen people in the wilderness. 3. But, notwithstanding this honourable testimony, Christ is infinitely more honourable in himself, being not a mere man like Moses, but truly God-man in one person, and is worthy of infinitely greater honour, as he is the Former, Proprietor, Lord, and Head of the church, whereas Moses was but a member of it. 4. Nay, being the great Provider of all the materials, and Manager of all the affairs, of the Jewish or gospel church, for his own glory, he can be nothing less than God himself. 5. And Moses indeed, not as a lord, or proprietor, but as a servant, acted most faithfully in delivering the laws and ordinances of God about everything relative to the Jewish church, that he and they might be the distinguished figures of the far more excellent things which were to be more clearly revealed under the New Testament. 6. But though Christ graciously condescended to take upon him the form of a servant in his human nature and office capacity; yet, in what he has done relative to the church, he acted not merely as a servant, but as his Father's equal and only begotten Son, Heir of all things, and Lord of it, as his house or family, which he purchased with his blood, gathered and formed, furnished, ordered, and governs, by his word and Spirit;—and of which all of us are members, who, being truly united to him by faith, do, notwithstanding all the tribulations which befall us, steadfastly persevere in the faith, profession, hopes, comforts, and holiness of the gospel.—7. To warn such of you as are but nominal professors against utter apostasy, and quicken real believers to hold on and hold out to the end in their holy profession of Christ and his gospel, let me remind you of the charge given by the Holy Ghost to our fathers in the days of David. Now immediately, and without delay, while the present season of God's mercy and patience lasts, and his messengers are sent to you, if ye would attend to, regard, and embrace what he says by them, for your spiritual and eternal advantage. 8, 9. Take heed that ye do not wilfully shut your eyes against his light, nor stop your ears against his voice, and resist his Spirit, and so harden your hearts against his fear, and against all his methods of wisdom and love, for your present and future happiness, as your forefathers did, by their provoking unbelief, strifes, and murmurings, in the wilderness of Arabia. I tried them by diversified dispensations of providence; and they for forty years, beholding my marvellous work of mercy and judgment, often put my faithfulness, power, kindness, patience, and just vengeance to the trial; as if they had doubted my ability and willingness to fulfil my promises or threatenings. 10. Therefore, being all that time sorely displeased, and at length wearied out, with their repeated and aggravated unbelief and insolent behaviour, I solemnly declared them incorrigible in the error and perverseness of their hearts, and obstinately ignorant of, and inattentive to, my doctrines, laws, and ordinances, or any upright, holy, and peaceable conversation. 11. And, to render my threatening absolutely irreversible, I sware by myself, that, on account of their high and numberless provocations obstinately persisted in, not one of them, from twenty years old and upward, except Caleb and Joshua, who were men of another spirit, should ever enter into Canaan, which I had promised to Abraham and his seed, as a land of quietness, peace, and safety, in which I myself, in the ark of the covenant, would dwell among them; but should every one of them disgracefully die in the wilderness. 12. Being therefore warned by these awful examples, left for our admonition, and excited by a consideration of the dignity of Christ's person and office, and of our near concern with him, and of the rich advantages we may hope for from him, take heed, my dear Christian brethren, examine and watch over yourselves to the utmost, lest at any time, through the influence of Satan, the world, and your own corrupt hearts, unbelief,—which, proceeding from an habitually sinful temper of soul, by distrusting God, and giving him the lie, reflects the highest dishonour upon his authority, sincerity, uprightness, faithfulness, power, and grace; and is the most noted and effectual spring and root of obstinate and final apostasy from God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who has all life in himself, and is the Author of all spiritual and eternal life to believers,—should prevail in you. 13. And, as a mean of preventing this dreadful evil, not only guard against the first workings of unbelief and apostasy in yourselves; but, while your life and the day of gospel grace is continued with you, stir up and encourage one another, without delay, and upon every opportunity, to steadfastness in the faith, and to a holy and circumspect watchfulness against carnality of mind and negligence, and against the temptations of Satan, the allurements and terrors of the world, and everything which tends to carry you away from Christ and the gospel; lest any of you should be lulled asleep and stupified, and so led aside from him through the guileful and treacherous influence of indwelling corruption, magnifying the terror of sufferings for his sake, and the advantage of worldly ease, pleasure, affluence, or safety, and with fair pretences varnishing over the destructive ways of sin. 14. And it is of the utmost consequence, for preserving us from this deceitfulness of sin and hardness of heart, to take heed that we be indeed real Christians; for it is manifest that we have a happy partnership with Christ in his righteousness, Spirit, grace, and benefits, as persons vitally united to him, and interested in all that he is and hath, when we hold fast our spiritual subsistence in him, and steadfastly maintain, and to the end of our lives persevere in our holy profession of him against all opposition and danger. 15. Take heed therefore now to yourselves, and do all that in you lies to fortify one

[§] He that is entered into his rest, is rendered by Brown and other eminent expositors, "every believer;" and "his own works" are (ver. 10) understood to signify his "former works of wickedness, self-righteousness, conflicts and trials." But surely if "every believer" were already entered into the rest spoken of, there were no use in exhorting him to "labour to enter" into it (see ver. 11). Nor can ceasing from "works of wickedness" or "self-righteousness" be justly drawn into comparison with God's ceasing from his works of creation! The rest spoken of is, therefore, that rest from labours and troubles into which they "who die in the Lord" (Rev. 14. 13) do immediately enter (2 Cor. 5. 8), and in which they shall be found "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with the angels of his power. 2 Thes. 1. 7. another against apostasy; and if, while life and opportunity are continued, ye would believe and obey what God inculcates upon you for your good, beware of contracting an insensibility and hardness of heart, as your fathers did, when they provoked the anger of the Lord against them by their unbelief and rebellion in the wilderness. 16. For most of them, after they had heard the law awfully published by God himself at Sinai, and had received the instructions relative to their ceremonial worship, instead of being suitably affected by it, indulged themselves in the highest provocation against God; nevertheless, Caleb and Joshua were men of a better spirit and conduct, and entered into the promised land. 17. But with whom of these Israelites was God so highly offended forty years, as to exclude them from the promised land of Canaan? was it not with those only who had repeatedly and notoriously rebelled against him through unbelief?—and whose dead bodies, on account of their wickedness, lay slain, like miserable and detestable objects, in the Arabian desert, through which they travelled to Canaan? 18. And against whom did God, in his just and awful indignation, swear that they should never be admitted to enjoy the privileges, peace, and blessings of that rest in Canaan? was it not against those only who, notwithstanding all their professions and obligations, warnings and excitements, rejected God and his gifts by their unbelief? 19. It is therefore plain, from the whole, that unbelief was the root and spring of all their other provocations, by which they forfeited all right and claim to the promise of admission into the typical rest of Canaan.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—In dignity how far, how inconceivably far, Jesus, the God, the Maker, the Lord, the Proprietor and Governor of the church, transcends Moses, a mere man formed by himself, a member, a servant, in it! Faithful was he to his Father, who constituted him mediator. And worthy is he to be contemplated, adored, trusted, and rejoiced in, and openly professed. But unworthy are those to be held members of his church who are not washed in his blood, sanctified by his Spirit, and effectually called by his grace. Alarming and earnest are God's calls and invitations to men: indispensably necessary is a present attention to his voice, and acceptance of his favours: and fearful is our guilt, and dreadful our danger, if we harden our hearts, and contemn his offers of grace. In nothing does the deceitfulness of sin more appear than in men's obstinate unbelief. If it reign in our heart, there is no apostasy but may be expected in our life, and no plague or damnation will be too dreadful for our reward. Alas, what multitudes of gospel hearers perish in this sin! And who knows what numbers are, by an angry God, consigned over to the power of it, and to irreversible condemnation for it, even in this life.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1. Since therefore God, as a warning to us, dealt so severely with our fathers for their disobedience and unbelief, it ought to be our deep concern to maintain an awful reverence of his greatness, holiness, and justice, and a religious dread of provoking him;—not to dismay and dishearten, but to excite us to the most diligent use of all appointed means, in an humble dependence on his grace, for our own and others' preservation from apostasy and its terrible consequences,—lest, when God, who is the Contriver and Author of, and who delights in, this rest, as recorded, exhibited, and given to us in the gospel, a gracious promise of admission to a state of peace and lively fellowship with him through Christ, in truly evangelical worship and obedience in this world, and of a glorious peace in the world to come, ye should, through sloth and unbelief, reject and forsake that promise or rest, or seem to faint in your Christian course towards it: 2. For the gospel of salvation has been now preached to us, as it was more obscurely to them; but the precious truth of God did not in the least turn to the real advantage of many of them, when they heard it by Moses, or other inspired messengers of God; because they did not closely apply and appropriate the same to their hearts, and feed thereon by faith as the nourishment of their souls, and no more will that which we hear be eventually profitable to us, unless we receive and digest it by faith. 3, 4. But as all entrance into God's promised rest is by believing, so those of us, who have by a true and lively faith received and rested on Christ alone for salvation, do enter into a state of spiritual and evangelical rest and peace with God through him, according to the light and grace of the New Testament dispensation; and we now, by faith and hope, in gospel worship enter into the heavenly rest, as a pledge and assurance of our personal entrance into the full enjoyment of it in due time:—for by comparing the several passages of Scripture which speak of God's rest, it is plain that there remains for us New Testament believers a rest far more excellent than that of Canaan. Even God's oath, excluding the unbelieving Hebrews from Canaan, supposed that all true believers should enter into his rest; so that here was a rest promised 2500 years after the rest of the creation had taken place, on the seventh day of the week and of time. 5. And, moreover, this oath, as it stands in David's Psalm, must not be understood as merely relating to the Hebrews' entrance into Canaan, which had taken place more than 400 years before, but also to a rest which then remained to be entered into. 6. Since then God's threatening against them who believed not implied that some should actually enter in, and those to whom that typical rest was first preached, through their unbelief, did not enter; 7. Therefore God, by David, fixes another day of entering into his rest, and calls the Jews carefully to improve it, plainly intimating, that what is there said related to a rest which was to be enjoyed long after they were in possession of the promised land: 8. For if Joshua, the son of Nun, that noted type of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, had put the Hebrews into the full possession of the rest ultimately intended in that psalm, the Holy Ghost would not, by David, have mentioned another season in which the Hebrews, who dwelt in possession of Canaan, were to seek a further rest, which could be no other than that which, being typified by the former, was to be introduced by Jesus Christ the Messiah. 9. Since therefore neither the rest of the seventh day sabbath, nor the rest of the settlement in Canaan, could be intended by that TO-DAY mentioned by David, it is evident there must still remain, under the gospel state, a more complete and glorious rest, typified by the former, which is to be inherited by the true people of God, and which includes a spiritual rest by faith in Christ from Jewish ceremonies—from the law as a covenant—and the holy and joyful rest of the New Testament sabbath, in commemoration of his resurrection; and principally that heavenly rest of perpetual and immediate communion with Christ, of which all the preceding rests are but types, pledges, or foretastes: 10. For our Lord Jesus, having finished his obedience, sufferings, and death, rose again, and took possession of his heavenly glory, and so rested from his labours of purchasing our eternal redemption; even as God, when he had finished his work of creation, rested on the seventh day, and formed no more new kinds of creatures. And every believer, who has entered into the spiritual rest of the gospel state and New Testament sabbath, ceases from loving, or wilfully practising his former works of wickedness, and from resting on his once-beloved works of self-righteousness;—and when, after finishing his course of obedience, conflicts, and trials, he enters into the complete and heavenly rest, he will perfectly cease from everything selfish, sinful, or troublesome. 11. Since then there remains for

* Honour—that is, "office," as the Greek word is often used.—Note. This text can never be tortured into the service of the papal succession; for the question is merely concerning the appointment of a Jewish high priest, who was superseded by Christ; and Christ, no doubt, has many ambassadors, but can have no successor, because "he is a priest for ever." us a rest inexpressibly more safe, sweet, glorious, and lasting, than that of Canaan, let us, in the use of all appointed means, and in dependence on divine grace, with the utmost diligence labour to overcome all difficulties, and break through all oppositions and discouragements, that we may here enjoy all the refreshing and delightful privileges and blessings of the gospel state, and hereafter arrive at the still more refreshing and delightful heavenly glory,—and stir up one another to seek after it: lest, through our slothfulness, carnal fear, and unbelief, we should fall short of it, as the Israelites in the wilderness, notwithstanding their distinguished relation to God, fell short of the rest in Canaan through their unbelief and cowardice. 12. And there is the greatest reason to maintain a godly jealousy over ourselves, and one another, and there is noble encouragement for the utmost care and caution;—for our Lord Jesus Christ, as the Word of life, has life in himself, and is the author of it to others,—and the written word, by the Spirit, has a quickening virtue to raise dead souls:—yea, Christ, who is the almighty, omnipresent, omniscient, and heart-searching God, renders it a powerful mean of convincing the conscience, searching and affecting the whole heart, and subduing every thought and affection to the obedience of himself. 13. Nor can any of us escape his critical observation, or the searching influence of his word,—there being no creature, of whatever rank or kind, that lies concealed from his all-comprehensive view, but all persons and things, even the most secret thoughts, desires, hopes, and fears, tempers, and dispositions, are most evidently exposed and clearly manifested to the critical and all-seeing eye of him, to whom we must give an exact account of our state, qualities, inclinations, and conduct, in the last judgment. 14. Since therefore it is so dangerous to despise, neglect, or apostatize from the truths of the gospel, and since we have in this Jesus Christ, our present Observer and future Judge,—so incomparable a High Priest, inconceivably great, divine, and excellent,—thoroughly qualified for, and exalted in, his office, —the most difficult and fundamental part of which he has performed on earth, and the remainder of which he is now executing in heavenly intercession for us, —let us be thereby encouraged in the exercise of faith, love, and holy obedience, and with steadfastness, diligence, and constant perseverance, to maintain a free and open confession of him, and professed subjection to him. 15. Nor is this our glorious High Priest less willing than able to sympathize with and relieve us under all our distresses; nor is he, even in heaven, insensible of, or unaffected with, our wants and weaknesses, miseries and dangers; but having, in his state of humiliation, experimentally known whatever we undergo in our temptations and troubles, though without sin, he is at once infinitely fitted to be our pattern in bearing them, and to sympathize tenderly with us in them, and to take away the iniquity which we unavoidably fall into by means of them. 16. Let us therefore, in view of his superlatively excellent and efficacious Priesthood, and his execution of it, in offering himself a sacrifice to satisfy God's justice, and make atonement for our sins, and his continual intercession for us at his right hand, boldly draw near to God by faith, in prayer and every other ordinance of gospel worship,—since he is now seated, not on a throne of justice, to execute deserved vengeance upon us, but on a throne of free and condescending mercy and grace, to commune with and bless us,—that, with familiar and holy freedom, and humble confidence in him, as our reconciled God and Father, we may ask of, and receive from him, the most merciful forgiveness of our sins, and compassionate relief under all our straits and miseries; and, finding favour in his sight, may obtain all gracious assistances and supplies, in every season of want, difficulty, trouble, temptation, or danger, especially the most perplexing.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Graciously has God maintained his gospel in the world all along since Adam's fall, though in different degrees of light. And when it is now set before us in its fulness and clearness, we ought carefully to beware of contemning and rejecting it. Alas, what multitudes hear it without ever being profited by it!—No hearing, without cordial believing, will avail to the salvation of our souls. And unless we immediately receive and digest what we hear, God may quickly swear in his wrath that we shall never enter into his rest.—Greatly preferable to that of Canaan, yea, infinitely excellent is that new covenant, evangelical, and eternal rest into which true believers enter along with Christ!—Powerful and efficacious is God's written word in the hand of Christ, the living and life-giving Word. With divine efficacy it penetrates into men's souls, for their conviction, reformation, and comfort; or for their condemnation and confusion. And infinitely awful, almighty, and heart-searching is he himself, to whom we must quickly give an account in the last judgment. But blessed be God, that while he is his Son, he is our great atoning and interceding High Priest and Almighty Saviour; and that, having had a sinless experience of our temptations and troubles, he is qualified with the tenderest compassion towards us, and is ascended into the highest heavens, now to appear in the presence of God for us. His character and work powerfully and delightfully encourage to steadfastness and openness in our Christian profession, and to familiar boldness in our dealings with God. Let then all my requests and hopes of pardon, help, comfort, and glory, depend on JEHOVAH's grace and Jesus' merits.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1. To encourage us to improve the grace and power of our glorious and ascended, but affectionate and sympathizing, High Priest, in such holy reverence and confidence in approaching to God, let us consider that, even under the typical dispensation, every high priest was sanctified and set apart to his office from among the children of Israel, as one who partook of the same nature with themselves, and was appointed to represent, and transact for, men with God; that in their name and stead, and for their benefit, he might present to him all their legal offerings and sacrifices, animate or inanimate; 2. And thus the multitude of infirmities, sinful or natural, with which he was compassed about, did require, and, as it were, qualify him to bear with, and readily atone for the sins of others, which had been committed through ignorance or mistake: 3. On account of which infirmities he was required to offer up sacrifices for his own sins, as well as for the sins of the people.—4. And it was further necessary that no man should assume to himself the office of priesthood, till he had a most plain and manifest call from God to it, as Aaron and his sons had. 5, 6. In like manner Jesus Christ,—who in our nature made atonement for our sins by the sacrifice of himself, that our persons and prayers might be accepted of God, as presented by and through him, and who, in his state of humiliation, experienced every sinless infirmity and temptation, that he might manifest the greatest forbearance and compassion to ignorant and wandering sinners,—and who, having no sin, had no occasion to offer up any sacrifice for himself, but only for his people,—did not, in his incarnate state, by any private act of his own, assume to himself the honour of the gospel high priesthood; but was from eternity called and appointed to it by his Father, by whom he was from eternity begotten, and by whom, in his resurrection from the dead, he was attested as his only necessary and essential Son; and who, in the most solemn manner, declared him an eternal Priest, without predecessor or successor, after the high order of Melchisedec, and not after the inferior order of Aaron; 7. Which glorious High Priest, while in our world, compassed about

THEREFORE[a] leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God,

2 Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3 And this will we do, if God permit.

4 For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened,[†] and have tasted of the heavenly gift,[‡] and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost,[§]

5 And have tasted the good word[‖] of God, and the powers of the world to come,[*]

6 If they shall fall away,[†] to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves[‡] the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God; with the sinless infirmities of human nature, and overwhelmed with the most fearful pressures of divine wrath on our account, did, in the most fervent, humble, and pathetic manner, present his addresses and entreaties to God his almighty Father,—who, if willing, could have delivered him from the terrors of death; and, on account of his holy reverence, had his prayers accepted; and, in answer to them, obtained proper assistance under, seasonable deliverance from, and the happy issue of, his sufferings in the glory of God, and the redemption of his church.—8. Though he was the eternal Son of God, the same in nature and perfections with the Father, and infinitely dear to him, yet, having condescended to the office of High Priesthood, and assumed our nature, that he might therein execute it, such was his zeal for the glory of God, and love to his church, that he submitted, in the exercise of faith, patience, self-denial, resignation, humility, and readiness of mind, practically to learn what and how good it is to obey his Father's commands, even unto the death of the cross;—yea, to learn, by severe experience, what difficulties and distresses, and yet rich advantages attend obedience;—and how to sympathize with us in our sufferings. 9, 10. And having completed his whole obedience and suffering, and being thereupon fully consecrated to the high intercessory work of his Priesthood, he became the procuring and efficient cause of eternal salvation from everything sinful or miserable, and to everything holy and happy, to all such as diligently hearken and yield up themselves to him as the Captain of their salvation;—whom God has represented and styled a Priest, not constituted after the order of Aaron, but after the superior order of Melchisedec: 11. Concerning whom, in his kingly, but especially in his priestly office, in which he typified our Redeemer, we gospel preachers have many important things to deliver,—which, on account of your remaining sloth, ignorance, and rigid attachment to the ceremonial law, can scarcely be yet rendered plain to your minds. 12. For,—when considering the great advantages for instruction which have been afforded you, and the time ye have enjoyed the gospel dispensation, ye ought to have been capable of instructing others in the knowledge of Christ,—ye have made so little proficiency, that ye need to be taught over again the plain fundamental principles of the Christian faith, revealed in the infallible dictates of the Old and New Testaments;—and some of you have so declined in knowledge, that no instructions can suit your capacity but the most easy and familiar articles of Christianity,—being unable to understand the more mysterious points—how all the ancient types are accomplished in the person and offices of Christ. 13. For every one, who has no appetite for, or ability to understand anything but the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, is very inexpert at understanding, receiving, and improving the great truths of the gospel; in which the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, and Christ is represented as the end of the law, moral and ceremonial, for righteousness to every one that believes,—and in which we are taught to live in the practice of righteousness, as persons united to, and justified in Christ. 14. But the more sublime doctrines are most fit for the nourishment of those believers who are far advanced in the knowledge of the truth, and who, by much consideration and experience, and by much reading, hearing, meditation, and prayer, have their spiritual senses qualified to discern and distinguish between what is good or bad, true or false, beneficial or pernicious, and know how to choose and embrace the one, and refuse the other.

8 But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—No sin can be pardoned without an atoning satisfaction. And wonderful are the glories of Jesus Christ our great High Priest and atoning sacrifice. How divinely high, holy, and pure; and yet certainly bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, and compassed about with all our sinless infirmities! Solemn was his call to his work, and high his order, yet deep his condescension and self-abasement.—Fervent and successful his prayers—great his sufferings—and perfect his obedience. And by all these he becomes the complete Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. No true happiness can be had without holiness as an ingredient of it. Alas, that after all the discoveries of him in the gospel, many should have such indistinct conceptions of him, and be so indolent in improving the means of grace offered them! And transcendent is his mercy in providing food for weak as well as for strong Christians in his word. But how great must be their presumption, their danger, who intrude themselves into the ministerial office, when Christ entered not on his without his Father's call!

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1, 2. But since it is unworthy of Christians to be always babes in knowledge, let us, for the present, forbear insisting on the fundamental principles of Christianity, such as an evangelical grief for, and turning from, sinful courses, which mark men spiritually dead, and prepare them for eternal death;—and of a cordial belief of God's being and perfections, and humble trust in him for the accomplishment of all his promises; (which two points were figured out by the ancient ceremonial washings, and the laying on of hands on the heads of the sacrifices;)—and of the resurrection of both righteous and wicked at the last day, to receive their everlasting reward;—and of the general judgment consequent thereupon, in which men's eternal happiness and misery shall be finally and irreversibly determined by Christ:—and let us discourse of, and embrace with holy care and diligence, those great mysteries of the gospel relative to the person and offices, particularly the High Priesthood of our Redeemer. 3. And this, by the direction and assistance of God, I shall quickly proceed to, in order to prevent your apostasy from him. 4—6. For if professed Christians, who have been once remarkably enlightened in the knowledge of gospel truths by his word and Spirit, in his common and miraculous operations,—and have had a remarkable inward experience of the powerful virtue and sweetness of God's word, and of the powerful operations of the Holy Ghost, peculiar to the New Testament church,—wilfully apostatize from the profession of the gospel to judaism or heathenism, they absolutely reject the only remedy which God has appointed for their recovery, and provoke him to abandon them to a desperate voluntary blindness of mind and hardness of heart; leaving no room for an effectual renovation and recovery to any true and saving repentance;—because they practically approve the wickedness of those who crucified the eternal Son of God, and persecute him in his members; yea, manifest that they would again crucify him as a noted impostor, if they had opportunity;—and after distinguishing trials of the power, excellency, and sweetness of his truths, openly renounce them, and him in them, as if they had found him as infamous and deceiving as ever his enemies pretended. 7, 8. For, to compare professed Christians to fruitful and barren soils, those—who, being inwardly renewed by God's grace, bring forth fruits of righteousness, which are, by Jesus Christ, acceptable to God, and for the praise of his glory—shall be further owned and blessed of him with his spiritual favours and influences, that they may still more abundantly increase in faith, love, and holy obedience, and become more and more meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; but they, who partake only of the forementioned illuminations, external means and advantages, without a habit of true grace in their soul, and produce nothing but unbelief, impenitence, hardness of heart, and the entangling, hurtful, and self-ruining fruits of wickedness proceeding therefrom, are on the very point of falling under the immediate execution of God's curse upon them, and of being in time and eternity burnt up by the fire of his wrath. 9. But as to most of you, whom I look upon and love as sincere believers, beloved of God, I am confident that ye have experienced better things than the above-mentioned privileges, attainable by reprobates,—even the special and saving blessings of regeneration, justification, adoption, and others, which flow from vital union with Christ, and infallibly secure and issue in eternal salvation;—though, for your warning and the awakening of false professors, I have suggested to you what terrible apostasy and ruin men may fall into after distinguished appearances of grace. 10. And my persuasion of your perseverance and eternal happiness is founded on the stability of the covenant of grace; for God, who is equity and truth itself, never did, nor will, unfaithfully violate his promises of gracious rewards, to be conferred through the merits of his Son; nor will he be unmindful of those acts of holiness and righteousness by which ye have manifested your faith in, love to, and regard of his person, honour, and authority; and particularly of that compassion, tenderness, and liberal assistance, which ye have and still do manifest to his despised and afflicted saints, in these days of poverty, peril, and reproach. 11. But knowing that the end and means are connected in his gracious purposes and promises, I earnestly beg of him, and beseech you to labour in his strength, that every one of you may constantly persevere, and more and more abound in such diligent care and endeavours to bring forth the genuine fruits of faith and love; till, by the blessing of God thereon, ye have a full and fixed assurance of your irrevocable interest in Christ and the promises of eternal life; 12. That to obtain it, and under the influence of it, ye may be excited to the utmost diligence in using the means of grace, and fulfilling the duties of your station, in imitation of, and following after, those believers in former ages, who, notwithstanding manifold tribulations, have, through a fixed faith in God's promises, and patient waiting for the accomplishment thereof, got beyond all their sins and troubles, and entered into the possession of the heavenly inheritance. 13, 14. And to encourage your hope and perseverance in faith and patience, consider how God has condescended to give us the utmost assurance of his punctual and faithful accomplishment of his promises: for, to instance in one leading promise, upon which all the rest depend, when God promised to Abraham a seed from which the Messiah should descend, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, he confirmed it by an oath, as the strongest security for the fulfilment of it; and because he could not, like us in our oaths, appeal to a greater, he appealed to his own being and perfections, and, as it were, solemnly pledged them for the truth and performance of his promises,—in which he engaged himself abundantly and certainly to bless Abraham with all the blessings of time and eternity, and to give him innumerable multitudes of descendants, temporal and spiritual. 15. And accordingly, after he had long waited with patience and hope, under manifold trials of his faith, God fulfilled his promise in blessing him with greater worldly prosperity, and in multiplying his children during his life, as an earnest of his divine and spiritual seed,—and in admitting him at death, through faith in the Messiah, who was to spring from his loins, into the full possession of eternal life. 16. And herein God gave him the fullest assurance possible of his veracity, according to the most valid and approved method which men use for the satisfaction of their fellow-creatures as to the truth of what they affirm or promise;—for, on important occasions, it is their custom to ascertain and fix their declarations and promises with an oath, in which they call the infinitely great God to attest their sincerity, and to punish them if they falsify their affirmation or engagement; and such an appeal is reckoned the most strong and decisive evidence that can be given of the truth of what they say, to the satisfying of all doubts, determining of all debates, and silencing of all contradictory testimonies. 17. In this strongest form of assurance, to put an end to all the doubts, fears, and disputes of his people, who are the heirs of the promised blessings, with respect to his promises of grace and salvation; and to give superabundant evidence that his free and eternal purposes of love manifested in his promises, are unchangeably the same, and shall never be repealed, defeated, or falsified, hath God sealed and confirmed his designs; 18. That, by the unchangeable word and oath of the unalterably true and faithful God, we might have the firmest ground possible for the most abundant, prevailing, and solid comfort, to overcome all doubts and fears, and support us under all our afflictions and temptations,—who have been enabled, under a sense of guilt and danger, to flee, with the utmost eagerness and speed, concern and vigour, for deliverance and safety to Christ, the promised seed, and to lay hold on him, and on all the blessings of salvation in him, as proposed to our faith and hope in the declarations and promises of the gospel. 19. Which object of hope, as laid hold on, and trusted in by faith, secures our souls from destruction, and holds them fast and steady amidst all the dangers and troubles of this present life,—since he hath passed into the highest heaven, and our hope in him penetrates through the visible heavens, and fastens upon him, and his Father through him, as exhibited in his promises; 20. Into which heavenly, blessed, and glorious state, Jesus, our exalted Head and Saviour, is entered, not alone, as the Aaronic high priest, into the Holy of holies, but as our Forerunner, to open for us an abundant entrance, notify our coming, and prepare mansions for us;—and as our everlasting High Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, to make continual intercession for us, upon the footing of his righteousness, fulfilled in our stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—With great care we ought to learn the fundamental principles of the Christian religion. But not content with this, we should make daily progress in knowledge, for our spiritual edification, and establishment in faith, comfort, and holiness. Men may go great lengths even in a kind of experimental religion, and nevertheless remain destitute of the grace of God. But inexpressibly dangerous is apostasy from the truths of Christ after such high attainments. And hardened and loose professors terribly expose themselves to redoubled damnation in hell, if not also fearful miseries in this life. With great care and prudence should ministers faithfully awaken the secure, so as not to distress the weakest believer. Love to God, appearing in kindness to his poor saints, and in a holy conversation, is a certain mark of true grace in the heart; and diligence in religion is the way to thrive in it. And if we have any good hope of eternal salvation, we ought to labour after a full assurance in it. Faith and patience, implanted in our heart, will produce perseverance in our life. And the example of former saints should quicken us to it, while the promise and oath of God, and the exaltation of our Redeemer, give us the fullest and surest ground of encouragement in it. Rich, numerous, and suitable are the blessings which God has prepared for them that fear him: and marvellous is his condescension in giving such abundant security for the accomplishment of his kind purposes, and gracious promises of eternal life. Happy are they, who, deeply convinced of guilt, and pursued by storms, have fled to Jesus Christ for refuge; and who, amidst all their troubles, have anchored their souls by faith and hope on him, as exalted to his Father's right hand to prepare a place for them. Storms of every kind can but drive them home to their High Priest and Saviour.

CHAP. VII.—Ver. 1. For this famous Melchisedec, of whom our Lord Jesus, in his kingly and priestly office, is the great antitype, was a renowned king of the ancient accursed Canaanites at Salem, and divinely called to officiate as a priest among them; and, meeting with Abraham in his return from the slaughter of returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him;

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being, by interpretation, King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace;

3 Without father,[a] without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

4 Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

5 And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:

6 But he, whose [†] descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises.

7 And, without all contradiction, the less is blessed of the better.

8 And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him.

11 If therefore perfection[†] were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people

[a] Without father, &c., is generally understood to signify, "without a father" who was a priest.—"Without a mother who was daughter of a priest.—Without descent — without scriptural genealogy (ver. 6). — Beginning of days — any fixed period for commencing.—"nor end of life—any fixed period for demitting the priestly office, such as the descendants of Levi enjoyed. But, truly, since "he abideth a priest continually," and "liveth for ever," it seems difficult to arrive at any other conclusion than that he was a manifestation, rather than a mere type of Christ, and such as Abraham subsequently enjoyed (see Gen. 15. 1—18. & 17. 1—22.—Ed.

[†] Perfection is predicated, through the remaining parts of this epistle, chiefly of the following subjects: — 1. Of the priesthood of Christ, which is pronounced perfect, because he was sinless (ver. 26, 27); because his office was unchangeable (ver. 16, 24, 28); because in him sacrificial offering terminated (ch. 10. 10—12); because remission of the sins of believers was, by his sacrifice, completed (ch. 10. 16); because, by his ascent, access to God was opened (ver. 19. ch. 10. 19—22); and by his intercession, the salvation of believers is made sure (ch. 7. 25). 2. Of the perfect covenant exhibited and confirmed in Christ (ch. 8. 6—13. & 9 9—16). 3. Of the perfect inheritance secured to the children of God (ch. 9. 15). 4. Of the perfect condition of his church, whether triumphant or militant (ch. 11. 40). 5. Of the perfect work of the Spirit to be wrought in believers on earth; and, 6. Of the perfect state of the saints in the glory of heaven, ch. 12. 22—24.—Ed.

19 [i] For the law made nothing perfect, [†] but the bringing in of [k] a better hope did; by the which we [l] draw nigh unto God.

20 And inasmuch as not without [‡] an oath he was made priest:

21 (For those priests were made [‡] without an oath; but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, [m] The Lord sware, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec:)

Chedorlaomer's army, he not only refreshed his fatigued warriors with bread and wine, but, in the execution of his priestly office, authoritatively pronounced a blessing on him, and all those Jews or Gentiles who were represented by him as his seed; 2. To him Abraham, in acknowledgment of his superior character of priesthood, paid the tithes, or tenth part of all the spoil which he had taken in the war: and his name, and that of his abode, represents him as first a king of righteousness, and then king of peace; 3. Yea, his whole genealogy of ancestors or successors, and his birth, death, and the beginning and ending of his priesthood, are entirely concealed by the Holy Ghost in Scripture, that by this means he might be a more eminent type of the eternal Son of God, who is at once our most glorious, generous, and compassionate King and great High Priest, in and by whom all his faithful servants and people are blessed with all spiritual blessings, and to whom even the greatest acknowledge their dependence, and to whose superiority they submit;—and who, being our righteousness and peace, rules in righteousness, and procures and bestows on all his subjects peace with God, with their consciences, and with one another;—and who, being without mother as God, without father as man, has no predecessor or successor in his office, but, as immediately appointed by God, abides a Priest for ever, to make continual intercession for us. 4. Now, that ye may have the more clear and exalted views of the excellency and dignity of Christ's Priesthood, think seriously how great a man Melchisedec, who but typified him, must have been, when Abraham, the progenitor and covenant head of the whole Hebrew nation, acknowledged him his sacred superior, by giving him the tithes of his spoil. 5—7. Ye cannot but observe also, that the Jewish priests, descended from Levi, receive tithes only from their brethren and equals, and that by virtue of a law from God, assigning them that portion which belonged to God himself: but here one of a very different stock received tithes from Abraham, their most honoured progenitor, and authoritatively blessed him in the name of God; and common sense dictates that he, who authoritatively blesses another, must be superior to him in dignity. 8. Besides the Levitical receivers of tithes are represented to us as mortal men, dying one after another: but this Melchisedec, by the veil cast over his history, is never represented as one dead, but only as living. 9, 10. And, moreover, all those Levites, who by the Mosaic law receive tithes from their Hebrew brethren, really, though indirectly, paid tithes to Melchisedec, being all in the loins of Abraham, as their ancestor, covenant head, and representative, when Melchisedec met him; and so must be greatly inferior to Melchisedec, who, after all, was no more than a type of our infinitely more excellent and dignified Jesus Christ, the great King and High Priest of his church.—11. Now it is plain, that if perfection of atonement for sin or acceptance with God, or in the form and fellowship of the visible church, and especially in holiness and happiness, could have been really and effectually obtained by the Levitical priesthood, in connexion with which the Jews received, and in part observed, the law of Moses, there could have been no need to introduce a high priesthood after another and higher order. 12. It therefore necessarily follows, that the Levitical priesthood, and the ceremonial law connected with it, must be changed and abolished to make way for a better priesthood, and an evangelical dispensation, in the person of Christ; for if the priesthood, established by, and connected with the ceremonial law of Moses, be altered, that law, the administration of which was chiefly confined to the Aaronical priesthood, must also be abolished, to make way for this evangelical constitution, which derives its efficacy from that more excellent and exalted order of priesthood. 13, 14. And as one evidence hereof, it is manifest that Jesus Christ, who was prefigured by Melchisedec, did not spring of the tribe of Levi, to which the legal priesthood was restricted, but of the tribe of Juda, none of which had any warrant from God to officiate as priests, in offering sacrifices, burning incense, or the like. 15—17. And another evidence that the Levitical priesthood, and the ceremonial law which depended on it, must be abolished, is, that there is now, according to ancient predictions, divinely raised up a High Priest after the different and more excellent order of Melchisedec;—even a High Priest who is not appointed to his office according to the ceremonial law of carnal ordinances given by Moses, by which the frail and decaying descendants of Levi were appointed to theirs, but by a far more excellent and abiding constitution, suited to that unchangeable life which he has in himself as the eternal Son of God, and to that eternal life of glory and honour to which he is now advanced as God-man Mediator: for, as hath been repeatedly hinted, God, by solemn oath, declared him, in his one Person, a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 18. And in this new and everlasting Priesthood of Christ, there is really, supposed or implied, an abrogation of the whole ceremonial law of Moses, as insufficient and unavailable to purge men's consciences from guilt, or to justify them to eternal life:—19. For that law was of itself quite incapable of perfecting its worshippers in anything belonging to their conscience and reconciliation with God, and was merely intended to prefigure Jesus Christ and his priestly character and work, and the gospel state of the church founded thereon;—by the introduction of which is presented to us a better ground of confidence towards God, and a better, nearer, and more advantageous access to him, than ever the Jews, or even their priests, had by the law. 20, 21. And to assure us hereof, Christ was not chosen and installed in his priestly office in the less solemn manner of the Aaronic priests; but to mark the excellency, unchangeableness, and perpetuity of his Priesthood, his

† Some consider Christ to have been a priest on earth when "he once offered up himself a sacrifice;" others think he did not become a Priest till he presented himself in heaven. The preference of either view does not seem a matter of much importance to those who sincerely hold that "he was delivered for our offences, and raised for our justification." It is obvious, however, that on earth he could not have been a Levitical priest (ch. 7. 14); and as the Melchisedecan priesthood, with which he was invested, was to endure "for ever," and be "unchangeable" (ch. 7. 24, 25), it would seem necessary that he should have risen from the dead, and passed the boundaries of change before he could properly be said to have entered upon his peculiar priestly office.—Ed.

priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens;

2 [b]A minister of the sanctuary, and of [c]the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

3 For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

4 For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest,† seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

6 But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises.‡

7 For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.

8 For finding fault with them,§ he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

Father constituted him a Priest for ever in his own person, with the irrevocable solemnity of an oath. 22. Yea, in proportion to the superior excellence of his priesthood to the Levitical, in its nature and form of instalment, Jesus, our once crucified but now exalted Saviour, was divinely constituted the undertaker, promiser, and sponsor for us in the infinitely more excellent covenant of grace; particularly with respect to its last dispensation under the gospel, when, by his death, it was put in force, and clearly dispensed to men in the form of a testament, in which all his purchased blessings are freely bequeathed to the heirs of promise. 23, 24. And further to manifest the weakness and unprofitableness of the legal or ceremonial dispensation, the priests, being all mortal, succeeded one another in their different generations, and could never after death resume their office; but Jesus Christ, being God-man, who could never die out of his office, but perpetually and everlastingly abides in the execution of it, without any interruption by his death, has, in his own single person, an unchangeable and everlasting Priesthood, which cannot pass away from him to another. 25. From what has been said concerning Christ as our great High Priest, it necessarily follows, that he has not only all divine ability originally in himself, but also all official power and authority, as well as willingness to give complete deliverance from all sin and misery, fears and dangers, and to advance to all the glory and blessedness of the heavenly state,—to the utmost of their wants, desires, hopes, and capacities, and to the utmost boundaries of infinite duration,—all those that, in prayer, or other parts of gospel worship, come unto God through him as their only Mediator,—seeing he ever liveth as God in their nature, and as their great High Priest and Advocate, to make continual intercession for them; pleading that, through the merits of his obedience and suffering, all the spiritual, temporal, and eternal blessings of the new covenant may be given them in due time: 26. For such an excellent, almighty, and ever-living High Priest, was necessary and alone fit for us, who is, in every respect and degree, pure from sinful pollution in heart and life, and who, in holiness, as well as in dignity, authority, and exaltation, far transcends all the holy angels and glorified saints in the heavenly state; 27. Who needed not, in the manner of the Aaronic priests, first to offer up sacrifice for his own sins, and then for the sins of his people, nor needed to repeat his sacrifice for their sins; his once offering of himself, as an atoning sacrifice, being of such infinite worth as to finish transgression, and make an end of sin, obtain eternal redemption, and perfect for ever them that are sanctified. 28. For the ceremonial law appointed men priests, who were sinful, weak, and mortal; but the oath of God, which was afterwards intimated, invested the eternal Son of God, who is absolutely unblemished and perfect, with a priesthood which is of perpetual duration and efficacy for the salvation of men.

Reflections upon Chap. VII.—Superlative is the excellency and royal dignity of our great High Priest Jesus Christ. In his supernatural and divine call;—his transcendent ability to fulfil all righteousness, and bless his people;—in the dignity and moral qualifications of his person;—in the solemn manner of his instalment;—and in the spiritual nature, marvellous efficacy, unchangeable and incommunicable nature and perpetual duration, of his Priesthood, he far transcends all Levitical priests of the Old Testament. Consider, O my soul, how great this God-man is. Never, by attempts towards self-righteousness, strive to put him from, or deprive him of, the honour of his Priesthood. And while he lives as a Surety, a righteous Advocate, with the Father, let nothing, not even sin itself, while felt and lamented over, hinder my boldest approaches to his throne of grace.

Chap. VIII.—Ver. 1. Now all that I have said, in comparing Christ to Melchisedec and the Aaronic priests, may be summed up in this—that in him we have a transcendently more glorious High Priest, who, after offering himself as a sacrifice of infinite value and efficacy, is, in virtue thereof, advanced to the most glorious state of rest, dignity, power, and authority in heaven. 2. That there, in the heavenly sanctuary, and in the tabernacle of his own manhood, both of which were framed, not by human influence, but by the immediate operation of God himself, he may for ever carry on the intercessory work of his Priesthood for the effectual promoting and securing of our eternal salvation; 3. For the special business of every high priest, for which he is appointed and authorized of God, is to present oblations and sacrifices of atonement, which must be slain and offered before he carry the blood into the most holy place, and in order to his carrying it in; it was therefore absolutely necessary that Jesus, our great gospel High Priest, should have a sacrifice to offer answerable to the dignity of his person, and the glory of his exalted state in heaven, where it must be presented before the throne of God: 4. For if Christ had continued still upon earth, he could not have executed that most glorious part of his priestly work which was to be performed in the sanctuary; since, according to the Jewish law, none could be admitted to present oblations in their Holy of Holies but the Aaronic high priests. 5. Who, as ministers thereof, perform the whole service of that tabernacle and sanctuary, which were intended but as a typical draught of that true sanctuary and tabernacle in which our Lord Jesus now officiates as our interceding High Priest;—as was obscurely intimated in God's giving Moses a heavenly model of it, and charging him to form everything, even the most minute, exactly according to that model:—6. But now our blessed Lord, in his exalted state, is, by virtue of his Father's appointment, actually engaged in a far more excellent, honourable, and beneficial ministration than ever any was before him,—in proportion to the incomparably greater excellency and advantage of the new covenant dispensation, of which he is the only Mediator; for, taking away all differences between God and his people, and purchasing all its spiritual and eternal blessings for them, by his sacrifice of himself, and ratifying and securing to them all its promises and blessings, and enabling them to accept of it, and yield up themselves to God, according to the tenor of it. And this covenant was authoritatively established upon more spiritual, advantageous, heavenly, and absolute promises, than were contained in the law or legal dispensation appointed at Sinai. 7. For if God's covenant of peculiar relation to the Israelites, or the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace which they there received, had been every way sufficient in light, grace, and efficacy, for perfecting the state of the church on earth or in heaven, there had never been any ground for God to contrive or establish, or his people to desire, another more spiritual and complete administration of the covenant of grace on earth, as it is plain there was: 8. For after accusing and reproving the Jews for their breaches of that covenant under which they were, and which did not secure their obedience, in a most solemn manner he promises irrevocably to establish, with all his chosen people, Jews or Gentiles, a new covenant dispensation of free and absolute promises;—9. Which should be inexpressibly more gracious, spiritual, effectual, and lasting, than that covenant of peculiar relation which he had made with the Israelites, after he had, by almighty influences and unnumbered miracles, delivered them from their miserable bondage in Egypt; or than the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace, to which they were subjected;—both of which, through the treachery of their own hearts, and the temptations of Satan and the world, they had despised and violated; and had thereby provoked God justly to reject them from being his peculiar people, and to cast them out of his land. 10. In which new covenant, made with his spiritual Israel of all nations, God promises effectually to enlighten and renew their understandings, and make them savingly to discern the laws, doctrines, and promises of his word, —and, by an almighty influence, to impress them upon their conscience, will, and affections, to the renewing thereof,—and to be a God to them, being all to them, and doing all for them that is necessary to their temporal, spiritual, and eternal happiness;—and by his grace to enable and determine them to believe in, love, and devote themselves to him, and own and serve him, as persons redeemed, adopted, and saved by him; 11. And thus to give such experimental, believing, affectionate, and practical knowledge of his own perfections, counsels, and will, and of the way of salvation through the Messiah to all of them, that few or none of them shall need to be taught the fundamental principles of religion; 12. And for preventing all obstruction of the saving benefits promised, to give them a full, free, and irreversible pardon of all their sins, original or actual, through the atoning righteousness of his Son. 13. Now this very promise of a more gracious, spiritual, and efficacious dispensation of the covenant of grace under the gospel, plainly intimates the weakness and unprofitableness of the Mosaic dispensation; and that it was to be set aside and disannulled as a thing out of date; and, indeed, being already almost useless, it will, with all its rites, ceremonies, and institutions, be quickly and utterly abolished, in the destruction of your temple, and the dispersion of your nation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—Contemplate, O my soul, in what an exalted and efficacious manner Jesus my High Priest has ascended to his Father's right hand, and, in my nature, continually intercedes for men—for me—upon the footing of his own finished righteousness! In a most delightful manner the shadowy priests and offerings are now abolished by him and his righteousness and intercession; and firmly hath he established his blessed covenant of grace and gospel dispensation, in which God binds himself to give all necessary instruction, renovation, and forgiveness, and is himself ALL IN ALL. Unchangeable and lasting are its blessings, and issuing in the eternal happiness of all the heirs of promise.

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1. But,—to return to our comparison of the earthly and heavenly sanctuary,—the Sinai covenant of God's peculiar headship over Israel, and the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace therewith connected, had various typical ordinances of God's appointment for religious worship, and a magnificent tent or temple for the celebration of those ordinances, formed by men out of earthly materials. 2. In the first or eastern apartment of this tent or temple stood the golden candlestick, with its seven burning lamps, representing Christ, his Spirit, oracles, and ordinances, as the light of the church;—and the golden table, with its twelve loaves of show-bread, which represented him as the abundant, suitable, and never-failing provision of his people,—and them as in him presented before God in their respective generations. 3, 4. Passing through this eastern apartment, called the sanctuary, you entered into the western, called the ORACLE, or HOLY OF HOLIES, where was the golden censer, in which the high priest carried the burning coals from the altar of burnt-offering, to burn the incense before the ark on the day of expiation, as a representation of Jesus' intercession, founded on, and deriving its virtue from, his atoning sacrifice;—and the ark, which contained the law of the covenant made with Israel, and represented Christ as the reconciler and rest of JEHOVAH, and end of the law for righteousness to believers;—and the golden pot of manna, which represented him as the true and ever-living bread which came down from heaven;—and the budding rod, with which Aaron and Moses had wrought many miracles, and which represented Jesus Christ as growing out of dry ground, but manifested to be our ever-glorious and flourishing High Priest;—and, in fine, the two tables, on which God at Sinai wrote the ten commandments of the moral law, lodged in the midst of the ark, intimating their fulfilment in Christ, as a covenant, for the justification of his people, and their continuing an unchangeable and perpetual rule of holy obedience in his hand. 5. And above the ark were two glorious cherubims of gold, which represented holy angels and gospel ministers as looking into, admiring, and ready to promote our redemption to God through the righteousness of his Son.—But these things not being so directly to my purpose, I shall not insist upon them.—6. Now this sacred tent or temple, being thoroughly prepared, according to the divine model given to Moses or David, the ordinary priests, in their turns, entered into it every day, to offer sacrifice, burn incense, and dress the lamps. 7. But the high priest alone, and only upon the day of the great annual expiation, entered into the Holy of Holies, and that not without blood of expiatory sacrifices, one for himself, and another for the Israelites' sins of infirmity and ignorance: 8. By this restricted access to the Holy of Holies, the Spirit of God plainly signifying, that the access of believers to the throne of grace, or heavenly state, was not as now, clearly revealed, while the ceremonial tabernacle, temple, and services thereof, continued to be established and observed by divine institution. 9. For these structures, and all the services pertaining to them, were, by the appointment of God, no more than temporary, imperfect, and figurative representations of those good things which have been manifested and fulfilled under the gospel:—None of their oblations, bloody or unbloody, having the smallest influence to remove the moral guilt of sin from their conscience, but only to remove the ceremonial defilement and prevent temporal punishment: 10. Consisting in meat-offerings and drink-offerings, manifold washings and sprinklings, and numberless other ceremonies, which only 11 But Christ [a]being come an high priest of good things to come,[*] by[†] [b]a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;[‡]

12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

13 [§]For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh:[§]

14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit[‖] offered himself [h]without [*]spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?

15 And for this cause[†] he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption[‡] of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

16 For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator.

17 [l]For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

18 Whereupon neither the first testament was [§]dedicated without blood.

19 For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, [k]he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and [*]scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, 21 [m]Moreover, he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry.

22 [n]And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

23 It was therefore necessary that [o]the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but [p]the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these.

24 For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are [q]the figures of the true; but [r]into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us:

25 Nor yet that he should offer himself often, [s]as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; removed external ceremonial pollutions, and consecrated to external service;—and which, because of their insufficiency to purify the conscience, and perfect the state of the church, were appointed to continue no longer than till the Messiah, being come, should establish in the church a complete state of spirituality and holiness, light and grace. 11. But he, having at last actually appeared in our nature as a High Priest, hath accomplished what had been long prefigured by ceremonial ordinances, and purchased and procured for his people the expected blessings of grace and glory, by officiating in his transcendently excellent manhood, and in the heavenly state, both of which were formed by the immediate operation of God himself. 12. Nor did the sacrifice, by virtue of which he entered into the heavenly state, in dignity and excellency less transcend the Levitical sacrifices; for it was not, as in the case of the Jewish sacrifices, by the blood of mean, though useful, animals, but by his own precious blood, that he, through the vail of his own flesh, entered into the heavenly oracle; to present himself God-man, with the merit of his perfect and ever available sacrifice for us, before the immediate presence of God: having thereby purchased and secured for us, not a figurative pardon or annual reprieve, but a complete and everlasting forgiveness, and deliverance from sin, Satan, and the broken law, the incensed wrath of God, a present evil world, and death,—and a full and unchangeable right and title to an eternal inheritance of all blessedness and glory: 13. For if the blood of bulls and goats, and other mean and insignificant animals, or the ashes of a heifer mingled with running water, were, by God's appointment, effectual to purify men from the external ceremonial impurities of their bodies, and give them a re-admission to public worship in the tabernacle or temple, and into the congregation of the Lord, from which they had been excluded on account of their defilement, 14. How much more effectually and gloriously shall Jesus' finished righteousness, his unblemished and infinitely valuable sacrifice of himself,—which he, through the infinite dignity and supporting influence of his divine nature sanctifying his gift, and through the unmeasurable unction and inconceivable influence of the Holy Ghost, did—with the utmost readiness and submission to his Father's will, with entire trust and confidence in him, with fervent zeal for his glory, and with the most amazing love and compassion to his people,—fulfil and offer up to God, as an offended Judge,—purge your consciences from all the guilt and defilement of your unprofitable, abominable, and destructive works of wickedness, and free you from all dreadful apprehensions of condemnation and wrath on their account; and animate and enable you, with confidence and cheerfulness here, and in perfection hereafter, to believe in, worship, and obey the only living and true God. 15. And for bringing about this great end, he undertook and executes the office of Mediator of the new and better covenant, and particularly of the New Testament dispensation of it; that by means, not of legal sacrifices, but of his own death, as an atonement for the sins of those under the Old as well as New Testament, who, in whatever period, have been or are effectually called into a state of union to and fellowship with him, they might, in a free and honourable manner, be made partakers of the blessings of grace here and glory hereafter. 16, 17. And the new covenant, as dispensed to us, being of a testamentary nature, in which Jesus Christ, who purchased all possible blessings, and, as Trustee of the covenant, has them all lodged in his hand, actually bequeathes them to sinful men; his death was also necessary to render this testamentary disposition firm and irrevocable, and of full force to all them who by faith claim their title under him. 18—20. And it was chiefly in order to prefigure this, that the Sinai covenant, and establishment of the legal dispensation, was ratified and confirmed by the blood of typical sacrifices; and that Moses, the typical mediator, having recited to the Israelites the principal laws of the covenant respecting them as a church and nation, did, in a solemn manner, sprinkle the book in which those laws were written, and all the representatives of the people, with the blood of the sacrifices offered on that occasion,—solemnly intimating, that that sprinkling of blood was a divinely instituted confirmation of the covenant between God and them, whereby his faithfulness for fulfilling his promises, and their obedience in performing the duties of it, were mutually engaged.—21. Moreover, when the tabernacle was first erected, and afterwards once every year on the great day of expiation, it, and all the vessels of service therein, were ceremonially purged from defilement, and consecrated to their sacred use, by a sprinkling of sacrificed blood. 22. Nay, so important was the blood of sacrifices, under that dispensation, that almost all purification from ceremonial defilement was effected by the offering and sprinkling of it; and without the bloodshedding of typical sacrifices, no typical forgiveness of sin, or removal of temporal judgments, could be obtained. 23. Now, if it was necessary that the book and the people, the tabernacle and its furniture, which were but figurative representations of spiritual and heavenly things, should be purified and consecrated to their sacred use by typical sacrifices and sprinklings, it was certainly proper that Jesus Christ and his people, and all the spiritual and heavenly things, places, and furniture, should be consecrated by the infinitely more excellent sacrifice and blood of God's only begotten Son: 24. For Jesus Christ, the anointed High Priest of his church, has not, like the Jewish high priest, entered into holy places formed by the art and labour of men, which were but mere figures of the heavenly sanctuary,—but has, in his human nature, ascended into heaven itself, that there, in the immediate presence of God, he might continually present himself as our Representative, and the merits of his blood as the price of our eternal salvation. 25, 26. Nor was it necessary that Christ, like the Jewish high priests, should repeat his atoning sacrifice, that he might again and again enter into the heavenly sanctuary; for had that been the case, it had been necessary very often, since the fall of man, to have suffered unto death, that he might make atonement for one generation after another: but such is the infinite dignity, perfection, and virtue of his sacrifice, and such its extensive influence to former, present, and future generations, that his single manifestation of himself, in the end of the ceremonial dispensation and beginning of the gospel period, to offer his soul and body as personally united to his divine nature, was absolutely sufficient and effectual to expiate the guilt, and abolish the power and fruits of all the sins of his people. 27. And as, by the righteous appointment of God, all sinful men must, in the ordinary course of nature, once die, and after that appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that a final and decisive sentence, relative to their eternal happiness or misery, may pass upon them, according to their qualities, thoughts, words, and actions: 28. So Christ, to fulfil the law of God as a broken covenant, and to abolish the curse and purchase eternal happiness, was once, and but once, offered in sacrifice, to bear the imputed iniquities, and suffer the punishment, of all the unnumbered millions of his chosen people: and unto them, who by faith, hope, desire, and love, expect, and patiently wait for, his coming again to judge the world, he will at the last day appear, not, as formerly, charged with sin, or bearing the punishment of it; but in the most transcendent glory and majesty, to give them the complete enjoyment of that heavenly and eternal happiness which he purchased for them by his death.

‡ The Hebrew words in Ps. 40. 6. differ from the apostle's quotation, which is taken from the LXX; but the apostle's gives the exact meaning of the passage. To "bore the ear" was to make a voluntary bond-servant for ever. But in Greek, a bond-servant was called σῶμα, "a body," because he was as subject as a mere body to the will of his master. Hence, to "bore the ears" and "provide a body" came alike to signify appointment to a perpetual voluntary service.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—The great things concerning Jesus Christ, and salvation through him, were gradually, but for a long time obscurely, and by dark shadows, revealed to the church. But infinitely glorious and useful must he be, our great High Priest, to prefigure whom, in his person and service, so many ancient types were necessary. Unbounded is the value and efficacy of his atoning sacrifice, and extensive its virtue through time and through eternity. Full of blessings to sinful men, and infinitely free, firm, and irrevocable, are the promises of the new covenant ratified by his death. And necessary for his honour, and for our salvation, is his intercession at his Father's right hand—and how efficacious and successful! Certain and unavoidable are death and judgment. Happy are they who, having all their sins forgiven through his blood, are looking for his glorious appearance to judge and save them.—Quickly shall he, my soul, who bore the curse, hung on the cross, and lay in the grave, sit down on his great white throne to judge and save me.

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1. From the hints which I have suggested, it is plain that the Mosaic law, with its ceremonial institutions, being, as it were, mere representations of the shadows of Christ's person, office, work, sufferings, and blessings: the most noted sacrifices thereof, offered every year on the great day of general atonement, could never free the worshippers from the guilt of sin, or bring them into a state of friendship, acceptance, and perfect conformity to God. 2. For if these important ends had been perfectly obtained by those yearly sacrifices of national atonement, they would never have been repeated; as the worshippers concerned in them, being once completely cleansed from their guilt, and accepted of God to eternal life, could never more have had any perplexing or condemning fears on account of sin in their own conscience. 3. But so far was this from being the case, that in the very offering of those sacrifices, there was every year, on the day of general expiation, a repeated, solemn, and public confession of the Israelites' iniquities, even of those which preceded the former annual expiation, as well as of those which were committed after it, in order that they might afflict their souls for them. 4. For indeed such is the infinite disproportion between the demerit of sin, or the satisfaction demanded for it by the law and justice of God, and the worthless sacrifices of bulls and goats, that no rules of wisdom or justice could admit them as sufficient to make a true, proper, and effectual atonement for sin. 5—9. And it is plain, that the insufficiency of legal sacrifices to atone for sin, or render men acceptable to God, is represented in the fortieth Psalm as the occasion of God's preparing a perfect human nature for his own Son to obey and suffer in,—and of Christ's cheerful and solemn engagement to fulfil the law, and satisfy justice, in the room and stead of his people, according to his will and purpose in the covenant of grace; 10. By which will of God, as perfectly fulfilled in Jesus' sinless offering, not of bulls and goats, but of himself, we are really and effectually purged and delivered from the guilt, power, and defilement of our sins, and are dedicated to the service of God. 11—14. Every Aaronic priest, in token of humble reverence, and of readiness for further service, stands before God, frequently offering the same kind of sacrifices, daily, weekly, monthly, or annually, which can never make atonement for, nor remove the guilt or pollution of sin:—but so incomparably superior is the dignity of our gospel High Priest in his person and sacrifice, that, after finishing his one atonement for all the sins of his people, he rose from the dead to immortal honour, and with majesty, glory, and acceptance, entered on a state of the highest dignity, rest, and authority,—thenceforward never repeating his sacrifice; but joyfully expecting the fulfilment of his Father's promise, and exercising all power in heaven and earth, till sin, Satan, the world, and death, be actually, universally, and completely subdued, trampled on, and triumphed over, by him.—For by that one offering of himself upon the cross he has obtained a perfect, unchangeable, and eternal deliverance from guilt, and a fitness for the enjoyment and service of God in the nearest relation and access to him, and in the most perfect state of the church, for all those who are dedicated to God, and purged from their sins, through faith in him. 15—17. And this the Holy Ghost in Scripture plainly testifies, in his representation of the new covenant, which Christ hath fulfilled and established, and all the blessings of which he hath completely purchased;—in which, after a gracious promise effectually to inscribe the doctrines of his revelation in his people's hearts and minds, he adds an absolute, infinitely free, and authoritative promise of such perfect pardon of all their swervings from, and transgressions of his law, as that they never more shall be held guilty of or upbraided for them. 18. Now, where there is such complete and everlasting forgiveness of all trespasses established in the new covenant, and attested by the Holy Ghost, it is manifestly impossible that there can be any need of any further atoning sacrifice for sins, or of Christ's repeating the sacrifice of himself.—19. Since therefore, my dear brethren by nation, and in the Lord, we who cordially believe in him, have such solid grounds of free liberty, and rich encouragements for holy freedom and confidence, in our approaches to God as our reconciled Father, and of entering by faith, or even by actual admission, into 29 [z]Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the []blood of the covenant, wherewith [b]he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?

30 For we know him that hath said, [c]Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, [d]The Lord shall judge his people.

31 [e]It is a fearful thing to fall[†] into the hands of the living God.

32 [f]But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

33 Partly, whilst ye were made [g]a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

34 [h]For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that [i]ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

heaven itself, through the inestimably precious blood of Jesus Christ, our ascended High Priest, Forerunner, and Advocate; 20. Even by the newly opened, perpetually excellent, living, and life-giving way of the covenant of grace, which he has prepared, dedicated, and established for us, through his righteousness, and the death of his human nature in our stead; 21. And since we now have a great and glorious High Priest, of incomparable, nay, infinite dignity in his person, office, and exaltation, and of unbounded authority, as the Head of his church militant on earth and triumphant in heaven,—where he, and his Father, and the blessed Spirit, reside in a far more exalted manner than in the Jewish tabernacle, 22. Let us, encouraged by these considerations, and by the assistance of his Spirit, humbly approach to God, as our reconciled Father in him, in prayer, and every other act of religious worship, or exercise of grace, with integrity and uprightness, a heart established in the truth of the gospel, and with a lively and fully assured exercise of faith on the all-sufficiency and excellency of Christ, in his person, office, and fulness, and the infallible accomplishment of his promises to us;—having our whole souls purged from the stupidity and treachery of an unfaithful conscience, and from the disquietude and defilement of a guilty, terrifying, and condemning conscience by an application of Jesus' blood; and our whole man, and whole conversation, renewed and purified by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost; 23. And answerably hereto, let us, notwithstanding whatever we may suffer on that account, steadfastly and invariably persist in maintaining our solemn profession and open confession of Christ and his truths, and of our faith in them, and in the belief of every gospel doctrine, and the practice of every holy duty, without any distrust, hesitation, or perturbation of mind; for he, who has promised to pardon our sins, write his laws in our hearts, and be our God, being unchangeable in his truth and faithfulness, may be fully depended on for all necessary and seasonable supplies of grace for that effect, and for the fulfilment of all his promises, unto our complete salvation. 24. And to promote one another's steadfastness in the faith and profession of the gospel, let us, with joint concern, seriously consider our own and their respective wants, infirmities, temptations, and dangers, on the one hand, and the grounds of hope and encouragement that are in Christ and his promises on the other; that by example, exhortations, and cautions, we may stir up one another to the most fervent and faithful love to God, to Christ, and his truths, and to an affectionate union and communion one with another; and, in fine, to every evangelical and moral duty becoming our Christian character. 25. And as ever we would be steadfast in the profession of our faith, and in love and good works, let us earnestly beware of indulging the smallest remissness or indifference with respect to attendance on the stated and occasional meetings of the church for the celebration of God's ordinances, in the manner of some who have begun to backslide, or who have at last openly and shamefully deserted them, and renounced their profession: but let us, with earnest care and diligence, cheerfulness, and constancy, frequent our religious meetings, and admonish, excite, and encourage others to do so, as the time of the utter destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of your nation, and of death and judgment, is drawing nigh; which will be inexpressibly dreadful to apostates; 26. For if any of us professed Christians, through unbelief, prejudice, pride, or worldly-mindedness, deliberately, resolutely, and wilfully, reject the doctrines and laws of the gospel dispensation, and turn back to judaism, heathenism, or profaneness, after we have been enlightened and convinced of the truth and excellency of them, we have perfidiously rejected the last and only sacrifice of Christ for remission of sins,—can have no interest in it, nor any hope of pardon or acceptance with God; 27. But all that remains for us, as our dreadful portion, is a terrible foreboding in our own consciences of the most righteous, but tremendous and everlasting vengeance of God, to torment and consume us in this world, and especially in that which is to come. 28, 29. And nothing can be more just; for if one who presumptuously violated even the ceremonial laws of Moses was appointed to death, if the fact could be clearly proved, how much more inexpressibly dreadful and lasting punishment must your reason and conscience allow to be due to, and shall be inflicted upon, such resolute and wilful apostates from Christ and his truth, who, contrary to clear convictions of the truth, light, and grace of the gospel, have, with the vilest insolence and contempt, trampled upon the person, authority, mediation, oracles, and ordinances of the eternal Son of God, as if he had been an impostor; and who, instead of trusting for justification and salvation to his precious blood, by which the condition of the covenant of grace was fulfilled, its blessings purchased, and its promises and the New Testament dispensation ratified;—and by which he was consecrated to, and prepared for, his exalted work of mediation; and themselves apparently justified, sanctified, and set apart to the service of God; have profanely slighted, and injuriously treated it, as if less holy than the blood of bulls and goats, or as if the blood of a malefactor;—and who have spitefully, maliciously, and contemptuously opposed, affronted, and vilified the person, operation, and graces of the graciously conferred and grace bestowing Spirit of God! 30. Now we know that the sovereign Lord of heaven and earth, whose equity and truth are uncontrollable, and power irresistible, hath solemnly claimed it, as his high and distinguished prerogative, to vindicate his own honour, and to resent the injuries done him, particularly by perfidious revolters from his government. 31. How inexpressibly tremendous then must be the punishment of those wilful apostates, when they fall as victims into the hands of his justice, without any mixture of mercy, to be punished by the immediate and almighty arm of that great and terrible God, whose existence, power, and activity, continue invariably, and for ever, to execute wrath to the uttermost on the despisers of his Son, Spirit, and grace, as well as to complete the happiness of those who persevere in grace! 32. But to encourage your watchfulness against the very smallest beginnings of apostasy, let me beseech you seriously to reflect upon that solid satisfaction and hope which ye formerly experienced in the time of your conversion to Christ; in which, as soon as ye were enlightened in the knowledge of Christ, and the way of salvation through him, assisted of God, ye patiently sustained, with Christian fortitude, a multitude of severe persecutions from your own countrymen; 33. Partly while ye were maliciously accused, contemptuously disgraced, virulently derided, and cruelly oppressed, for righteousness' sake; and partly while ye tenderly sympathized and mourned with, courageously owned and assisted, your fellow Christians, and the apostles and servants of Christ, when they were abused and persecuted: 34. For when I myself was imprisoned for the sake of Christ, ye boldly acknowledged and stood by me, kindly sympathized with me, prayed for me, and, to the utmost of your power, supplied my wants; yea, for the sake of Christ and his cause, ye cheerfully endured the loss of the conveniences and necessaries of life, which were violently wrested from you by furious a Ver. 13. Ps. 27. 13.

* The apostle had asserted (ch. 10. 36), that believers had always "need of patience," because they received not "their recompense" in present possession, but in future promise. He then proves, by prophetic authority, that "the just shall live by faith;" and proceeds (ch. 11. 1) to define faith as ὑπόστασις, "the firm confidence" (of the reality) "of things hoped for," as if they were in actual possession. — Ἔλεγχος, "the revelation of things not seen," as if they were already before the eyes: whereby he proves that as faith always embraces things future and invisible, it can never be separated from that patience which waits for them.

† In proof of the foregoing statement, Paul now adduces the example of "the elders" (as well those anterior as posterior to Abraham), who obtained "a good report" both of God and of posterity, not through the ceremonial law, in which the unbelieving Jews trusted for righteousness, but through one common faith, and under the uniform influence of unwearied patience.—Ed.

4 By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh.

5 By faith [b]Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

6 [c]But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

7 By faith Noe, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, [*]moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

persecutors,—being fully satisfied, from the promise of God, and your own happy experience, that there is laid up for you, in the new covenant and in heaven, the more substantial, durable, and enriching treasure of everlasting life, purchased for you by Christ, and graciously given to you as your reward in adhering to his cause. 35. Animated therefore by a lively faith in the promises of the gospel, and by the remembrance of your holy fortitude in suffering for him hitherto, take heed, lest, through the continuance or increase of your persecutions, and the workings of your own fear and unbelief under them, ye should relinquish your holy boldness, freedom, and courage, in professing and following of Christ, and your joyful hopes of eternal life through him, which, for the present, afford you noble support and satisfaction under your trials, and shall quickly issue in your enjoyment of eternal happiness above, which will infinitely more than compensate all the troubles you can endure for the sake of Christ on earth: 36. For, according to the wise and holy appointment of God, the declaration of his word, and the disposals of his providence, such is your present state of afflictions and persecutions, that ye absolutely need, and must have, grace to enable you to live in the constant exercise of a calm, quiet, humble, and resigned submission to the sovereign will of God in them;—that after cheerfully yielding up yourselves, through the whole course of your lives, to the commanding and disposing will of God in the most difficult instances of it, ye may receive the promised blessing of eternal life at the end of your spiritual race and warfare. 37. For, according to an ancient prediction applicable to the Messiah in all his remarkable appearances, it is but a very short time, and he will certainly come to destroy your Jewish adversaries, and deliver you from their oppression;—nay, when he will come to the last judgment, for the utter destruction of all unbelieving and impenitent sinners, and to put you into the full possession of eternal life; nor will he tarry one moment beyond the time fixed on as best for his work and your advantage in his eternal purpose. 38. And for your further incitement, remember that, according to a subsequent prediction, whoever are justified through, and purified in heart by faith, shall, by means of that grace, persevere in a life of fellowship with God, obedience to his law, and patient submission to his providence on earth,—and be admitted to a life of blessedness and glory with Christ for ever:—but if any man, after making a profession of faith in Christ, through pride and unbelief, apostatize from him, and renounce the profession of his name, God will certainly loathe, abhor, and miserably destroy him. 39. But we who are sincere in our profession of Christ, and are truly before God what we appear before men, are not of the number of those hypocritical and treacherous professors who revolt from him to their own everlasting destruction; but of those who, having truly believed with our heart, shall steadfastly persevere in holiness, kept by the power of God, through a faith which receives, and will certainly issue in the eternal salvation of our soul.

Reflections upon Chap. X.—In their number, their repetitions, and their frequently spreading the ceremonial defilement, was deeply marked the insufficiency of legal sacrifices and washings to remove our sin, or recommend us to the favour of God. But infinitely meritorious and effectual is the sacrifice of Christ, who, in consequence of God's eternal purposes, covenant engagements, and ancient promises, appeared in our nature, and fulfilled all righteousness in his obedience unto death. The blessed ratification of all his promises; full forgiveness; gracious sanctification; delightful access to God; yea, eternal redemption—are hereby secured for his people. Diligently should we then improve these blessings in the most familiar devotion; in mutual excitement to love and good works; by constancy in church-fellowship and public worship, and in watchfulness against the first and smallest beginnings of apostasy, or contempt of him and his grace. Patiently and in hope should we persevere under our manifold sufferings for his sake, tenderly sympathize with his suffering servants; and steadfastly cleave to him, and live upon him by faith. His comforting promises, refreshing presence, and eternal rewards, will more than balance all our adversities on earth.—But, alas, inexpressible is the guilt and danger of those who wilfully reject or apostatize from him! O my soul, exceedingly fear and quake! Alas, how far and how long I may proceed in the appearances of religion, and, after all, with Judas sink into the depths of hell!

Chap. XI.—Ver. 1. Now, to give you a summary account of the excellent nature and effects of that faith by which men believe unto salvation,—it gives a sort of present subsistence in the mind to, and a confident expectation of, future blessings; which, by the infallible promise of God, are as fully ascertained and realized, to the believer's comfort, as if he actually possessed them. And, merely on the credit of divine revelation, it gives us as clear and convincing a demonstration of invisible things, as if they were ever so plainly exhibited to our natural sight: 2. For, by this realizing and evidencing exercise of faith, our godly ancestors, all along from the time of the first promise till now, obtained an honourable testimony from God, part of which is contained in his word.—3. Though, from reason and observation, we are obliged to conclude the wonderful fabric of this world to have been the workmanship of God, yet it is by faith in his word, as the evidence of things not seen, that we certainly know that God formed all things by a mere act of his will, and that in such beautiful order, out of the mere chaos, once covered with absolute darkness. 4. By faith in God's first promise of Christ's incarnation and sufferings, and in his appointment of sacrifices to prefigure them, Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain,—by which he humbly acknowledged his own guilt, and prefigured the death of the Messiah, as the Lamb of God, to make atonement for the sins of his people; and hence, by some visible token from heaven, as well as by inward intimations to his conscience, God testified to him that his person was justified, and his sacrifice accepted, through Christ. And by means of this faith, as his case stands recorded in the book of God, Abel, though dead long ago, still instructs us that the only way of a sinner's justification before God is through faith in the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ; and that the murder of innocents, and especially of faithful saints, shall be terribly punished. 5. By faith, which rendered him accepted in the Beloved, and purified his heart from dead works to perfect holiness, in the most close walking with God, Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was miraculously translated to heaven, soul and body, without undergoing the ordinary change of death: and, even before he was wrapt up into heaven, God attested to his conscience, and perhaps to his neighbours, that his person and works were accepted in his sight. 6. But without such realizing and evidencing faith in Christ it is impossible to please God; for he that approaches him in prayer, or any other religious worship, must, upon the ground of revelation, believe that God really exists as the only true God, and that he freely gives himself, and all blessings of grace and glory, as an exceeding great and gracious reward, to those that humbly, earnestly, perseveringly, and with their whole heart, seek his face and favour in Christ, in the means of his own appointment, and in reliance on his covenant promises. 7. By faith, Noe, who was righteous before God, and walked with him, crediting his threatening to destroy the old world, and his promise to preserve him and his family, built an ark, wherein they, and a remnant of animals, were saved from the general deluge: by which faith in the truth, power, justice, and mercy of God revealed to him; and by his building the ark, in obedience to God's command; and by his repeated preaching of righteousness,—he doctrinally and practically condemned the inhabitants of the old world: and by his faith in the Messiah, who was typified by his ark as the only mean of salvation, he became heir of the world, renewed after the flood, and of the righteousness of Christ received by faith, and of all the blessings, temporal, spiritual, or eternal, purchased by it. 8. It was by faith in the authority of God, and in his promise to give to him and to his seed a land figurative of the heavenly inheritance, that Abraham, the friend of God, and father of the Jews and of all believers, at his call, left his native country of Chaldea, and set out on a journey to a land which he knew nothing of, no not so much as its name, or the way to it. 9. It was by faith in the promise and protection of God that he, with Isaac and Jacob, his fellow-heirs of the promised Canaan, contentedly wandered, as a stranger and pilgrim, in that country, among the heathen inhabitants, dwelling only in moveable tents: 10. For God having promised to be his exceeding great reward, and his God for ever, and that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, he by faith looked through the figurative Canaan to the earnestly desired and expected, highly privileged, great, glorious, regular, firmly fixed, and everlasting blessedness of heaven, of which God himself is the Contriver, Former, and even the very Substance. 11. It was also by faith, in the faithfulness and power of God engaged in the promise, that Sara, the beloved wife of Abraham, after her recovery from her unbelief, was enabled, beyond all expectation, and all ordinary influence of second causes, to conceive and bear a son, after she had continued barren till the ninetieth year of her age. 12. And in virtue of their faith, a prodigiously numerous offspring descended from them, after both of them had appeared beyond all possibility of having any. 13. And not only did Abraham, Sara, Isaac, and Jacob, live by faith in God's promises and perfections under their trials on earth, but died also in the full and comfortable persuasion, that however little they had experienced of the fulfilment of the promises on earth, God would completely accomplish them,—in giving themselves an immediate entrance into the blessedness of heaven; and in increasing their posterity, and settling them in Canaan as his peculiar people; and in bringing the Messiah from their loins to be the common Saviour of men;—and they avowed that they looked on themselves as no more than aliens and strangers in this world, passing through it in their way to the heavenly country. 14. And this avowal, that their hearts and hopes, interest and happiness, were not placed on any earthly concerns, manifested to all around them that they looked and hoped for, desired and earnestly sought after, the large and delightful abodes of heaven, as their native home, in which they should for ever dwell with God as their Father and Friend. 15. And it is evident, that the country which they sought after was not their native home in Chaldea, where their friends and relations continued; for, if they had been inclined to return thither, they had time, liberty, and power enough to do it with safety. 16. But all their desires and expectations centred on that transcendently more excellent, satisfying, glorious, abiding, incorruptible, and undefiled heavenly inheritance; wherefore God, in his infinite love, condescended to avow himself to be their God in a peculiar and distinguished manner;—and, answerably to this high relation, has graciously appointed, laid out, framed, and fitted up the heavenly mansions for their whole persons, soul and body, to dwell with himself. 17—19. It was by faith in the promises of God to him and to his seed, particularly that which concerned the Messiah and his extensive salvation, that Abraham,—when required, for the eminent trial of his faith and obedience, to offer up in a burnt-offering his only son Isaac, whom he had obtained by such a miraculous conception and birth, and in whom the promises were to be fulfilled,—so readily complied, and proceeded in this work till stopped by God himself,—accounting and concluding in his own mind, that though Isaac should be slain and burnt to ashes, God easily could and would raise him from the dead, in order to fulfil the promises in him and his seed. And, indeed, as at first, he received him from his own and Sara's dead bodies, on that occasion he received him back from that death to which he had been, without any hope to the contrary, heartily devoted. 20—22. It was by faith in the promises of God, that Isaac, by prophetic influence, assigned to Jacob the principal, and to Esau the subordinate, blessings for themselves and their seed;—and that Jacob, when very feeble, in like manner foretold the fate of Joseph's two sons, assigning the principal glory to Ephraim the younger; and that Joseph, when dying, assured his brethren that God would certainly preserve them in, and in due time bring them out of Egypt; and in testimony of his faith herein, appointed them to carry his bones with them to Canaan, and bury them there. 23. It was by faith in God's promises of their preservation in, and deliverance from Egypt, that Moses' parents, observing something extraordinary in their child, dared, contrary to the commandment of Pharaoh their king, to conceal him three months after his birth. 24—26. By faith in the same promises of God, made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and in the invisible things of the heavenly state, Moses, when forty years old, and extraordinarily qualified with learning and wisdom, renounced his adoptive relation to Pharaoh, which might have issued in his succession to the crown of Egypt, quitted the court, and associated himself with his Hebrew brethren; choosing rather to undergo the severest oppression, suffering, and trouble, with God's own peculiar people, than to gratify his flesh with the enjoyment of all the uncertain and perishing grandeur, affluence, and sensual pleasures of a pompous, idolatrous, and luxurious court,—deliberately reckoning reproach, derision, and persecution, for the sake of Christ, and in communion with him and his people, more valuable and useful, for the honour of God and his own spiritual interests, than all the wealth and honours that the kingdom of Egypt could afford:—for he looked off from those perishing riches on the one hand, and beyond those temporal hardships on the other, to the immortal and inexpressible glories reserved for him in heaven, which he knew would more than recompense all the reproaches, wants, and sufferings he could undergo for the sake of a good conscience on earth. 27. By faith in the command and promise of God, about forty years after, he returned from Midian; and, fearless of king Pharaoh's threatenings and wrath, demanded his permission for the Hebrews to leave the country; and at last, regardless of his furious pursuit, led them forth to liberty, by faith depending entirely on the invisible God. 28. By faith in the promise of God to deliver his people from Egypt, and in the promised Messiah, typified by that divinely appointed ordinance, he, and the children of Israel, directed by him, observed the passover, and sprinkled the blood on their upper lintels and door-posts, that the angel, who, that very night, destroyed all the first-born of the Egyptians, might not hurt them. 29. And it was chiefly by his faith in the promise and command of God that the Red sea was divided, and a passage opened for the Israelites from Egypt to the Arabian wilderness,—in which Pharaoh and his army, attempting to follow them, were every one of them drowned. 30. It was by the faith of Joshua, Caleb, and others, in the promise, faithfulness, power, and command of God, that the walls of Jericho miraculously fell down while the Israelites shouted, after they and the ark of God had compassed the city seven days. 31. It was by faith in the God of Israel, and his grant of the land of Canaan to his favourite Jews, that Rahab, a Gentile, who had been a harlot, kindly received the spies whom Joshua sent to view the city,—and so, together with her friends, escaped, when the rest of the inhabitants, who disregarded what they had heard or seen of God's miraculous appearances for Israel, perished in a general slaughter. 32. But why should I multiply further instances of the power and triumphs of faith? both my time, and the intended limits of this epistle, forbid me to give a particular account,—how, by faith in the promise and command of God, Gideon reformed his city, and, with a handful of unarmed men, routed the Midianites; Barak and Deborah, with ten thousand undisciplined troops, vanquished the formidable army of Jaban king of Canaan;—Jephthah overthrew the Ammonites;—Samson, in his life, and at his death, destroyed the Philistines;—David endured manifold trials, conquered giants and nations;—Samuel, by miracles, delivered and terrified his people;—Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, patiently endured their troubles, boldly declared their messages, and, when necessary, confirmed them by miracles;—33. How, through faith in God's promise and providence, Moses and Joshua subdued the Canaanites, and David the nations around;—and they and others not only kept the commandments of God themselves, but reformed their nation, and governed them with great equity and impartiality,—or by remarkable appearances of providence obtained the actual accomplishment of particular promises made to them;—Daniel stopped the mouths of lions in the den: Samson slew one, David another, and Benaiah a third;—34. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, restrained the force of Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace; they, and Elijah, Elisha, and others, escaped the murderous plots and attempts of cruel tyrants; others, as Hezekiah, were recovered from desperate distempers;—or, as Gideon and David, from weakness and cowardice, became valiant conquerors. 35—38. By means of faith, the Shunammite and widow of Zarephath, beheld their deceased sons restored to life; and many, in the persecutions of Ahab, Jehoram, Ahaz, Manasseh, Jehoiakim, or others, courageously endured the most exquisite sufferings and cruel deaths, in hopes of a resurrection to eternal life, refusing to redeem their lives by the smallest apostasy from the truth,—while Isaac, Elisha, Joseph, Samson, Micaiah, and Jeremiah, or others, underwent the most cruel derision, scourging, or imprisonment;—and Naboth, Zechariah, Uriah, and others, were murdered in different cruel and barbarous forms; and others, of whose converse, admonitions, and prayers, the wicked inhabitants of the world were not worthy, as David, Elijah, and others, were obliged to flee about as vagabonds from place to place, and hide themselves in deserts, dens, and caves of the earth. 39, 40. But though these ancient saints and servants of God, by means of their faith, have obtained an honourable testimony in the infallible records of God's word, and embraced and relied upon the promise of the Messiah, yet they never lived to see him come in the flesh, fulfil the work of our redemption, and introduce the glories of the gospel state of the church,—God having provided for us, who now believe, these better things, that their ancient state of religious worship and privileges might not be perfected without some exhibition of Christ in the flesh, fulfilment of all righteousness, and exceeding riches of grace, which are manifested in their transcendent light, glory, and efficacy in the gospel dispensation which we now enjoy.

§ The Romanists, following the Vulgate translation, and rejecting the Greek of the Apostle, render this passage, "he adored the top of his staff;" whereby they obtain an apparent countenance for image worship. But all the Greek MSS. agree in τὴν ἄκρον, which can be translated in no other manner than "upon the top." The Hebrew word translated "staff," may, however, be also translated either "staff" or "bed's head," according as it is pointed; and the latter would be accordant with the authorized version, (Gen. 47. 31), and is supported by all the ancient versions except the LXX., and by modern expositors of the highest order of learning. Still, as the Greek ῥάβδος will bear no other meaning than "staff" or "sceptre," its apostolic adoption from the LXX. should surely entitle it to be retained as the true translation of the Hebrew.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—What a noble grace is unfeigned faith dwelling in the heart! and how extensively useful! Through the infallible declarations of God, it realizes invisible and future things, and gives them a kind of subsistence in our soul. By receiving and resting on the person and righteousness of Christ, it renders us and our services accepted with God.—Crediting his warnings, and obeying his directions, it delivers from danger and death;—it weans the heart from this world, and sets it on things above;—it enables us to wait for the accomplishment of promises, however unlikely and long delayed;—it animates to the most trying obedience; qualifies for a joyful and devout entrance into the eternal state; enables to look into futurities, upon God's authority and credit; and to prefer sufferings with his people, and for his sake, and an exact obedience to his law, to everything earthly: and after exploits unnumbered, it issues in eternal rest and triumph.—Sovereign is God in giving it, or its various degrees, to some, while he withholds it from others;—and in exposing his dearest saints to the most singular trials and heaviest troubles on earth to exercise it. But if he be for us, who can be against or hurt us? And it is highly unworthy for us Christian believers, notwithstanding our greatly superior advantages, to be so much inferior to some ancient saints in the vigour and distinctness of our faith.

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. Since, from the preceding instances of the excellency and power of faith to support under, and triumph over all difficulties and dangers, it appears that we are surrounded on every side with multitudes of glorified believers, who unite in testifying the duty and advantage of an entire reliance upon the infinite wisdom, power, faithfulness, and goodness of God, in the greatest trials; let us, animated by, and in imitation of their example, and as under their eye, cast off the works of darkness; inordinate care about this present world; and the load of ceremonial observances; and, by the influence of God's grace, disentangle ourselves from the power of indwelling corruption; and of every sin to which, through our natural depraved constitution, and our peculiar circumstances, company, and situation in life, we are most easily disposed;—and especially that great sin of unbelief, which stands in direct opposition to faith, and is the root of all apostasy; and, thus disencumbered from every load of temptation or corruption, let us, with persevering fortitude, quietness, and patient resignation to the holy and sovereign will of God under our manifold sufferings, hold on our way with speed, steadiness, and vigour, till we finish that course of faith, affliction, and unreserved obedience, which is appointed for us by God, and marked out in his word and the examples of his saints, till we arrive at the mark of his high calling, and obtain the crown of life; 2. Always by faith looking off from sin, self, and the allurements and terrors of this world, or whatever else would retard and dishearten us, and looking forward to Jesus Christ,—that we may derive grace and strength from him to enable us to follow his most perfect pattern; who is not only an unparalleled example, but the efficient Cause, Leader, and Captain of our faith, to begin, encourage, increase, and perfect it, and crown it with eternal glory;—even as he himself, in the joyful prospect and hopes of the honour to God, salvation to men, and reward of mediatorial glory to himself, which would issue therefrom, calmly submitted to, and with astonishing meekness and patience endured, the agonizing and lingering pains of his crucifixion, and overlooked all the ignominy and reproach of that scandalous form of death, and all the contempt and derision attending it:—for now, in consequence, and as the just reward of all this, he, in that very nature which suffered, is exalted as a triumphant conqueror over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell, to a state of the most perfect, glorious, and everlasting rest, honour, and authority. 3. To prevent dejecting discouragement, impatience, or weariness under your manifold tribulations, and apprehensions of danger, seriously consider and contemplate the person and office of Jesus Christ, in all their circumstances; and particularly in his invincible patience and undisturbed composure of mind, wherewith he for your sakes bore up under, passed through, and triumphed over, all the opprobrious opposition and blasphemous insults which the most malicious and wicked men threw out to his face against his divine person, office, doctrine, and miracles, all the days of his public ministry. 4. And it would be the more sinful, shameful, and dangerous, for you to draw back from your Christian course; for, though ye have already cheerfully suffered the loss of your liberty and property, for your adherence to it, God has hitherto restrained the fury of your wicked persecutors, that ye have never been called to suffer unto death in striving to avoid sin. 5. Are ye unmindful of, or dare ye forget, or be unaffected with, the endearing exhortation by which God, as a most tender and compassionate Father, for your direction, caution, and comfort, under tribulation, warns and beseeches you, on the one hand, to beware of overlooking and contemning his kind chastisements of you on account of your sin, and for your spiritual and eternal good, or of behaving in an unaffected, obstinate, and incorrigible manner under them;—and, on the other, of impatiently, ignorantly, perversely, and unbelievingly, shrinking, and being disheartened, to the neglect of duty, despairing of relief, or refusing to be comforted. 6. For the Lord does not afflict his children in wrath, demanding satisfaction for their sins,—but either, in lesser or greater severity, to manifest his distinguished kindness to them, in imbittering their sins, purging from them, and preparing for heaven. 7. If therefore ye be not only visited with afflictions, but enabled, in faith, patience, and perseverance, to submit to, and courageously bear up under them, God, as a kind but infinitely wise Father, is certainly correcting you as his dear children, to promote his own glory and your unspeakable advantage. 8. But if, notwithstanding your remaining sinfulness, ye are indulged in uninterrupted ease and prosperity in the world, and thus exempted from the corrective and instructive chastenings wherewith God exercises the very best of his children;—or if ye are not brought to some cordial submission, to this wholesome and necessary discipline of his family, God neglects you, as a spurious issue, who are none of his true children, nor heirs of his heavenly inheritance. 9. Moreover if, in the days of our youth, we all submitted to the chastisements of those natural parents, from whom we derived our frail, corrupt, and mortal bodies, and who, under God, provided for their subsistence and safety, have we not infinitely stronger reasons to submit to the sovereign authority and disposal of him who is the immediate Creator, Preserver, and Governor of our immortal souls, and renews them by his regenerating grace;—and meekly, and even thankfully, to accept of his fatherly chastisements for our iniquities, being ashamed of, and turning from the causes thereof, that so we may live in holy fellowship with and devotedness to him here, and in heavenly glory with him hereafter? 10. For truly our natural parents, during the short time of our minority, were apt to correct us in an arbitrary manner, through humour, passion, pride, or weakness, without duly aiming at our good, or at least mistaking the proper season or measure of the rod; and all the benefit we received from it was confined to this life. But God corrects us, in infinite wisdom and compassion, in order that he may effectually promote our spiritual and eternal benefit, by subduing and purging away our sin, and rendering us more and more like to himself in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. 11. It is true, indeed, that even fatherly chastenings are in themselves irksome and distressing while we are under them; yet, being sanctified by God, and, in consequence thereof, dutifully endured by us, they render us more wise, humble, watchful, prayerful, more circumspect in our walk, more weaned from this world, and more spiritual, holy, and heavenly-minded, than before; and work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 12. Since, therefore, these are the gracious ends and advantages of God's correcting you with such manifold sore afflictions, beware of giving way to dejection and despondency under them, or of disheartening one another, but encourage yourselves, and each other, in the Lord your God, to hold on in his ways with alacrity, vigour, joy, and triumph. 13. And that your afflictions be suitably improved, in a close adherence to Christ, and a conversation becoming the gospel, remove all hinderances and stumblingblocks out of your own and your brethren's way to eternal life, that ye and they may walk uprightly, and run steadily in the paths of truth and holiness; lest through temptation, ignorance, or fear of suffering, or the cunning craftiness of Satan and his agents, any weak Christians among you should be turned aside from Christ, and his paths of righteousness and grace: but rather let it be your earnest care that such may be duly informed, directed, encouraged, strengthened, and confirmed in the profession, faith, hope, and holiness of the gospel. 14. Study, by all means, to pursue and maintain peace with all men, Jews or Gentiles, friends or enemies, and to promote universal holiness in heart and life, in conformity to the image and will of God; since, without a conscientious regard to this, no man, be his pretences or profession what they will, can be fit for, or, in the nature of things, or according to the constitution of the gospel, ever be admitted to immediate fellowship with Christ and God in him. 15. Therefore let each of you carefully inspect your own principles, temper, and conduct, and watch over one another, lest any of you, through sloth, carnality, or unbelief, should live destitute of an interest in the special favour of God, and of a real work of heart-changing grace;—lest any apostate, or any corrupt principle of apostasy in doctrine or practice, offensive to God, and ruinous to men, should spring up among you, to the hurt of the infected, and the grief and trouble of others, and thereby many be defiled with erroneous principles, or divisive or profane practices, marring the beauty, purity, peace, and order of the church: 16. Lest any of you who make a profession of Christ's name, should abandon himself to whoredom or other uncleanness, or profanely undervalue the special blessings of the new covenant and gospel state of the church; as Esau, who, for one morsel of meat to gratify his sensual appetite, sold his birth-person, as Esau, [p]who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright.

17 For ye know how that afterward, [q]when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, [o]though he sought it carefully with tears.

18 For ye[†] are not come unto [r]the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest,

19 [s]And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more:

20 (For they could not endure that which was commanded, [t]And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart:

21 [u]And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:[‡])

22 But ye are come unto [x]mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels,

23 To the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are [*]written in heaven, and to [y]God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect,

24 And to Jesus [z]the mediator of the new [†]covenant, and to [a]the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.[‡]

25 [b]See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for [c]if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven:

26 Whose voice [d]then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven.

27 And this word, [e]Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that [§]are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

28 Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, [||]let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear:

right, and all the peculiar honours and blessings attending it;—the consequences of which were very tremendous and irretrievable. 17. For ye cannot but have learned from scripture, that, when he earnestly wished to have recovered it, in order to obtain his father's principal blessing, his most importunate and mournful entreaties were, through the direction of God, absolutely rejected by his father Isaac;—and so will every empty professor of Christianity at the last day hopelessly cry for mercy, and bewail his condition, when God shall make him feel the terrible effects of his irreversible sentence of condemnation.—18. The transcendent excellency of the blessings of the gospel above those of the ceremonial dispensation, renders it also the more sinful and dangerous to come short of, or slight them;—for ye are not called to covenant or hold fellowship with God in the manner of your fathers, at the material mountain of Sinai, and when covered with flaming fire, thick clouds of smoke, and storms of thunder;—which represented that dispensation as carnal and moveable, terrible in its threatenings, dark in its manifestations, and severe in its curses and punishments; 19. And where the thunders and the voice, by which the ten commandments were published, were so terrible, that your fathers entreated that God would no more speak to them in so immediate and awful a manner, but communicate his mind and will by the ministry of Moses, as a mediator between him and them. 20. Conscious to themselves that they were utterly incapable of perfect obedience to God's commandments, or of being justified by their imperfect obedience, they could not even bear up under those dreadful appearances of God, which were displayed in the manner of publishing them:—for, as an awful indication of his inaccessibleness to sinners, according to the tenor of this law, and of the vengeance to be executed upon the violators of it,—if either man or beast but touched mount Sinai, during that solemnity of the Divine Presence, he or it was to be stoned to death, or pierced through and slain. 21. Nay, so alarmingly dreadful were the tokens of the Divine Majesty, that Moses, notwithstanding his eminent sanctity, his office of mediator between God and the people, and all the familiar converse which he had with him, was overwhelmed with the utmost terror and consternation.—22. But, as a prelude of, and as a step of advance towards the inexpressibly delightful happiness of the heavenly and eternal state of the church, ye are brought, under the gospel dispensation, into delightful fellowship with God, in his most excellent state of ordinances, in which is the perfection of beauty and joy of the whole earth,—and in which God, who has all life in himself, and bestows all life on others, forms his numerous people, Jews and Gentiles, into a comely and orderly society, endowed with glorious privileges, and governed and protected by himself;—a society, the original, nature, privileges, and tendency of which are heavenly,—and in which ye are admitted to a most noble and exalted communion, in love and service, with astonishing multitudes of holy angels, 23. And into a spiritual and holy fellowship with the delightful assembly of all true believers in earth or heaven, who are born again by the Spirit of God, and adopted into his family, as heirs of himself, and joint heirs with Christ, in whom they were chosen before the foundation of the world, who were written in his book of life, and are now engraved on his heart, as their interceding Advocate:—and to God the Judge of all, as your reconciled Father, who has accepted you in his beloved Son, and will quickly vindicate your character and reward your services:—and, though not yet personally admitted to heaven, ye have spiritual communion in faith, love, joy, worship, and obedience, with all the separated spirits of all the saints of former ages; which, having departed from their bodies, do now live perfectly free from sin, sorrow, temptation, trouble, or danger, and enjoy perfect holiness and happiness in the vision and enjoyment of, and likeness to, God,—being children of the same Father, united to the same Head, Christ, as living members of his mystical body, animated by the same Spirit, and entitled to the same everlasting inheritance; 24. And ye are brought not to Moses, a typical mediator, but to Jesus, the only true and effectual Saviour and Mediator between God and men, with whom the covenant of grace was made, by whom its conditions are fulfilled, and its blessings administered:—and ye have communion with God and his Son, angels and people, not by bloody sacrifices of beasts, but by faith in the virtue of Jesus' precious blood, which was shed for many, and is divinely applied to your consciences for justification, sanctification, spiritual comfort, and eternal salvation;—and which speaks better things than Abel's own blood, which cried for just vengeance on Cain his murderer, and still speaks warnings of wrath to all persons of a persecuting spirit; nay, better things than the blood of Abel's sacrifice, which only availed for his own acceptance;—whereas this blood of Jesus pleads for pardon and everlasting life to his betrayers and murderers, and to all sorts of sinners who believe in him.—25. Since therefore the gospel state of the church is so incomparably more excellent than the Jewish, as ye regard the glory of God or your own salvation, take heed, lest temptations, worldly-mindedness, unbelief, or excessive attachment to ancient ceremonies, should make you reject, refuse, or turn away from that blessed Mediator of the new covenant, who, in the most gracious and endearing manner, speaks to you in his preached gospel, and by the miraculous influences of his Spirit which attend it;—for if your fathers, who rebelled against Moses, and refused to receive the laws of God at his mouth, did not escape distinguished punishments, how much more impossible is it that any of us should escape, who, through unbelief, reject, despise, and disobey him who is the Lord from heaven, and who, being ascended to heaven, thence publishes to us the glad tidings of eternal salvation, in all their spirituality, light, and glory, by his word and Spirit. 26. Whose voice of thunder and awful majesty at the giving of the law, made mount Sinai, and the people around it, to quake and tremble;—but now, in order to introduce the full happiness of the gospel dispensation, he has promised to remove and destroy the whole Jewish constitution, civil and ecclesiastic. 27. And his words, yet once more, plainly intimate that the Jewish constitution, in which so many things were made by the hands of men, should be removed, that the glorious and unalterable privileges, worship, and ordinances of the gospel, which are introduced in their stead, might abide till the end of the world. 28. Since therefore we by faith actually receive the blessed and fixed state of the gospel church, with all its privileges and blessings, under Christ our Royal Prince and Head, let us, according to the nature, provisions, and encouragements of this kingdom, hold fast our profession; and, in a careful and conscientious use of the ordinances of Christ, receive and improve those free favours which God has bestowed upon us, to excite and enable us to serve, worship, and glorify him in an acceptable manner through Jesus Christ; under a deep sense o our meanness and vileness, and of his holiness, power, and majesty; 29. For he, who is our covenant God—by visible dispensations, as we are professed Christians,—and by special grace, as we are true believers,—is still infinitely jealous for his own glory with respect to his worship; and his righteous indignation burns against those who reject him and the blessings of his kingdom, by unbelief and daring contempt.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—There is need of much care and activity in imitating ancient saints, and especially in imitating Jesus our Forerunner, in persevering faith, patience, and holiness. And great is our encouragement in his success, and from his furnishing, directing, and strengthening us for our work. What kindness and care the Lord shows in afflicting us only for our great honour and benefit! And yet we rarely either relish or behave aright under afflictions, especially if they are severe. There is need of watchfulness, mutual excitement, and assistance, in our Christian course, and that the strong should bear with and help the weak.—And delightful is the appearance, and happy the end, when peace and holiness are properly united in our conduct. But, alas! fearful and desperate is the issue of unconcern under the means of grace, or of apostasy from gospel truth. —Delightful is the state of the gospel church, of the new covenant, and of heaven; and how much superior to that under the law, and the ceremonies. Firm is its establishment, and sweetly our exalted Redeemer speaks to us therein. With earnest attention and holy awe ought we then to hear his voice, and perform the duties of his worship. No covenant relation, or gospel grace, can render him less holy, just, jealous, awful, or majestic. And great fear is due unto him in the meeting of his saints.

CHAP. XIII.—Ver. 1. And, as ye have begun, let it be your earnest care and endeavour to maintain an abiding and growing exercise of brotherly love, and an affectionate temper and behaviour, in all offices of friendship one towards another, and towards all your fellow-Christians, who are members of the same spiritual family, children of the same heavenly Father, partakers of the same grace, and heirs together of the same glory. 2. Extend your brotherly compassion also to strangers, especially those who for righteousness' sake are driven from their homes, or go about voluntarily preaching the gospel: receive them into your hearts and houses, and supply them with everything needful. This conduct will at once honour God, relieve your distressed brethren, and tend to your own satisfaction and advantage; for by this generous temper, Abraham, Lot, and others, had the honour and benefit of entertaining angels instead of strangers. 3. And as ye have had compassion on me in my bonds, I earnestly recommend to you to bear on your hearts, sympathize with, pray for, and, as far as in you lies, contribute to the relief and comfort of those faithful ministers or professors who are imprisoned, or otherwise persecuted, for righteousness' sake, considering yourselves as members of the same mystical body, and still liable to the like afflictions in your present mortal state. 4. Marriage, when duly entered into by proper persons, ought to be reckoned an honourable ordinance of God, for producing a lawful offspring, for connecting families, and for the good of society, and as a proper remedy against all uncleanness; but fearful are the punishments which they who indulge themselves in whoredom and adultery may expect from God in this world, and especially in the last judgment and eternal state. 5. And to promote your exact performance of the duties which I have mentioned, see that none of you indulge immoderate desires or pursuits after the things of this world, either in excessive or unjust eagerness to obtain them, or in grudging proper expenses for the reasonable support of yourselves and families, or in unwillingness to communicate to the necessities of others; and study always to be heartily pleased with, and thankful for, the circumstances, however mean and afflicted, into which God, your infinitely wise and gracious Father, puts you: for he himself, who is almighty, all-sufficient, and unchangeable in faithfulness, has, for your encouragement in troubles and temptations solemnly promised that he will at no time, and on no account, leave you to yourselves or your enemies; but will be with you, to strengthen, help, uphold, guide, and bring you to glory. 6. So that, resting by faith upon this comprehensive promise, as applicable to ourselves, we may, and ought, each for himself, with humble confidence, sweet composure, and holy boldness, to avow that, in all our straits, wants, and troubles, the almighty and all-gracious JEHOVAH is our Support, Succour, and Defence, and on our side, to take our part, revive our soul, and overrule everything for our good; and therefore we will not be afraid of the very worst that our most powerful, subtle, and inveterate enemies on earth can do against us. 7. And to promote your performance of such duties, and assured faith in such promises, see that ye pay a due regard to them who have been your faithful ministers and spiritual guides, under Christ their great Lord and Master; and in imitation of their faith and faithfulness, keep in mind, embrace, and adhere to those doctrines, commands, and promises which they, according to the word of God, delivered to you, as the only rule of your faith, worship, and obedience; seriously reflecting on the peaceful and joyous manner in which they finished their course of holiness, and obtained a happy dismission from, and victory over, every trouble and danger by death,—and on the glorious scope and object of their ministration and walk. 8. Even Jesus Christ, our anointed Saviour, who, in his divine person, offices, and saving virtue, is unchangeably the same in all the periods of the church, past, present, and to come. 9. Take heed, therefore, lest, by departing from this unchangeable Saviour, as preached and exemplified to you by your former pastors, ye should, like ships in a storm, or clouds in the air, be carried away with notions about Jewish ceremonies, different from, foreign to, and inconsistent with, the simplicity of the gospel of Christ; for it is incomparably better to have your souls fully persuaded of, and steadfastly fixed in a dependence on, the free favour of God in Christ, revealed in the gospel, for the remission of sin, peace of conscience, and acceptance with God, unto eternal life,—and your heart fortified against wavering about the truth and importance of this doctrine, by an experience of its renewing, quickening, and comforting efficacy,—than to expect that blessings can be obtained by ceremonial ordinances relative to sacrifices, meats, and drinks, which never, even under the Old Testament, were of any spiritual and saving advantage to those that were most occupied therein. 10. We members of the New Testament church have an incomparably better altar and sacrifice in our Lord Jesus Christ, which furnishes an incomparable feast of spiritual and eternal blessings to our faith; which they who still cleave to, and rely on ceremonial observances, have no authority or claim to partake of, any more than the priests had to eat any part of the more noted sin-offerings. 11. For according to the appointment of God, the bodies of those sacrificed animals, the blood of which was carried by the high priest into the holy of holies on the great day of national atonement, were wholly burnt without the camp. 12. In evident fulfilment of which type, as well as to prefigure his leaving the Jewish nation to miserable ruin, Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, that he might effectually make atonement for the sins of his spiritual Israel, and consecrate them as a peculiar people to God by the shedding of his blood, suffered his painful and ignominious crucifixion on mount Calvary without the gates of Jerusalem. 13. Let us therefore, who profess his name, and look for salvation through him, go forth, by faith and hope, desire and love, to him, leaving the Jewish temple, altars, and all the legal institutions pertaining to them, and all the concernments, allurements, and enjoyments of this present world, behind us, as things which we have no further expectations from, or concern with, and cheerfully and boldly own and confess a crucified Redeemer, notwithstanding all the shame, contempt, and scorn we may suffer for his sake: 14. For as the city of Jerusalem, which succeeded the camp in the wilderness as the seat of ceremonial worship and political ordinances, will quickly be destroyed by the Romans; so we believers have no durable state of happiness or settled residence in this lower world,—but, as strangers and pilgrims on earth, we realize by faith, earnestly desire, look, and long for, and, by all the ways and means of God's appointment, seek for a state of everlasting rest and peace, honour and safety, harmony and delight, in the future blessedness of heaven. 15. sideration, therefore, of Christ's having redeemed and consecrated us to God by his own blood, let us at all times, in all circumstances, and for everything, especially for the blessings of redemption, offer up,—through him as our only High Priest, Sacrificer, Advocate, and Altar that sanctifies our gifts,—the sacrifices of grateful acknowledgments, praises, and thanksgivings. 16. And while your hearts and lips are full of gratitude and praise to God through Christ, be careful to cultivate a merciful, kind, and generous temper, and to abound in all acts of beneficence towards your fellow-creatures, especially the poor; for this, as well as thankful praise, is, through Christ and his only meritorious oblation, very acceptable to God as your reconciled Father. 17. And as ever ye would improve the appointed means of evangelically discharging the above-mentioned duties, not only regard the faith and holiness of your deceased pastors, but religiously regard the doctrines and precepts, of those who are, or may hereafter be, your spiritual guides: and, as far as the word of God permits, receive and submit to their instructions, exhortations, admonitions, and reproofs; for, if faithful, they, with all diligence, watch over you in the Lord, that they may inspect your principles, tempers, and behaviour, and guard and caution you against all iniquity, error, and spiritual danger, and apply themselves to promote the edification and eternal salvation of your souls,—in the affecting view of giving an account to Christ, in the last judgment, of their faithfulness, diligence, and success:—which they wish to do with joy, that their labours have issued in your eternal welfare; not with grief, that they have issued in your aggravated condemnation and ruin. 18. Sensible of the awfulness and difficulty of our work, and of our insufficiency for it, we ministers of the gospel earnestly request your continual importunate prayers for us; that whatever our success be, we may be found faithful in the day of Christ; for, notwithstanding our sufferings, and the suggestions of our enemies, our consciences bear us witness that we uprightly intend the honour of Christ and the good of souls, and are heartily desirous, and determined, through his strengthening us, to live soberly, righteously, and godly, suitably to our Christian and ministerial character, in all our behaviour towards God or man. 19. And I particularly beg your united prayers for my own direction, support, and protection, under my present trials, and for the blessing of God upon the services in which I am now engaged; and that, if it be for his honour, he may deliver me from my present confinement, and allow me an opportunity of paying you another visit, to our mutual comfort and edification.—20. And for this, and all other useful purposes, may our reconciled God, Father, and Friend, the Author and Giver of all true peace and prosperity,—who, by an act of supreme authority, judicially discharged, and raised from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, as a public person, who had represented, and fully satisfied his law and justice for all the elect, and whom, in all his offices, he constituted the great Shepherd of his ransomed people, to gather, guard, lead, feed, and bring them safe to eternal glory,—in virtue of his bloody sufferings and death, whereby he fulfilled the condition, purchased the blessings, and confirmed the promises of the new and everlasting covenant of grace.—21. Rectify every disorder of your souls, and of your society, that ye may be thoroughly prepared, disposed, and enabled to perform every good work relative to himself, yourselves, or others, in a holy, spiritual, and evangelical manner, from principles of faith and love, according to the rule of his word, in obedience to his command, and for his glory;—and work in you to will and to do everything as in his sight, conformably to his image, agreeably to his holy nature and will, and acceptably to him, as the effects of his own grace through the merits and mediation of Christ.—22. And now let me beseech you, my dear countrymen and fellow-Christians, that, laying aside all prejudice, ye readily receive, consider, and improve these exhortations, consolations, instructions, and cautions, which I have given you in this letter, as briefly as the number and importance of the contents, and my ardent concern for your real advantage, could permit. 23. And know, for your comfort, that Timothy, who was for a time my fellow-prisoner in Christ, is now released, and gone from this place upon important business; and, if he come quickly back, I intend, if the Lord grant me a release, to come along with him to visit you. 24. Meanwhile, let such of you, to whom this letter comes, present my affectionate and Christian respects to all your church rulers and fellow-Christians, who behave as sanctified by the Spirit of God. 25. And may the free love and favour of God through Jesus Christ, with all the blessed manifestations, fruits, and effects of it, attend all and every one of you, for your growth in grace and in the knowledge of Christ, and for your direction, preservation, and comfort, till ye arrive at his heavenly kingdom.

Reflections upon Chap. XIII.—It is very delightful when professed Christians are remarkable for mutual and fervent charity—for kind hospitality—tender sympathy—seasonable liberality—for untainted chastity—for contentedly living on God as their portion—for imitation of deceased ministers—obedience to, and fervent prayer for, living ministers of Christ—and for steadfast adherence to truth, and readiness to suffer for, and serve their dying Redeemer.—What an all-sufficient Saviour is he to, and what marvellous things hath he done for us, to engage us to love, trust in, and cleave to him!—Awful is the office, work, and account of gospel ministers, and infinite is the mercy that a reconciled God of grace, and a risen Saviour and chief Shepherd, have, by the new covenant, provided proper furniture and assistance, as well as rewards, for both ministers and people who uprightly aim at his honour.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

The epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, furnish three great gospel lights for illuminating the dark pages of the law. That to the Hebrews seems to have been directed to parties exclusively Jews, for all its arguments are drawn from purely scriptural sources; and, while they evidence the intimate familiarity of the writer with the most minute ordinances of the law, they imply an equal acquaintance with them in the parties to whom they are addressed. The great object of the epistle seems reducible to three points:—1. Christ was superior to angels in nature; 2. To Moses as a lawgiver; 3. To Aaron as a priest; and, if proved superior to them, the conclusion must be inevitable with a Jew—he must therefore be the only true God.—Ed.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE

JAMES wrote this epistle to his Hebrew brethren of the twelve tribes, who were dispersed in the several provinces of the Roman empire; many of whom had been converted to the Christian faith. The scope thereof is to stir them up to manifest their faith by their good works;—to bear their trials with cheerfulness and patience;—maintain honourable thoughts of God;—watch over their turbulent passions;—receive the word of God with meekness, and put it into practice; chap. i.: —conduct themselves impartially to the rich, and kindly to the poor; ii.: to guard against reviling, censorious, and imperious language; iii.: and a litigious, proud, worldly, and envious spirit, and overlooking of God's providence; iv.: and against luxury, injustice, and profane swearing;—and to patience, mutual confession of faults, fervent prayer, and a diligent study to promote one another's spiritual welfare; v.

[James, the son of Alpheus, the brother of Jude, and the near relation of our Lord, called also James the less, (Mark xv. 40), either on account of inferiority in stature or age to James the son of Zebedee, is generally esteemed the writer of this epistle. Ecclesiastical history, confirmed by the Acts of the Apostles, xii. 17; xv. 13; xxi. 13; and some of the Epistles, 1 Cor. xv. 7; Gal. i. 19; ii. 9, 12, represents him as residing generally at Jerusalem superintending the churches, till the time of his martyrdom, A. D. 62. This epistle is found in the ancient Syriac version, which was completed in the end of the first, or beginning of the second century. It is alluded to by Clemens Romanus, Hermas, and Ignatius, and directly cited by Origen, Jerome, and Athanasius, which allusions and citations concur with its internal evidence, to attest its inspired character. It is called general, because not addressed to any particular church, but "to the twelve tribes scattered abroad." It contains references to Gen. xv. 6. & xx. 17. & xxii. 9—12; Deut. ix. 18—20; Josh. ii. 1; 1 Kin. iii. 9, 11, 12. & viii. 46. & xvii. 1. & xviii. 42—45; Job i. 21, 22. & xlii. 10; Ps. xciv. 12; Is. xli. 8; Jer. xxix. 12, 13; Mal. iii. 6.—ED.]

JAMES,[a] a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

2 My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations;[*]

3 Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

6 But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth[b] is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 [c]A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways.

9 Let the brother of low degree [*] rejoice [d] in that he is exalted;[†]

10 [e]But the rich, in that he is made low:[‡] because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

11 For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12 Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for, when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

13 Let no man say when he is tempted,[§] I

This joy in "temptations" is perfectly consistent with the petition, "Lead us not into temptation;" for while it is the believer's privilege to pray for exemption from trial before it comes, it is his duty to submit to it when God actually sends it; and, moreover, to rejoice in it as an additional evidence of God's fatherly love (Heb. 12. 6), and an instrument employed by the Spirit for his advancement in grace (2 Cor. 4. 15, 16), and increase of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. —ED.

§ The word "tempted" here refers not to those trials by poverty or persecution (ver. 9), that arise from Providence, as means of growth in grace, but to those solicitations to sin that arise from an evil heart, and tend to perdition (ver. 14). Both are, indeed, temptations, but they arise from different sources, and have different ends.—ED.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 2. My fellow-descendants from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and fellow-believers in Christ, scattered through the Roman empire, or other places of the world, never be discouraged by the various afflictions which ye meet with for the trial and excitement of your grace, and the persecutions which ye endure for the sake of Christ and the gospel: but rather esteem it your honour and joy that ye are called and enabled thus to bear a faithful testimony for him, to his glory, and to your own and others' spiritual advantage; 3. Being fully persuaded in your own minds, from the infallible oracles of God and your own experience, that they are designed and managed by God for trying, proving, and rendering approved, the truth and efficacy of your faith in Christ, and your constancy in your profession;—and that thereby, through the concurring influence of the Holy Ghost, there may be produced and increased in you a calm submission and persevering resignation to the sovereign will and holy providence of God in the most afflictive dispensations. 4. Let patience, therefore, with the most meek, humble, composed, resigned, and cheerful frame of spirit, fully exercise itself, without any check or disturbance from your sinful passions; and persevere therein, notwithstanding the number, weight, diversity, or continuance of your troubles; that, in the issue, ye may become perfect in every grace, and be admitted to the complete holiness and happiness of the heavenly state. 5. And if any of you, under your afflictions, find a want of spiritual wisdom to direct you to judge of, behave under, and rightly improve them, let such, under an humbling sense of their own weakness, and of the insufficiency of all creatures to conduct them, by earnest prayer, in the name of Christ, apply to the God of all light and grace,—who is so ready to bestow every needful blessing upon men, and who bountifully distributes his favours to all, especially to humble supplicants, without ever upbraiding them with their ignorance, folly, unworthiness, or misimprovement of former favours,—for the directions of his word, providence, and Spirit,—and they shall, without fail, be granted. 6. But to obtain this gracious answer, you must present your requests with a firm dependence on Christ, and on the wisdom, power, faithfulness, and goodness of God in him, for a performance of his promises; without any staggering at them through unbelief: for he that gives way to distrust and sinful jealousies, whether God can or will perform his gracious promises or not, is altogether unsteady and restless in his principles and practice. 7. And it is quite absurd for any one, who has such a diffident and fluctuating temper of spirit, which is so dishonourable to the promises and perfections of God, to expect that his unstable and unbelieving prayers shall ever bring him any important favours from God. 8. A man, whose heart is thus divided between hope and despondency, or between God and the world, is always unsettled in religion, continually hesitating, fickle, and perplexed, in all his thoughts, words, and actions; and so can never expect to speed in his prayers. 9—11. But as all they who are united to Christ, and born of the Spirit, may warrantably plead for and expect every promised blessing, let such as are poor, oppressed, and persecuted, and whose minds are brought down to their lot, rejoice and glory, that amidst their poverty they are advanced to the spiritual dignities and privileges of the new covenant, and are honoured to suffer for the sake of Christ and his gospel; and let them whose circumstances are easy or affluent, rejoice that God has given them low thoughts of themselves, and all their earthly enjoyments, or calls them to part with them:—as the wealthiest, the most grand and honourable, must quickly die away from whatever they have, and are often like flowers or grass in the midst of their carnal projects, prosperity, and honour. 12. But happy are they who are enabled, in a Christian manner, to bear losses and tribulations here for the sake of Christ;—for when they have endured them with faith, patience, humble submission, and holy fortitude, they shall be graciously rewarded with that immortal and incorruptible blessedness and glory, which the Lord Jesus, and God in him, has freely promised, and will certainly give at the last day to all those who, from a principle of faith in Christ, supremely esteem and delight in him, and look and long for his glorious appearance to complete their salvation.—13. Let no man under his afflictions fret and murmur, or pretend that God thereby tempts him to sin; for God is so infinitely holy in his am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man:

14 [f]But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

15 [g]Then, when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

"the law of liberty" will be found to be a name for the whole gospel revelation, because Christ has therein declared us free from the Mosaic ordinances and the wrath and curse of an offended God.—Note. The term "law" is employed to signify the gospel revelation by the figure antanaclasis, or allusion. nature and will, purposes and works, that it is absolutely impossible for him to be influenced to anything sinful; or to entice, persuade, influence, or necessitate any to commit the least moral evil. 14, 15, But when men, under afflictions or otherwise, are drawn into acts of sin, it is entirely owing to the violent and beguiling influence of their own inward lusts and corruptions, which drag them off from the ways of truth and holiness, and by the deceitful appearances of carnal ease, pleasure, or profit, decoy them into sin. And it is only when these inward corrupt inclinations have gained the approbation and free consent of the will that they produce actual sin: and when actual sin is completed, allowed of, persisted in, and indulged in impenitence and unbelief, it not only renders liable to, but will certainly issue in, everlasting misery, as its proper wages and fruit. 16. Beware therefore, my dear brethren, lest any of you apostatize from the truth of the gospel, or indulge such abominably erroneous, blasphemous, and injurious conceptions of God or his ways, as if he could do anything to promote or encourage sin. 17. On the contrary, everything that is naturally, morally, or supernaturally good, every blessing of creation, providence, and grace, and nothing but what is good, proceeds from this infinite, eternal, and unchangeable Fountain, Author, and Bestower of all light, knowledge, holiness, and happiness, grace or glory. 18. And we believers have the most endearing proof of his being the Fountain and Author of everything holy and useful;—for not on account of, or by, any wisdom, power, or merit in us, but merely of his own sovereign grace and good will, by means of the gospel, he has implanted vital principles of grace in our hearts, and thus begotten us to a lively hope of an everlasting inheritance, that we might be rendered his most excellent creatures, consecrated to his service, and a pledge and earnest of his converting multitudes to his Son. 19, 20. Wherefore, my Christian brethren, according to your character and obligations, as new creatures, be always attentive to what he declares in his word concerning himself or his ways, and never be rash in your thoughts or speeches concerning God, and his ways of providence or grace; or even in turning preachers, and giving your views of difficult passages of scripture: and never, no not in disputing for gospel truths, indulge a wrathful and passionate treatment of such as differ from you:—for unguarded heat and intemperate passion, proceeding from pride, selfishness, and impatience of contradiction, are so far from serving God's righteous cause, or recommending to others the method of justification through the imputed righteousness of Christ, or the practice of righteousness which God's law requires, that they render men incapable of speaking aright for him, and prejudice the minds of others against what is really true and good. 21. Wherefore cast away with abhorrence all these corrupt affections and overflowings of malice, which are exceedingly sinful, and render your souls unfruitful in anything good; and with all humility, modesty, and submission of your understandings, consciences, hearts, and affections to the authority of God in his word, cordially embrace it with faith and love; that being, as it were, vitally united with your souls, it may, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, be instrumental in conforming your hearts and lives more and more to its own holy likeness, and in efficaciously nourishing you up in grace, till you arrive at the complete possession of the heavenly blessedness. 22. And that it may have this happy effect upon you, see that it influence you to practise its excellent and holy principles in your lives; and never delude yourselves, or cheat yourselves out of your eternal happiness, by giving it a bare hearing, assent, or place in your notions. 23, 24. For, let your pretences be what they will, if you merely hear the truths of God, and do not by faith and love reduce them to practice in your whole conversation, ye can only have some notions and transient convictions of your guilt, depravity, danger, and need of Christ and his grace; and will quickly lay aside your concern, and go on in your impenitence, unbelief, and wicked practices, as before. 25. But if you accurately search into the gospel revelation, in which our spiritual deliverance from the broken law and ancient ceremonies is so clearly manifested and perfectly bestowed, and heedfully persevere in the faith and practice of it, living in the exercise of every grace, and discharge of every duty answerable to it, ye shall have great happiness at the end of your Christian course. 26. And remember that, if you make ever so much pretence to, show of, or talk about religion, yet, if you indulge yourselves in profane and abusive language, or in railing against, reviling, censuring, or slandering your neighbours, and flatter yourselves as if zeal for God would justify your proud, passionate, bitter, and injurious words,—your religion is all a mere farce, and will never do you any real service. 27. Pure religion, that is unmixed with human inventions, or with carnal principles, motives, and ends, and which is according to the law and influence of God, and is exercised as in his sight, and with a view to his glory, disposes and engages Christians to be tender, kind, and compassionate, to the needy and distressed, in doing all they can for the relief and comfort of poor fatherless children and destitute widows, and to behave in a holy and circumspect manner, free from the pollutions of this evil and insnaring world, that they may not bring any shame upon their conscience, and disgrace upon their hopes or character, by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, or the pride of life.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—God takes care of his people, be they scattered how or where they will. Their tribulations for his name's sake may be great, but should be joyfully borne, as they shall be overruled for the trial and improvement of their present grace, and for the enhancement of their eternal glory. All the fulness of this world is but a fading portion when compared with the exalted and immortal blessedness of humble Christians. Great is the need of spiritual wisdom to direct our behaviour under our diversified trials; and infinite the mercy that our heavenly Father is so ready to grant it, if asked. But, alas! many, by their unbelief and inconstancy, hinder the success of their own prayers. Great is the folly of charging our sins on God, who is infinitely and unchangeably holy. Regenerating grace, and everything good, comes from God's sovereign kindness, and ought to redound to his praise and honour;—but all evil comes from ourselves. What need then have we to mortify our lusts, and to watch against our pride, passion, and hard thoughts of God!—With great humility, reverence, and faith, ought we to hear, receive, and improve his word. And with deep concern should we guard against deceiving our souls in matters of eternal consequence. We have to do with a God who requires truth in the inward parts. It is not high pretences, but a renewed heart and holy life, that can evidence us to be real Christians. And an unruly tongue, disregard of the poor, or attachment to carnal persons and things, may prove us graceless amidst the most splendid glare of a high profession.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1—7. Beware of taking up with such an empty profession of the truths, and of faith in Jesus Christ, our infinitely glorious and highly exalted Lord, the Purchaser and Bestower of all glory upon us, as leaves you under the power of a partial, unjust, and carnal regard to men, not according to their religious characters, or the merits of their cause, but according to their higher or lower circumstances in life.—A preferring of one richly dressed, in your religious meetings or judicial decisions, and pouring contempt upon another who is meanly dressed, can proceed from nothing but a shameful partiality, and a carnal and biassed manner of judgment.—And nothing can be more unreasonable among Christians, who cannot but remark, that God has generally chosen mean persons, to enrich them with faith, and all the other graces of his Spirit, and to render them heirs of his heavenly kingdom; while great and rich men are generally contemned by him, and left to their own hearts' lusts, to be persecutors of his people, and blasphemers of his name and religion. 8—11. If, from a principle of faith in, and love to Jesus Christ, your Lord and King, ye obey his high and supreme law, treating all your neighbours, particularly your fellow-christians, with as much kindness, equity, and mercy, in their various circumstances, as ye wish in like cases to be exercised towards yourselves, ye act a truly honourable and becoming part;—but if ye regard persons merely or chiefly on account of their different worldly circumstances, ye stand convicted and condemned by that excellent law of God, which requires the most strict regard to equity: and remember that, though ye should keep all the other commandments, yet by a single breach in any particular point, ye break the whole law, as ye trample on that divine authority which connects together, and is the foundation of the whole law, and counteract that love which is the fulfilment of the whole law, particularly of the second table of it. 12, 13. Let your whole conversation towards God and men, in disposition, thought, word, and deed, be such as becomes them who live under the dispensation of the gospel, and who expect to be judged at the last day according to the tenor of it; for they who, contrary to its grace and obligations, neglect to exercise compassion towards their poor brethren, shall have a severe sentence of condemnation and wrath fixed on themselves;—and they who from true faith and love, exercise kindness towards them, shall have occasion to rejoice in their own deliverance from condemnation and wrath, and even in the hopes of it;—and God's mercy shall, according to the gospel promises, triumph in their salvation. 14—26. And remember that, if you have only a notional and lifeless faith, which does not effectually influence you to grant relief to your poor destitute brethren, and to the universal practice of righteousness and holiness, it is really naught, and no better than the faith of devils before God. For however insufficient good works be to justify our persons, or entitle us to eternal life before God as a righteous Judge,—yet they are absolutely necessary to prove our faith unfeigned, and to manifest us justified before the world, and even in our own consciences; as is manifest from the case, not only of Abraham the father of the faithful, but of Rahab the Canaanitish harlot; both of whom manifested their true faith and divine justification by their good works which proceeded therefrom.

‖ In the several members of ver. 3, καὶ is uniformly retained and translated "and;" wherefore it is not easy to discover why καὶ is altogether omitted in the beginning of ver. 4, or why the members of ver. 3 being affirmative, ver. 4 should be rendered interrogative. Would it not be more literal, and in accordance with the use of the word by James (ch. 1. 6), as well as in other places (e. g. Rom. 14. 23) to translate it thus;—"And have not wavered" (or hesitated) "within yourselves, and have become judges of" (who have adopted) "erroneous reasonings."—Note. Luther, in the German, retains the "and," and renders the verse affirmatively.—Ed.

MY brethren, [a] be not many [*] masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater [†] condemnation.

Reflections upon Chap. II.—Decent respect is due to persons on account of their civil stations. But to prefer the rich, graceless, and gay, as such, especially in matters of religion or equity, is highly unchristian, and striking against the whole authority of the lawgiver, and that universal love required in his law, amounts to a breaking of all his commandments, and leaves little hopes of mercy to the guilty in the great day of account. It is chiefly among the poor that true Christians are found; and God's grace enriches and ennobles them. Why then should we despise them! Rich persons are too generally blasphemers of God's name and religion, persecutors of his saints, and oppressors of their inferiors. Why then should we partially caress them! It is not fine words of pity and compassion, and empty wishes of relief, but needful supplies, according to our ability, that God demands from us to our poor brethren, and in denying these we basely act the part of inhuman hypocrites. The best notions and professions of faith without good works, thereby produced, are but dead, devilish, and abominable before God. No good works of ours can indeed justify our persons before God: but they are absolutely necessary to manifest our justification before men.

Chap. III.—Ver. 1. Take heed, my dear Christian brethren, that none of you affect to be teachers of others, without proper qualifications for it; or give way, like your Jewish doctors, to a magisterial and censorious temper in matters of religion; for if ye do, your sin will be very aggravated, and your condemnation at the last day inexpressibly dreadful. 2. For all, even the best of us, are guilty of manifold transgressions of both tables of God's law, offending him and our fellow-creatures; which should make us very humble and modest in our thoughts of ourselves, or censures of others;—but if any one be enabled by grace to restrain his tongue from idle, opprobrious, false, and other sinful language, it marks him a true believer, and a person of great attainments in knowledge and experience, integrity and holiness, capable of managing himself, and his whole behaviour, to the benefit of the society he is connected with, religious or civil. 3—6. For as horses are governed by small bits, and large ships by small rudders, so a man's tongue, when properly managed under the influence of divine grace, is of great use for regulating his whole behaviour; even as, under the influence of a carnal heart, it extravagantly talks away and contemns others;—and I entreat you carefully to observe how often a little injurious language kindles a flame of contention and confusion all around it. And indeed scarcely anything can be more mischievous or productive of wickedness than an unruly furious tongue. It vents a great deal of sin; is the outlet of the whole source of wickedness which lies in a man's heart, and produces much iniquity among others; by its exorbitant licentiousness, it spreads guilt and defilement through the whole man; and as a fire kindled and blown up by the diabolical influence of the father of lies, and accuser of the brethren, it raises such wrath and anger in our own and other people's passions, as throws the whole course of the moral world into a pernicious ferment, and continues from one period of life, and even one generation, to another. 7, 8. No savage, venomous, or voracious beast is so hard to be tamed as a lying, reviling, malignant tongue, actuated by strong, furious, and vile passions. In the most ungovernable manner it vents forth the most devilish and destructive pride, malice, envy, reproach, and falsehood. 9—12. And very often, among professed Christians, it is at one time honourably employed in praising God the Father of mercies, and of Christ, and of us in him; or in praying to, or commending him;—and at another time basely prostituted to pour forth revilings, or even horrid imprecations, against our fellow-creatures, for whom we ought to have a reverence, as they were originally created after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness, and are still formed in some likeness to him in the natural faculties of their soul; and many of them, by his grace, renewed after his image in regeneration.—Nothing can be more contrary to our Christian obligations, profession, and character, or even more unnatural and absurd in itself. 13. If any of you therefore would approve yourselves to God, and shew yourselves to the world as truly wise and prudent, and endowed with a true knowledge of yourselves, of Christ, and of God, his laws and ways, let them earnestly practise all manner of good works in the whole course of their conversation, with a meek and humble spirit. 14. But never be fond or boast of envious, quarrelsome, and contentious dispositions and designs, which will torment your souls, and sting and wound others, and are directly contrary to the meek and humble spirit of the gospel. Never dare, either in thought, word, or deed, to varnish over such wickedness, or to pretend to sincerity and prudence in indulging it: 15, 16. For, think as you will, this wisdom springs not from, nay, is detested by God, and arises from an excessively earthly and sensual inclination to worldly enjoyments, and is excited by the devil, bears his image, delights his heart, and promotes his mischievous designs and interests: for whenever an envious, censorious, and litigious spirit is indulged, and breaks forth in words, it tends to disturb and destroy the peace and happiness of a man's own soul, and of all about him, and leads to everything wicked. 17. But that heavenly and divine wisdom which God bestows, leads men to a strict regard to purity of doctrine and manners, in heart, speech, and behaviour; it disposes to peacefulness, mildness, and courteousness, in our treatment of others; it renders our mind open to conviction, easily persuaded to that which is good, and attentive to all considerations, forward to condescension and forbearance, and inclined to acts of kindness and compassion to the poor and afflicted; it renders us impartial and generous in judging and condemning of others;—and sincere, free from any allowed dissimulation. 18. And this righteous, holy, and peaceable temper and conversation, by the grace of God, issues in our own and our neighbour's happiness in this world, and in our everlasting happiness and peace hereafter.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—An assuming, arrogant, and censorious temper fearfully presages our future condemnation to hell. And the deeper sense we have of our own sinfulness and weakness, the less rash shall we be in condemning others.—It is very honourable and advantageous for Christians to have grace to govern their tongue. But how hard to rule it! and yet, if ungoverned, it kindles and spreads infinite and eternal mischiefs all around. Scarcely can anything be more inconsistent with the character of a Christian, more dishonourable to God, or more ruinous to men, than an unbridled tongue, and an envious malicious heart.—But great is the excellency of true and spiritual wisdom, in its origin, nature, properties, and fruits.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1—3. To dissuade you from a carnal and wrathful temper, seriously think how all the strifes and contentions which prevail among you take their rise from indulged lusts; and how the indulgence of corrupt affections

* Ye rich men.—Not those who are rich, and have learned to use their riches; but those who trust in riches, live in luxury, and forget their God.—Ed.

† Riches.—Not silver or gold, but "corn, and wine, and oil," the emblems of luxury, "corrupted" through keeping for revelry, instead of being timously distributed in generous charity. Ver. 3.—Ed.

GO to now, ye rich men,* weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2 Your riches† are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

renders your very prayers altogether unsuccessful, and wicked in their principles, motives, and ends. 4. And remember, that whosoever of you, professed Christians, indulge such eager appetites after the pleasures and enjoyments of this world, as alienate your hearts from God, are guilty of an adulterous breach of covenant with him, and of admitting his rival into your heart instead of him: for an excessive fondness for the things of this world, and of conformity to worldly men, stands in direct opposition to the holy nature and will of God, and is utterly inconsistent with that supreme love and affection which ye owe to him. 5. Do ye think the scriptures of the Old Testament unworthy of your regard, which so strongly remonstrate against pride, envy, and covetousness, and represent our inward corruptions as so impetuous in their pursuits after earthly things, as to make us envy every one who hath more than ourselves?—Or do ye think that the Spirit of God, who dwelleth in all of us who are true believers, would excite such a worldly disposition in us? 6. No, he, and God by him, increases our humility, self-denial, love, and goodness, and thus disengages us from the gratification of corrupt affections; and therefore, to encourage our hopes and prayers for all needful assistance, he declares in his word, that he sets himself to oppose and debase them who are ambitious, haughty, self-conceited, and self-sufficient, placing their whole confidence and happiness in the things of this life, or in their own wisdom, strength, or deserts: but freely bestows more and more grace, comfort, and blessings, upon such as have humble thoughts of themselves, and of the emptiness of all earthly enjoyments, and place their whole happiness in himself. 7. In humble dependence, therefore, on his free favour and gracious influence, yield up yourselves obediently and unreservedly to his direction, disposal, authority, and will, manifested in his word and providence; and be content with such things as ye have. And if Satan, by subtle devices or furious temptations, attempts to dishearten you in, or draw you off from the ways of duty, give not place to him, but exercise all your graces in opposition to him, and he will flee from you as a conquered enemy. 8. And if ye would maintain your ground, prevail against, and get rid of temptations; be much employed in humble and fiducial approaches to God through Christ, in the way of duty, and he will graciously come near to you, directing, relieving, and comforting you according to his promise. And whereas, through the influence of Satan, and your own hearts, some of you have rendered yourselves notorious sinners before God, see that by faith ye apply the word, blood, and Spirit of Christ for your purification, and beg of him to reform you from violence, murder, extortion, bribery, and other like wickedness of practice; and to purge your hearts from pride, envy, covetousness, and other indwelling lusts;—and so thoroughly renew you in heart and life, that your cares and services may no longer be divided between him and the world. 9, 10. Instead of that jollity, mirth, and gaiety, with which ye have shamefully gratified your sensual appetites, apply yourselves to deep penitential sorrow and evangelical religious mourning, on account of your provocations, and for fear of God's judgments,—deeply humbling yourselves before him, whom ye have so often and so highly offended,—and who knows, and principally regards, the secret workings of your hearts;—and he, in his own time and way, will revive your drooping souls with a sense of his pardoning, and the influence of his recovering grace, and will raise you above all your fears and troubles, and exalt you to honour and comfort in this world, and to immortal glory in the next. 11. And always carefully avoid rash censuring and reviling of one another, aggravating and needlessly exposing one another's infirmities:—or raising and propagating false reports to each other's prejudice; for, if ye slander, rashly judge, and condemn your neighbours or fellow-Christians, ye practically condemn the wisdom, equity, and holiness of God's law, which forbids such conduct, and perhaps allows what you condemn; and, if once ye pretend to censure God's law, ye plainly renounce all obedience to it, and exalt yourselves as judges above it. 12. When the almighty God, who has infinite power and authority to reward the obedient and punish the disobedient, is the alone Lawgiver and Lord of men's consciences, who can enact and execute laws as he pleases, how presumptuous is it for you, foolish, weak, fallible, and sinful creatures, to take upon you to judge and condemn any for that in which they are accountable only to God? 13, 14. And why are any of you so self-sufficient, and insensible of your dependence on him, as to promise yourselves long life or prosperity, and much trade on earth, without regard to him, when you, and all that you have, are in the most precarious and uncertain condition, entirely dependent on his sovereign will and providence, and may suddenly and unawares be cut off. 15—17. Nothing ought therefore to be either projected or pursued by you, but in express submission to the favour, direction, assistance, and blessing of God; and your sinful and confident boasting, as if your life and transactions were independent of him, is extremely unchristian and shameful: and it is the more aggravated in your case, as the Scripture, as well as your own consciences, certainly testify to you, that an humble and submissive manner of forming and declaring your intentions is alone right and good, acceptable to God, and suited to the relations in which he stands to you.

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—What dreadful work do the lusts of pride, covetousness, and envy, make in the world! They create contention and strife in societies, religious or civil, or even in a man's own mind; excite wicked desires and attempts; lead to the neglect of prayer, or sinful and carnal requests; and produce an adulterous alienation of the heart from God, by an undue attachment to the world. Very hateful are they to God, contrary to the influences of his Spirit, and inconsistent with our dependence on him, either as men or Christians.—Extensive is the work of a Christian. Humbly should he submit to, and hold familiar fellowship with God; resolutely guard against and resist the temptations of Satan; purify his heart and conversation, by a believing improvement of Jesus' word, Spirit, and blood; humbly bewail and repent of his sinfulness; guard against all reviling or rash censuring of others, from a regard to God's authority; and in all his ways acknowledge and resignedly depend on his sovereign will.

Chap. V.—Ver. 1. Be alarmed, ye rich unbelieving Jews. Dreadful calamities shall quickly overtake you, except ye repent, and bereave you of whatever you have on earth, yea, of life itself, in the general destruction of your nation;—which shall also be followed with inexpressibly more dreadful miseries in hell. 2, 3. Your ill-gotten and ill-employed treasures being cursed of God, instead of profiting you in the day of his wrath, shall, by the loss of them, torment your minds; —shall tempt your enemies to ravage your country, pillage your houses, and murder your persons;—and shall occasion you more terrible torments in hell.

4 Behold, the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

5 [a] Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a [b] day of slaughter.*

6 [c] Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.†

9 [g] Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: [h] behold, the Judge standeth before the door.

10 Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, [i] for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.

11 Behold, [k] we count them happy which endure. [l] Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that [m] the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

12 [n] But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

13 [o] Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? [p] let him sing psalms.

14 Is any sick among you? let him call for [q] the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, [r] anointing him with oil§ in the name of the Lord:

15 [s] And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and [t] if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

16 [u] Confess† your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer‖ of a righteous man availeth much.

17 Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed ‖ earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

18 And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

§ Or, in his prayer.

4. The Most High, who ruleth over all creatures, has heard the complaints of your poor labourers, whom ye have fraudulently deprived of their wages; and will render that, which ye have unjustly withheld from them, a plague and mean of terrible destruction to yourselves. 5, 6. Ye have luxuriously and sensually rioted on the bounties of God's providence, as if every day had been a festival; and, under pretence of law, have condemned and murdered the righteous Lord Jesus, and many of his faithful servants, who never offered you the least violence or injury. But the time is at hand when God shall fully punish these and your other abominations.—7, 8. As God therefore permits and overrules these unrighteous persecutions, for the trial of your faith and patience, do you, my Christian brethren, labour to bear them without murmuring at his holy hand therein; and with patience, meekness, fortitude, and calm composure of mind, steadfast faith, and resolution to bear testimony for him and his ways, wait till the Lord Jesus, by executing his vengeance on your nation, deliver you from their cruel persecutions, and, by death and the last judgment, usher in your complete and everlasting happiness. 9. And since he, the great Judge of the world, is so ready to punish your persecutors, let none of you expose yourselves to a share in their condemnation and punishment, by venting any envious, fretful, and revengeful complaints or wishes against them for the injuries they do you. 10, 11. And to encourage you to such a becoming conduct, reflect much on the behaviour of the ancient prophets under their sore trials,—with what patience and courage they endured the manifold persecutions which they suffered for adherence to the truth. And learn, especially from the singular afflictions of Job, his marvellous patience under them, and the merciful issue thereof in redoubled honours and happiness, what a God of infinite compassion and kindness ye have to uphold you under, carry you through, and give you the blessed fruits of all your trials and afflictions. 12. As your unbelieving brethren are so dreadfully addicted to that unprofitable, heaven-daring, and soul-ruinous sin of profane swearing, I beseech you earnestly to guard against every rash, passionate, or unnecessary oath, whether by God himself or by his creatures; and let your whole conversation be so evidently honest and upright, that your plain affirmation or denial may gain you sufficient credit. 13. If any of you be in afflicted circumstances, let him exercise himself much in solemn and fervent prayer, for support under, relief from, and a sanctified improvement of them. And if any be surrounded with the blessings of providence and grace, let him express his gratitude, to the God of his mercies, in cheerful thanksgivings and praises. 14, 15. If any of you appear to have any bodily distemper inflicted on him, as the punishment of some remarkable sin, let him desire the rulers of the church, especially such as are vested with miraculous powers, to meet together and pray over him; and let them, in the name and authority of the Lord Jesus, from regard to his appointment, and in dependence on his influence, anoint him with oil, as a mean of his recovery: and in answer to their prayer of faith, Jesus Christ shall render the means effectual for his relief; and shall, through the man's own exercise of faith in his blood, pardon the sinful cause of the trouble, as to its temporal or eternal punishment. 16—18. Always show a readiness to acknowledge whatever offences you have given one to another, or even other sins which lie heavy on your consciences: in order that ye may cheerfully forgive, sympathize with, and affectionately and earnestly pray for each other, as your distresses of body or mind require. And to encourage your fervent prayer for one another, observe, from the miraculous drought or rain procured by Elijah's prayer, what a wonderful power and success the prayer of true and lively saints hath, when, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, it is excited, conducted, and animated by a sacred warmth of heart. 19, 20. And if any of you are successful in your endeavours for the recovery of some apostate or backslider from the truth, and from his erroneous notions or sinful practices, thank God for it, as a high honour, that thereby you are made instrumental in the salvation of an immortal soul, in recovering him from spiritual and eternal destruction, and in leading a neighbour into the way of life, pardon, and peace; and thereby preventing a multitude of sins, which he, and others, tempted by his example and influence, would have committed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Worldly riches are an unavoidable snare to a covetous carnal heart. Often are they abused in luxury and oppression, and hasten their owners into eternal perdition. For the cries of the poor and oppressed infallibly draw down the vengeance of Heaven upon their oppressors. There is great need of patience in this world, where wickedness and distress abound. Nor, as repeated instances manifest, can anything issue more honourably or happily.—It is base and criminal for any, but especially professed Christians, to swear rashly, ignorantly, unrighteously, or in common conversation.—But very honourable is it to accommodate our religion to our lot; to give ourselves to effectual fervent prayers for ourselves and others; to be always ready humbly to acknowledge our own faults, and carefully to prevent or reclaim our neighbours from sin. Lord, if this be practical Christianity, how little of it is to be found on earth!

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

The abrupt termination of this epistle, so unlike the apostolic formality of its opening, has led many to conclude that it was never finished, but was cut short by the sudden martyrdom of the apostle. The conjecture is a probable one, and, whether accurate or not, may well serve to remind every man to "work while it is called to-day."

The mind of the attentive reader can scarcely fail to be struck with the peculiarity of the style, which may be called the catenated: that is, the third verse, by the word "trying," is linked, as it were, into the second, by the word "temptations;" the fourth, into the third verse, by the word "patience;" the fifth into the fourth by the words "wanting" and "lack," &c.—a peculiarity that continues to be largely exemplified throughout the whole epistle. Nor are peculiarities without their value. (1.) Peculiarities of style are well suited to peculiarities of minds; and he that may be little impressed with one mode of diction, may have his attention rivetted by another. In this respect nature and revelation agree. Nature presents an object of study and interest to every peculiarity of taste—a similar variety is presented in the teaching of the Spirit. (2.) Peculiarities of style serve to demonstrate that the apostles were not imitators of each other; and, if compared with all pretended revelations—in which the stamp of one mind, or the concerted plan of two or more, is easily and certainly detected—the mere variety of Scripture style will go far to prove that the writers have delivered no "cunningly devised fable." That they wrote independently of each other, at different times and places, and with different objects, while yet their agreement is such, and so complete, that it can be rationally accounted for upon no other principle than that they wrote under the guidance of one common Spirit. (3.) The apparent discrepancy between Paul and James, on the subject of justification by faith, will also serve, when carefully examined, to illustrate the same fact—the most accurate agreement without the possibility of concert;—for had there been concert, there could never have been such an approach to apparent contradiction; while it will further demonstrate the wisdom of God in the progressive development of the Scriptures, whereby the obscurities of one book are illustrated by the light of another, and the misapprehension or abuse of one doctrine corrected by a practical commentary, so soon as the misapprehension or abuse had budded, and before it could take root in the field of the church.—Ed.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

Peter had been originally a fisherman in Galilee, but was among the first called by Jesus Christ to be one of his attendants and missionaries. About A. D. 65 or 66, he wrote this first epistle to the Jewish converts scattered through Lesser Asia, or other parts of the Roman empire, and the second about two years after. The scope of the first is, (1) To establish them in the faith of Christ, and to comfort them under their severe persecutions; chap. i. ii. 1—8. (2) To direct and animate them to an honourable, conscientious, and edifying behaviour in a faithful discharge of all the duties of their civil or family relations; chap. ii. 9—25; iii. 1—7: and to the exercise of brotherly love, personal holiness, and a faithful discharge of their respective duties in the church; chap. iii. 8—22; iv, v. The scope of the second is to represent how gospel privileges and revelations ought to be improved in a growth in holiness of heart and life; chap. i. to warn them against the seduction of false teachers, and all apostasy from the truth; ii: and to represent the proper preparation for Christ's appearance to destroy the Jewish nation, and to judge the world; iii.

That Simon Peter, or Cephas, the son of Jonas,—originally a fisherman of Galilee, and called to be an apostle of our Lord—was the author of this epistle has always been admitted; and its genuineness and canonical authority are confirmed by its being referred to or quoted by Polybius, Clemens Romanus, the Martyrs of Lyons, Theophilus of Antioch, Papias, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Tertullian. It is addressed to "the strangers scattered abroad," more literally to "the strangers of the dispersion," which seems peculiarly to point to the Jews, (see also chap. ii. 9—12; iv. 3, 4,) as the special objects of his ministry, (Gal. ii. 7, 8). In matter and object it is nearly akin to the epistle of James; adverting to the persecutions by which the Christians were assailed, and exhorting to patience, perseverance, and holiness. Of the history of Peter, subsequent to his residence at Antioch, A. D. 46, nothing is related in the New Testament. Jerome, however, states that he suffered martyrdom at Rome, in the end of the reign of Nero, A. D. 67 or 68; and that his remains were interred in that city, near the triumphal way;—a statement corroborated by Procopius, Hist. p. 195. On the other hand it has been argued, from the internal evidence of the Acts and Epistles, as well as from the want of sufficient external authority from early history, that Peter never was at Rome. But such historical questions are of little importance to him whose "religion is the Bible," and who seeks for the marks and authority of the true church of Christ, not in the "vain traditions" of uninspired men, but in the imperishable records of inspired evangelists and apostles. See John xx. 30, 31; 1 Tim. iii. 16, 17. In the course of the epistle, the apostle alludes to the following portions of the Old Testament:—Gen. vi. 7; xviii. 12; Exod. xix. 5, 6; Deut. vii. 6; Is. x. 12; xxviii. 16; xl. 6, 8; xlviii. 9, 10; liii., lvii. 15; lxi. 6; Jer. xxiii. 22; Ezek. ix. 6; xxxiv. 4; Dan. ii. 44; viii. 13; ix. 26; Hos. i. 9, 10; Hag. ii. 7; Zech. xiii. 9.—Ed.]

EXPLANATORY NOTES. Chap. I.—Ver. 1, 2. I, Simon Peter, whom Jesus Christ has constituted his inspired messenger, especially to my own countrymen—to you my Jewish fellow-Christians, dispersed by Divine Providence, through the several countries of Lesser Asia, whom God the Father has, from all eternity, chosen to be made partakers of eternal happiness, through the renovation of their hearts and lives by the Holy Ghost, and the application of Jesus' blood to their consciences for the remission of their sins—wish the most diversified, manifest, abundant, and ever-increasing discoveries of God's free love and favour, and the fullest enjoyment of all prosperity, spiritual and temporal. 3, 4. Eternal and high praises, thanksgivings, and adorations, be to that great Jehovah, who is the God and Portion of our Lord Jesus Christ as Man and Mediator, and his Father, as he is the second person in the Godhead;—that, according to the wonderful riches and multitude of his free and sovereign mercy, he has, through the virtue of the death and resurrection of Christ, by his Spirit, endowed us with new vital principles of faith and hope, and every other saving grace, and thereby rendered us capable of, and fitted for, as well as by adoption entitled to, an inexpressibly pure, permanent, rich inheritance of heavenly glory, inconceivably preferable to any in the earthly Canaan; and which, by the immutable purpose and promise of God, and the merits and intercession of Christ, is solely laid up in heaven for you, who are begotten and adopted to it; 5. Who, notwithstanding your weakness, and the innumerable temptations and dangers which surround you, are, by God's almighty power, and through the continued exercise of faith on Christ and his word, infallibly preserved in your new covenant state, nature, and course, till you obtain the full and everlasting deliverance from all evil, and enjoyment of everything good, which shall be manifested in all the riches and delights thereof in the last judgment; 6. In the believing views and hopes of which preservation and eternal glory, ye do, and may, and will hereafter, exceedingly rejoice and exult, though, in this present imperfect state of weakness, sin, and sorrow, if it be needful for God's glory and your own good, ye are grievously, though comparatively lightly, afflicted by a variety of trials from sin, Satan, the world, and your own

7 That [f]the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold [*] that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ:

8 [g]Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye [h]rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory:

9 Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.

10 Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently,[†] who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you:

11 Searching what, or what manner of time,[‡] the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

12 Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.[§]

13 Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope [i] to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ:

14 As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance:

15 But as he which [i]hath called you is holy, [k]so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

16 Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy.

17 And if ye [l]call [*] on the Father, [m]who, without respect of persons, judgeth according to every man's work, [n]pass the time of your sojourning here in fear:

18 Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed[†] with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation[‡] received by tradition from your fathers;

19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot:

20 Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you,

21 Who [o]by him [‖] do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth [i] and abideth for ever.[*] weakness; 7. In order that your faith and other graces, after being proved genuine, and greatly excited, improved, and increased, may, at the appearance of Christ to destroy your nation, and especially to judge the world, be evidently, and honourably manifested, approved, and graciously rewarded with honour and glory by him; 8. Whom, though ye never saw in the days of his humiliation on earth, yet, through the manifestations of him to you by his word and Spirit, ye sincerely love, highly esteem, and delight in; and though he is at present quite beyond the reach of your bodily sight, yet, discerning, realizing, and appropriating him to yourselves, and trusting in him by faith, ye, in the most ravishing manner, rejoice, exult, and glory in his person, offices, relations, and fulness, and in the assured hopes of your eternal and immediate enjoyment of him, 9. Of which ye have already received the pledges, earnests, and beginnings, and which ye shall, in a little time, fully receive as a gracious reward, answerable to all the expectations of your faith,—even the complete salvation and eternal happiness of your whole person, soul and body. 10. Into the nature, qualities, and circumstances of which complete and glorious salvation, the ancient prophets,—who many ages ago foretold what rich and eminent blessings of light and grace, pardon, purity, peace, hope, and joy, should be manifested to, and conferred upon you by the gospel,—made the most diligent inquiry; 11. Searching out the particular circumstances and manner of those things, which the Holy Ghost, proceeding from, and imparted by, Christ to them, had solemnly and infallibly declared concerning Jesus' incarnation, humiliation, exaltation, and work, and concerning the effusion of himself, the erection and state of the gospel church, and the holiness, comfort, and happiness of Christ's true members, as the effects of his atoning sacrifice: 12. Unto whom it was suggested by the Holy Ghost, that, however much their own souls might be refreshed, and their faith supported by their predictions, yet they were not to be fulfilled in their times, or the blessings conferred on themselves, but on us who live under the New Testament dispensation; and to whom they are declared and offered by apostles and others, who publish the gospel of God's grace in all its light, liberty, grace, and glory; which has been divinely attested and confirmed by the plentiful outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in his gifts and graces, by our exalted Redeemer, according to his promise; and which unfolds things so excellent, profound, and engaging, that even the holy angels earnestly pry into the mysteries contained in it. 13. Having therefore such revelations and encouragements, relative to future and eternal blessedness, never wax weary or faint in your minds; but, shaking off the cares and encumbrances of this life; moderating your appetites to, and making a temperate use of the things of this world; with holy vigilance carefully maintain a sincere, unshaken, growing, and persevering trust and hope in Christ, to the end of your days, temptations, and conflicts; with joyful confidence, and assured expectation, of all that blessedness and glory of the heavenly state which is now graciously revealed in the gospel, and shall be freely bestowed upon you at his second coming. 14. Behave therefore answerably to your spiritual, high, and noble birth, privileges, and hopes, as children entirely subject to the authority of your heavenly Father; and never fall in with, or conform yourselves to, the corrupt inclinations, desires, schemes, principles, practices, language, and fashions of the men of this world, particularly in this degenerate age, as ye did formerly, while you remained under the power of your sinful lusts, ignorant of Christ and the gospel: 15, 16. But as God, who has called you by his grace into the faith and fellowship of his Son, is perfectly holy in his nature and conduct, study, according to his command, always, and in every relation and circumstance, to imitate him in the holiness of your hearts and lives. 17. And if, answerably to your religious profession, ye from the heart sincerely worship him as your Father in Christ, who, without regard to any external consideration, will impartially try and pass sentence on every man's work at the last day, see that ye maintain a holy and humble reverence of him, and fear of offending him, and a holy jealousy over your own hearts, while ye are travelling through this world, as pilgrims and strangers, to your better and eternal inheritance in heaven. 18—21. And ye ought to be the more earnest and courageous in this holy imitation and fear of God, since all you believers certainly know, that your redemption, from the corrupt and defiling manners and customs handed down to you by your ancestors, was not purchased by the perishing riches of this present world, which can redeem from slavery and bondage among men, but by the infinitely more valuable obedience and sufferings of the pure and unspotted Son of God in our nature, whom he, from all eternity, in the covenant of grace, appointed to be our Mediator and Surety; and has, in the end of the Jewish dispensation, and last age of the world, manifested in the flesh, and made to obey and suffer in your stead;—who, through him, as your only Mediator, trust and hope in God as your reconciled God and Father; since, in testimony of his being fully satisfied with what his Son did and suffered in your stead, he has raised him from the dead, exalted him to his own right hand, and made him Head over all things to the church, that ye might be encouraged, through him, thus to trust in God, as reconciled in him, for all the blessings of grace and glory. 22. And since, through a believing acceptance of gospel truth, under the powerful influence of the Holy Ghost, ye have been enabled to mortify and subdue those corruptions which formerly defiled your souls, and to become holy in heart and life, and have been brought to a sincere and hearty affection to your fellow-christians, see that ye daily more and more cultivate this brotherly kindness in all its genuine and substantial effects, with all the intense fervour of a regenerated heart purified by faith; 23. And as persons who are not merely the natural descendants of Abraham, but have new, vital, and incorruptible principles of grace and holiness implanted in you, by means of the incorruptible, quickening, and unchangeable word of the living, life-giving, and unchangeable God. 24, 25. natural and acquired endowments,—all external privileges, ornaments, and honours,—are very unsubstantial and transient; but Christ, the essential Word, and the word of the Lord preached to you in the gospel, and the new creature produced by means of it, remain always the same in their nature and effects.

* It seems probable from the reference to "gold," that one great trial of the Christians' "faith" was the loss of all their riches; and the nature of some of the subsequent exhortations evidently shows that before their conversion they had lived in much luxury and splendour (see ch. 3. 3. & 4. 3, 4). But grace can enable the Christian either to use riches without abuse, or, if need be, for conscience' sake, to resign them without repining.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—No dispersion can separate believers from the love or care of Christ and his faithful ministers. The election of the Father, the redemption of the Son, and the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, delightfully harmonize in producing faith and holy obedience here, in order to complete salvation hereafter. And according to God's unbounded mercy, and by his infinite power alone, we are endowed with new principles of grace, fitted for, and carried through trials unnumbered, to the heavenly inheritance, to his praise and honour. Marvellously he tries, strengthens, and honours the graces of his people by means of their troubles. And, amidst them all, boldly may they triumph in the assured views and hopes of their bright glories and complete salvation at the final appearing of Jesus Christ. Wonderful and excellent is the gospel, which exhibits and offers us this great salvation; and with earnest care and ravishing delight prophets and angels pry into the mysteries of it. What a solid foundation have we for our faith in him, whom God from eternity appointed our Saviour,—whom the ancient prophets foretold,—and whom the gospel clearly reveals, and makes over to us! In the most astonishing wisdom and grace he gave his life a ransom for us, rose from the dead, and ascended to glory, that we might be imboldened to believe and trust in God as our reconciled Father in him. Affectionately then ought we to love this once suffering, and now exalted, Redeemer, and all his people for his sake;—and delightfully to triumph in his exaltation and grace. Earnestly ought we to obey our heavenly Father, and imitate him in holiness. With holy fear and reverence should we look for his impartial judgment. And with great watchfulness, sobriety, and weanedness from worldly things and sinful customs, ought we to travel to our heavenly rest, carefully cherishing the indwelling principle of spiritual life, till it be perfected in life eternal.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. Since, by the implantation of new principles of grace, ye have been formed for purity and love, see that, with abhorrence, ye put away from you all malicious, spiteful, and revengeful heart-burnings, designs, and practices against your fellow-christians; all frauds, deceitful flatteries, insincere compliments, or professions of respect towards God or men; all envious grudging and repining at men's prosperity; and all backbitings and defamations, which proceed from a guileful, malicious, or envious disposition of heart. 2, 3. And as persons who have had a real, though small experimental knowledge and savour of the mercy and grace of the Lord Jesus to your own souls, earnestly desire, hunger, and seek after the pure uncorrupted word of God, as containing proper nourishment for your immortal souls, that ye may grow in grace, comfort, and holiness, and in all spiritual strength and stature, till ye become perfect in Christ. 4. To whom ye must be daily applying by faith, for further edification, support, and establishment; as the only foundation of all your faith, security, hope, and happiness; who has life in himself, and quickens and for ever animates all that are united to him; and who, however contemned by Jewish rulers or other unbelievers, was chosen and appointed of God for this end; and in the sight of God, and all who know him, is infinitely excellent in himself, dear and honourable, and completely able to bear the whole weight of his Father's glory, and the salvation of his church. 5. And being quickened by virtue of your union to, and influences from him, ye are more and more fitted to be a spiritual habitation for God, and made holy priests unto him, gratefully to offer up yourselves, your prayers, praises, alms-deeds, and other good works, to him, as acceptable and accepted only through the propitiatory sacrifice and intercession of Jesus Christ. 6. Accordingly God calls us, with attention and holy admiration, faith and hope, love and joy, to contemplate him as the fitted, prepared, and rightly placed foundation, which unites and supports the whole church, Jews and Gentiles; and on which, the man who rests the whole weight of his eternal salvation, however sinful he may be, shall never meet with any disappointment, confusion, or ruin. 7, 8. To all those therefore, who, through the declarations and promises of the gospel, receive and rest on him alone for salvation, he, in his person, offices, relations, and benefits, will be altogether lovely, honourable, and honoured: and notwithstanding all the rage and contempt of Jewish rulers and other unbelievers, he is, by the appointment of God, made the foundation, chief corner-stone, strength, and glory of his spiritual house, the gospel church:—in the mean time, according to God's ancient predictions, he becomes to others an occasion of more aggravated guilt and ruin, who through their obstinate unbelief, in fulfilment of the divine purpose, wilfully plunge themselves into deeper damnation. 9. But ye, who by faith are built upon him as your foundation, are a new-born kindred, which God has, by eternal election, effectual calling, and adoption, set apart for himself. Being anointed with his blood and Spirit, like princes, ye have power with him, victory over sin, Satan, and the world, and dominion over your own spirit, and are heirs of the kingdom of heaven.—Like priests, ye are separated from the rest of the world, and consecrated to God to offer up spiritual sacrifices of holy gratitude.—Ye are a holy society, collected and united together under Christ your King; sanctified by his Spirit, governed by his laws, and embarked in the same common cause and interest: and ye are his purchased and special property; that, answerably to your dignities, privileges, and obligations, ye might, in your nature and life, by thought, word, and deed, show forth the infinite wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth of God, who has by his grace called and brought you from the darkness of ignorance and error, sin and misery, into his most wonderful light of truth and grace, holiness and comfort; 10. So that ye, as well as the Gentiles among whom ye live, are, after a remarkable disowning of God, brought into the sweet and abiding relation of a people to him; and, after a fearful exclusion from his mercy, have now found mercy with him, to the justification and adoption of your persons, and the renovation of your nature and life, after his image. 11. In consideration of these distinguishing favours which God has bestowed upon you, my dear Christian brethren, I earnestly entreat and exhort you, as persons born from above, strangers in this world, and travellers to the heavenly country, to renounce, avoid, and mortify all your inward workings of sensual inclinations, inordinate affections and desires, after earthly things, which arise from the corruption of your nature, and exert themselves by your body;—and being contrary to the liberty, peace, and honour, purity and holiness, of your renewed souls, perpetually do their utmost to defile, disturb, insnare, and destroy them. 12. And since ye live among profane and idolatrous heathens, study that all your words and actions may be decent, honourable, and commendable, every way worthy of your holy profession;

LIKEWISE, [a] ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, [b] they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; that whereas they take all occasions to reproach you, as a refractory, useless, and mischievous people, they may be effectually confuted, by your universally regular, blameless, holy, benevolent, and lovely deportment; and brought to admire God's grace in you, and to imitate your good conversation, when he by his mercy shall visit them with the light and power of the gospel, and make it effectual for their salvation. 13, 14. And though some of your countrymen inveigh against all obedience to heathen magistrates, see that ye, from a regard to the command, example, and honour of Christ, conscientiously submit to, cheerfully obey, and readily pay tribute to the civil rulers, supreme or subordinate, whom God in his providence has, by the agency of men, set over you for the restraint and punishment of the open contemners or injurers of God or men, and for protecting, encouraging, favouring, and rewarding such as are orderly, sober, honest, and religious; 15, 16. For it is the command and delight of God, and tends to his honour, that, by a holy, regular, and commendable behaviour, ye should refute the unreasonable and wicked calumnies which men of weak and prejudiced minds, strangers to God and to your true character, are apt to raise against you and your religion, as if it made you bad subjects;—always conducting yourselves as persons delivered from the tyranny of sin and Satan, from the ceremonial law, and from the moral law as a broken covenant of works, and from all human impositions on your conscience in matters of religion;—but never abusing this freedom, as an encouragement to, or cover of sedition, or any other malignant wickedness, but as an excitement to the most faithful and diligent service of God in holiness and righteousness. 17. Under the influence of a truly religious, filial, and reverential fear of God, and answerable to the character of true worshippers of him, always study to pay a suitable respect to all men, be of what rank they will: cultivate the most tender and affectionate love, and be ready to perform every kind office to your fellow-believers, Jews or Gentiles; and, as loyal subjects, pay all civil homage and respect to kings and other magistrates, as the deputies and vicegerents of God. 18—20. Such of you as are household servants, whether slaves or hired, always study an humble submission, becoming reverence, and ready and faithful obedience, in all things lawful, to your masters;—not only to such as are generous, kind, meek, and merciful in their temper and behaviour, but also to them who are austere and morose, especially if it be only because ye are become Christians:—for this is acceptable to God, and praiseworthy, if, for the sake of your religion, and from a conscientious regard to his command and honour, ye patiently suffer injurious and abusive treatment, without having given any just provocation by your faults. But there is no honour to Christ, your religion, or yourselves, in your tame submission to the severe punishment of your neglects, infidelity, and misdemeanours. The criminal cause makes your sufferings a reproach to all concerned. But if, while ye are diligent and faithful in the duties of your station, ye patiently bear sufferings, inflicted for your conscientious regard to Christ and his Father, this evidences a truly excellent and holy temper, which God freely gives, and is highly pleased with. 21. For when ye became Christians, ye were called patiently and publicly to submit to injuries and reproaches, for the sake of Christ and the gospel, because he himself, in his infinite love to us, willingly underwent the severest sufferings and most infamous revilings for us, not only to expiate our sins and purchase our eternal happiness, but also to leave us a most perfect pattern of patience in suffering; that we, in love and duty, might imitate him in this and other parts of his holy and blameless behaviour, 22, 23. Who, notwithstanding all the false and malicious accusations of his enemies, never was found guilty of the smallest fault, or the least insincerity, deceit, or falsehood, in his words or doctrine;—and who, when he was shamefully reproached as a blasphemer, an impostor, and one possessed by the devil, and most insolently and barbarously abused by his enemies, never returned the smallest reproach, nor threatened to revenge the injuries done him,—but calmly referred the cause between him and his persecutors to his heavenly Father; and even prayed that, instead of avenging, he would graciously forgive their murderous wickedness through his atoning blood; 24. Who, being altogether sinless in himself, cheerfully, as our Surety, submitted to all his sufferings, as the punishment of our sins imputed to him, and to be borne by him in his death; in order that, through the merits and virtue of his sufferings, we might have our sins pardoned and subdued, and all our spiritual maladies healed; and might live in all holy obedience, and bring forth fruits of righteousness to God through him. 25. For, in our unconverted state, we were inclined to, and actually running astray from God, and from his fold, ordinances, commandments, and ways of truth and peace, into every sinful and dangerous path, leading to eternal destruction; but now, through the enlightening and renewing operations of the Holy Ghost by the gospel, ye are brought back to Christ, as the great Shepherd and kind Overseer of your precious and immortal souls, that he may care for, feed, nourish, guide, govern, heal, and defend you from all evil, and conduct you safe to his eternal glory.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—The pure doctrines of Christ are most nourishing provision to a regenerated soul. But great mortification of lusts, and earnest exercise of faith and love, are necessary in making use of it. And the more knowledge and experience we have of God's transcendent grace, the more ardently shall we desire it. Whatever Christ be to others, he is infinitely precious, honourable, useful, and establishing to his own people; and sweet is the light, the life, the honour, the confirmation, the holiness, the usefulness, the acceptableness, they derive from him. Astonishing is his love, his condescension, in cheerfully bearing our sins, enduring our punishment, and in recovering us, when lost and strayed, to himself! With sincere regard to his word as our rule—to his example as our pattern—ought we, by a holy, honest, and virtuous conversation, to recommend his religion in the world, and to refute the reproaches cast upon it by the wicked. With earnestness should we subdue and mortify every sinful lust. And with great cheerfulness ought we to perform every relative duty to magistrates, masters, or others, and to undergo whatever injuries we may be called to suffer for his sake. But bad neighbours, rebellious and unruly subjects, and imperious and unfaithful servants, can never be good Christians.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1, 2. And while Christian subjects and servants are careful to honour their religion by a conscientious performance of the duties of their station, do you, Christian wives, behave with the most obliging and affectionate submission to your husbands in all things lawful; that if any be ignorant, regardless, or contemners of the word and ordinances of God, those ordinary means of conversion, they may, by your meek, humble, sweet, and engaging temper and carriage, and your pure, sober, chaste, modest, and reverential deportment, influenced by a religious reverence of God, and regard to his authority, be allured and gained over to a good esteem of Christ and his ways: 3, 4. And labour to recommend yourselves and your religion to your husbands, not by the external ornaments of dress, but by knowledge, virtue, truth, grace, and holiness of heart, manifested by good works in your life, which are far more beautiful, excellent, advantageous, and lasting; particularly by a modest, humble, gentle, calm, tractable, and peaceable, temper of spirit, free from pride and turbulent passion, which, however overlooked by vain minds, is inexpressibly valuable in God's account. 5, 6. For in this endearing and submissive manner the ancient holy women, who trusted in God for his blessings of time and eternity, endeavoured to ingratiate themselves with their husbands; particularly Sara, who in the very name she gave to her husband Abraham, marked her high respect for him,—whose daughters, not only in a natural, but in a moral and spiritual sense, ye are while ye behave rightly towards your husbands and others, without being deterred from your religion through fear of their displeasure, and without any unbelieving confusion or doubt relative to God's fulfilment of his promises.—7. And do you husbands, on all occasions, live with your wives in a faithful, friendly, and familiar manner, treating them with that decency, kindness, and cheerfulness, which prudence and knowledge of the gospel require;—delighting in their persons, consulting their comfort and happiness, supporting their credit and authority in the family, providing honourably for them, putting due confidence in them, and sympathizing with, and helping them under, their manifold infirmities, that, if Christians, they may be honoured and encouraged, as heirs of eternal happiness, equally with yourselves; and if not, may be allured to the Christian religion; and every proper method taken to promote your joint worshipping of God, by yourselves and with the family, in a manner comfortable to you and acceptable to God. 8, 9. In fine, let all of you, who profess to believe in Christ, labour to cultivate a mutual agreement in the important doctrines of the gospel, and answerable thereto; and a harmonious temper, feelingly sympathizing with one another in all afflictions.—As children of the same heavenly Father, maintain and exercise an affectionate brotherly love, in thought, word, and deed, towards each other. Manifest the most tender sympathy towards such as are under weakness or afflictions, temporal or spiritual. And let your whole carriage be affable, friendly, and engaging to every one. Never return injuries or reproaches to such as have injured or reproached you, but earnestly pray for blessings to them, and watch for opportunities to do them real favours,—knowing that ye are called, by the authority and example of Christ, to this amiable conduct, as a mean of his gracious bestowal of temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings upon you, as his children and heirs of his promises. 10, 11. For nothing can be more plain, from the oracles of God, than that they who wish for peace, comfort, and prosperity, in this world, ought to guard against all profane, filthy, opprobrious, false, or deceitful language; and to abhor, and carefully avoid, everything sinful in itself, and prejudicial to others; and practise everything good and beneficial; labouring, to the utmost of their power, and as far as they can with a good conscience, to live peaceably with all men, and studying to promote peace among neighbours, friends, or enemies. 12, 13. For the great Lord of all takes special notice of, dearly loves, and kindly watches over and cares for such as, being clothed with Jesus' imputed righteousness, are upright, holy, and righteous in their hearts and lives; and he is graciously attentive to, and ready to answer, all their prayers, which are offered to him in humility, faith, and fervency;—but in a terrible manner he manifests his just indignation against such as indulge themselves in wickedness. And if he be your Friend and Protector, what man or devil can do you any real hurt, while, depending on his grace, and devoted to his service, ye imitate him and his saints in goodness and holiness? Nay, what man would be so malicious or cruel as to seek the hurt of an inoffensive and beneficent neighbour? 14—16. But if God should permit any to reproach and persecute you for adherence to Christ and his gospel, his love and favour will render you happy under such treatment: never therefore be terrified, discouraged, or perplexed, as if their threatenings or abuse would issue in your disgrace or ruin; but always preserve high thoughts, and a reverential fear, of God in your hearts, and entire trust in his infinite wisdom, power, mercy, and faithfulness, for your security, and for ordering every event to your everlasting honour and joy. And in a dependence on his direction and assistance, be always ready, by word or deed, in courts of judicature, and everywhere else, to defend, and account for, the grounds of your hopes of salvation, according to the gospel, for which ye willingly suffer. And let this be done with a meek and modest air, temper, and language, and with a holy reverence of God, and fear of offending him by unfaithfulness; and even with a cautious fear of offending those to whom ye speak by anything disrespectful;—in everything conscientiously studying, that if your enemies will reproach you as injurious to society or public welfare, your blameless, humble, and benevolent practice, springing from faith in Christ, may effectually confute them, and force them with shame to retract their slanders. 17. For if it please God that you should suffer for your adherence to his truths and ways, this is far more honourable, advantageous, and comfortable, than if you were to suffer for your own crimes and follies. 18. For in patiently and boldly suffering for righteousness' sake, ye are conformed unto your great Lord and Saviour, who, though infinitely holy and righteous in his divine nature, and perfectly pure in his manhood, did, once for all, offer up himself, in his sufferings as an atoning sacrifice, in the room of us unrighteous and ungodly sinners, that he might reconcile us to God, and bring us to spiritual fellowship with him here, and immediate enjoyment of him hereafter;—he having been crucified in his manhood, but quickly after raised again to an immortal life of blessedness and glory by the influence of his divine nature and of his Holy Spirit. 19, 20. * To them that are dead for the gospel's sake (ch. 2. 20, 21. & 3. 14, 17, 18). The word "dead" cannot be understood of "the dead in trespasses and sins," but must be taken in the same sense in which it appears in the preceding verse. So suddenly to change the meaning from natural to spiritual death, without any evident intimation of change, would overturn every principle of legitimate interpretation.—Ed.

‡ In the spirit.—In their own spirit;—having "the same mind" that was in Christ (ver. 1.), by the renewal of the Spirit of God.—Ed.

§ This epistle was written about A. D. 67, shortly after the war with the Romans commenced, which ended in the burning of the temple, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the total ruin of the Jewish state. But there is another and universal sense in which "the end of all things is at hand" to every man—the hour of death, that separates him for ever from all he loves, or hates, or fears, or possesses, or hopes for in time, and brings him into immediate contact with the unchanging realities of eternity.—Ed.

reformation, to those ungodly sinners who lived on the earth before the flood, but are now shut up in the prison of hell, for the punishment of their obstinate rebellion against God, and contemptuous abuse of his long continued mercies and patience. 21, 22. And as then Noe and his family were saved out of, and even by means of, water; so baptism, not as a mere washing of our body with water, but as it represents and seals the application of Christ's blood and Spirit to our conscience, purifying it from dead works, and making us to act answerably to our solemn obligation to be the Lord's (therein contracted,) is now a noted representation and mean of our salvation, by the death and resurrection of Christ our only Saviour; who, as a pledge, earnest, evidence, and security of it, and as our Forerunner, to open our way and prepare mansions for us, is now ascended into heaven, enthroned at the right hand of God, and invested with all power over angels, magistrates, and every other creature.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Modesty, meekness, and humility, from a principle of faith in God, are the most engaging ornaments of women, married or unmarried. And an honourable, humane, and tender treatment of a wife is the most substantial evidence of a husband's affection. Never ought a family to exist without much daily fervent prayer, both secret and private. And it is an honour to the Christian religion, and a comfort and happiness to professors, when harmony in sentiment, unanimity in affection, readiness to render good for evil, useful converse, a steadfast cleaving to every good principle and practice, and readiness to account or suffer with meekness for their religion, constantly and everywhere prevail.—A holy, humble, benevolent, and circumspect practice, is the best confutation of every calumny. And the more we live in the fear of God, the less we shall be influenced by the fears or reproaches of men.—Why should we ever repine at suffering for Christ, that God-man, who suffered for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God? Deep was his debasement, and high his glory that followed. And rich, full, and extensive, is that salvation from sin and wrath which he purchased and effects. How important an ordinance is baptism! Alas, unhappy is the thought that many rest on it, as if it were a Saviour, while others use it as a mere ceremony or fancied charm!

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1, 2. Now, since Jesus Christ has thus patiently and extremely suffered in his manhood for us unjust sinners, to bring us to God, let his noble and endearing example arm you against all impatience and fainting under what ye suffer for his sake;—for if, in the virtue of his death in our stead, we have crucified our inward corruptions, and have cheerfully and patiently endured outward sufferings for his sake, and in conformity to him, we shall be disposed to renounce all our former sinful principles and practices, and with grief and hatred to turn from them to God with full purpose of heart,—that we may not spend the remaining part of our time in the exercise of carnal and sinful lusts, after the example of evil men, but in holy dispositions and practices, which God commands and delights in, as tending to his glory: 3—5. For we have already spent too much of our time, like heathens, in diversified forms of uncleanness, drunkenness, gluttony, and the most shameful and detestable idolatries.—On account of your unexpected withdrawment from which dissolute lewdness, luxury, and intemperance, ye and your religion are vilified by your wicked neighbours, as if it had made you quite unsociable, stiff, precise, and humoursome;—but quickly must they answer for all these reproaches to the Lord Jesus himself, upon whom they ultimately fall, and who is authorized to, and will, ere long, judge all that have ever lived on the earth, to the great joy of his saints, and terror of his enemies. 6. For to this end was the gospel preached to those who are now dead in Christ, as well as to them who now live on the earth;—that through divine influences attending it, their inward corruptions being thoroughly mortified and subdued, and they, being condemned and censured by carnal men, might in their souls, quickened and animated by the Holy Ghost, live after a spiritual and joyful manner, according to the command and pattern of God, and in fellowship with him, and to his glory; and be at last raised to an eternal and full enjoyment of him. 7. But consider, for your encouragement and caution under your present trials, that your Jewish nation must quickly be altogether destroyed, and your death, and even the dissolution of this lower world, take place:—be therefore always wise, sober, and temperate,—constantly watching against temptations and the workings of indwelling corruption, and for opportunities of, and spiritual assistances in, prayer, for whatever blessings, deliverances, graces, or comforts you need. 8. And influenced by the transcendent love of God in Christ to you, earnestly cultivate a warm, cordial, and brotherly affection one towards another in these perilous times; for as he, in his infinite kindness and mercy, has freely forgiven you all your innumerable transgressions, so your fervent love to one another, for his sake, after his example, and in obedience to his command, will make you readily forgive and conceal the numerous failings of each other. 9. And be always ready with cheerfulness to entertain and lodge religious strangers, especially such as go about preaching the gospel, or are, by persecutors, deprived of their property, and driven from their homes. 10, 11. Let all such as have gifts and offices in the church carefully, faithfully, and prudently employ those graciously bestowed gifts, and execute those offices, for the edification of others,—as stewards accountable to God for their trusts.—If some be called to preach the gospel, let them, in a becoming, serious, solemn, reverential, fervent, faithful, spiritual, and holy manner, declare the mind of God, and nothing else, according to his word. If others be called to collect, take care of, and distribute the church's stock, for the relief of the poor, the maintenance of ministers, and defraying the necessary expense of divine ordinances, let them attend to their work with all fidelity, prudence, tenderness, and diligence, as they have ability and opportunity,—that all the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church may be so conducted as to promote the glory, praise, and adoration of God, through the merit and mediation of Christ, our ever exalted, praised, and adored Redeemer. 12. My dear brethren, fellow-sufferers for Christ's cause, while you reflect on the imperfection of your present state, and the depravity of mankind, which fills them with enmity against everything good, and on the warnings of our blessed Saviour, ye ought never to be discouraged nor surprised at the severest troubles and persecutions wherewith God exercises you;—not to destroy, but to refine you, try and purify your graces, and purge away your sinful corruptions,— the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you:

13 But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

15 [i]But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters.

16 [k]Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

† And if the righteous scarcely (rather, hardly, with difficulty) be saved.—This difficulty arises from many sources, but mainly, 1. From the necessity of "cutting off the right hand," and "plucking out the right eye"—"mortifying the deeds of the body," that they may live. 2. From the constant watchfulness to be maintained, and the tendency to slumber to be resisted. 3. From the hopes to be sacrificed, and the fears to be overcome. 4. From the deceitfulness of sin itself, which, like Satan its author, is always transforming itself "into an angel of light." 5. From the many persecutions inflicted by an evil world. 6. And specially, and above all, from the contentions of sense with faith.—Ed.

THE elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder,* and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:

2 Feed the flock of God †which is among you, taking the oversight‡ thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3 Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock:

4 And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder: yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

6 Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

7 Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

* An elder.—Rather, "a co-presbyter."—A title adopted by Peter: 1. Because elder was a name of office better known among the Jews than almost any other; and completely setting aside the Romish claim of priesthood in the sense of "sacrificer." 2. That the Spirit by whom he wrote, might, as by a prophetic anticipation, rebuke those proud titles and assumptions of superiority by which, in virtue of an original supremacy asserted for Peter, the popes of Rome, styling themselves his successors, have continued a terrible "lordship over God's heritage" (ver. 3), except where the Alpine and Pyrenean churches in Europe, the Christians of St Thomas in Asia, and a few other scattered churches, continued to preserve the truth of the gospel and their ecclesiastical liberties till the blessed Reformation restored the Bible, and light, and liberty to the benighted churches and enslaved kingdoms.—Ed.

as if they were unexpected, uncommon, and foreign to the methods of his love to his children; 13. But rather think of, and stand prepared to meet them with holy joy, as therein ye have Christ's sympathy and comforts promised and secured to you, and are, in suffering for him, conformed to him; that, when he appears in all his glory at the last day, ye also may rejoice and triumph in and together with him. 14. If with patience, courage, and joy, ye endure reproaches and abuse for his and the gospel's sake, this manifests your union to, and fellowship with him; and will, through his merit and gracious influence, issue in your unspeakable advantage;—for the glorious Spirit of God, who bestows all grace and glory on men, is with you, to support, deliver, and reward you.—By your persecutors, he and our Redeemer are blasphemously reproached; but by your faith and patience, and courageous confession of the truth, they are honoured and glorified. 15. Nevertheless, I beseech you to beware of bringing any trouble on yourselves by any criminal conduct of your own; as murder, dishonesty, sedition, injuring of neighbours, neglect of your own affairs, or intermeddling with those of other men. 16. But if any of you be enabled, with faith, patience, and courage, to suffer indignities, reproaches, and cruelties, merely for your profession of Christ and his gospel,—look not on it as a disgrace, but as a real honour conferred upon you, on account of which ye ought to praise and glorify God. 17. For the time is at hand, when not only Jerusalem and your Jewish nation shall be fearfully destroyed by the just judgments of God, but even the New Testament church shall be visited with terrible persecutions and troubles. Now, if his severe judgments be first inflicted on his ancient and long peculiar people, and on us real believers, in whom he dwells by his Holy Spirit, what extremity of wrath must fall upon obstinate unbelievers, who disregard and reject his gospel? 18. And if, in the general ruin of our nation or other public calamities, they who are clothed with the righteousness of Christ, and are renewed and sanctified by his Spirit unto all holy obedience, have but a narrow, though sure escape, by his providence and grace, what dreadful, unavoidable, insupportable, inexpressible, and everlasting misery, must come upon those impenitent unbelievers who obstinately persist in their sins! 19. Reflecting upon these awful events, which carry so much encouragement to you, and terror to your enemies, do you, who, in a Christian manner, by the assistance of God's Spirit, endure persecutions and afflictions, as appointed for you by him, believingly commit your lives, your souls, and all your concerns, in time or eternity, to him,—in a course of holy walking with him, and of doing good to all around you, friends or foes;—trusting in him, that he, as your almighty Creator and Preserver, will, through Christ, perform his promise, in protecting, supporting, comforting, and delivering you in the worst of times.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Nothing so effectually mortifies sin as believing views of Christ's sufferings for it. And the will of God, not our vile affections, must be our guide in all our conduct. An affecting remembrance of former sinfulness powerfully dissuades from a return to it. And not men's thoughts, but Christ's judgment, ought to determine our practice. If we live according to God in the Spirit, no matter what sufferings from carnal men we undergo for his sake.—Our views of approaching calamities, and especially of the last judgment, should produce in us great sobriety, and watching unto prayer, fervent charity, cheerful hospitality, and a ready and proper use of our gifts. Faithfully should believers, under the impression of it, regard the glory of God; endure with patience, boldness, and joy, in suffering for Christ; and be careful to give their enemies no proper ground of offence, seriously committing themselves to God in well-doing. Abundant is the comfort, that all sufferings for Christ shall be richly rewarded in an eternal enjoyment of him; and that his blessed Spirit abides on, and shares with, us in all such afflictions. But if saints thus suffer on earth, how miserable must sinners be in time or eternity! If they, who strive to enter in at the strait gate, be saved with difficulty, how impossible is it for careless sinners to escape the damnation of hell!

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1—4. And as for you, who are the spiritual rulers and pastors of the Christian church, I,—who am one myself, and who, after being an eyewitness of the sufferings of Christ, have boldly preached them as the ground of men's salvation, at the hazard of my life, in the assured hopes of being, in a little time, a partaker with him in that glory which he purchased thereby, and which he has taken possession of, as my Head, Representative, and Forerunner, and will openly manifest and bestow,—beseech you diligently and faithfully to teach and govern those souls, which he purchased by his blood, and has committed to your care, personally inspecting their principles, temper, and conduct, and looking after their spiritual concerns with wisdom and meekness,—not from external motives of fear, shame, or regard to worldly advantages, as your governing end,—but with freedom and delight, purely for the honour of Christ and welfare of souls; and not with ambitious views of honour to yourselves, or in an imperious, haughty, and domineering manner, as if ye had the rule over the faith and consciences of God's peculiar people,—but as examples of humility, self-denial, holiness, and righteousness to them;—that when Jesus, who purchased them by his blood, and saves them by his power and grace, and under whom ye act, and to whom ye are accountable, appears to judge the world at the last day, ye may receive from him a great, but gracious, reward of everlasting glory and honour. 5. And ye who are younger, or in private stations, or at least inferiors in some respect, study to be always attentive and submissive to the admonitions, cautions, and reproofs, of your superiors in age, wisdom, experience, or station; particularly your church rulers, treating their persons, characters, and instructions with due esteem and reverence. And let all of you beware of self-conceit or obstinacy; behaving with due respect one to another, and yielding to each other, as far as your rank and circumstances can possibly permit. And let an unfeigned humility appear in your whole conduct, as its great ornament, and a cover to its defects. 6. And considering what a great, sovereign, almighty, and just God ye have to do with, and what terrible judgments he is about to execute, in the course of his providence, on your nation and the Christian church, as an emblem of still greater in the world to come, yield up yourselves to his almighty, sovereign, and holy will, under all the sufferings and troubles you meet with for your trial, that when he has gained the wise and gracious ends of his chastenings, he may lift you up above all tribulations, and advance you to all those honours or delights which are for your spiritual or eternal advantage. 7. Yea, whatever be your distressing burdens, anxieties, fears, and cares, with respect to yourselves, families, friends, or the church of Christ, commit them all by faith and prayer to him, relying on his power and goodness for seasonable relief; for he has all your concerns at heart; and will pity, succour, strengthen, and comfort you; and, in his own time and way, give you a happy deliverance from, and issue of, all your troubles, in your everlasting salvation. 8. But amidst all the difficulties and dangers of your present warfare, labour always to maintain a wakeful, sober, and humble temper of mind, in modest thoughts of yourselves, and in moderating your affections towards earthly enjoyments; and watch unto prayer, and unto the performance of all the duties of your station, and against temptations to sin and apostasy; for your busy and powerful adversary the devil, like a fierce, savage, and hungry lion, is indefatigably restless in his contrivances and endeavours, by persecutions, frauds, and evil suggestions, to wound, tear, and ruin immortal souls; 9. Whom ye must courageously resist,—steadfastly maintaining the pure doctrines of faith, and your holy profession of the same, in a firm dependence on the power and grace of Christ to vanquish him. And to prevent your being disheartened in the combat, remember that ye are only meeting with such a conformity to Christ in sufferings as your Christian brethren everywhere meet with in this evil world. 10. May therefore that God, who is rich in mercy, and who of his own mere favour is the Fountain and Giver of all grace, and who, by his word and Spirit, has effectually called us to the promised, prepared, and infallibly secured, inheritance of eternal glory, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, after, and by means of, these your transient afflictions, render you perfect in knowledge and practice; establish you immovably in the faith, hope, profession, and holiness of the gospel; strengthen you with all might unto all patience, obedience, and suffering; and settle your souls with unshaken peace, safety, and comfort, on that foundation laid in Sion. 12. By Silas, whom I can recommend as a faithful brother, and whom I expect you will find such, I have sent you this short letter, to exhort and encourage you to abide by the testimony which I have herein given you for the confirmation of your faith; assuring you that this is the true gospel of the grace of God, relating to salvation by Christ alone; in the doctrine, belief, and profession of which ye have lived, and I hope shall continue to stand fast, notwithstanding all the terrors and artifices of your enemies to bring you off from it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—With an exemplary spirit and conversation, humbleness of mind, disinterestedness, cheerfulness, and diligence, ought ministers to inspect, instruct, warn, exhort, comfort, and govern the souls committed to their care by Christ, who redeemed them by his blood. And glorious, but free, is the reward that awaits them if they be found faithful. With great humility, submission to one another, self-humiliation under God's mighty hand, and casting our cares upon him, ought every one of us professed Christians to adorn our profession and prepare for the eternal state. And constant should be our sobriety, watchfulness against, and vigorous resistance of Satan, and resignation to our share of sufferings for Christ. It is a mercy that the saints' sufferings are so short and light, their assistance under them so great, and their reward after them, from the God of all grace, so inestimable and everlasting. Their standing for a little time in the faith and love, profession and practice, of the gospel, will quickly issue in their eternal triumphs in his praise.

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

THE design of this epistle is merely to follow up the former with some additional illustrations and encouragements. It must be understood, however, as addressed equally to Jewish and Gentile converts, "to all who had obtained like precious faith." And though the references seem generally to imply that the parties were perfectly familiar with the Old Testament Scriptures, yet as the Old Testament had already been translated into Greek, there can be little reason for imagining that the Gentile converts would not be as well acquainted with them as the Jews. This brief epistle contains the following numerous references to the other Scriptures: Gen. i. 6—9; vii. 1—9, 11, 16, 22, 23; xix. 16, 24, 25; Num. xxii. 5, 7, 21, 23, 28; Josh. xxiii. 14; 2 Sam. xxiii. 2; Ps. cii. 26; Is. v. 19; lxv. 17—19; Mat. xvii. 1—5; Paul's epistles; and probably Rev. xxi.—ED.

Simon Peter—divinely called to be a ministering servant, and honoured to be an inspired messenger of Jesus Christ, in founding and forming the gospel church,—to those Jews scattered in and about Lesser Asia, who, in the sovereignly gracious dispensations of God, have been made partakers of a saving faith, of the same excellent nature and kind, as to its causes, acts, objects, fruits, and benefits, which we apostles and other believers have received; not through any worthiness or ability of our own, but through the merit of that everlasting righteousness which was brought in by the obedience and sufferings of Jesus Christ our divine Saviour—wishes all the blessings of grace and peace may abound, in their richest variety and fulness, to all and each of you, through your believing, experimental, and increasing acquaintance with our common Lord and Redeemer, and with God as our reconciled Father in him; 3. 8 For if these things be in you, and abound, [l] they make you that ye shall neither be [†] barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.[‡] glory; through the efficacious knowledge and faithful acknowledgment of him, and of the Father in him,—who has by the gospel, and by the glorious operation of his mighty power, effectually called us to an inheritance of eternal glory, and to a courageous profession of our faith and hope of it; 4. By which divine Persons, and the glorious operations of their power through the gospel, are sovereignly, freely, and irrevocably given to us the most inconceivably great, rich, valuable, honourable, and everlasting promises of the new covenant, fully furnished with all the transcendent blessings of grace and glory, that, by the application and fulfilment of these promises in all their variety, riches, and extent, ye might have fellowship with God, and have implanted in you a new nature, derived from him, conformed to him, and tending to and delighting in him,—ye having, as an introduction to, and as a part and evidence of it, renounced, and with vigour and abhorrence fled from the corrupt principles and practices which spread and prevail among unregenerate men, through the power of their depraved inclinations and inordinate affections to carnal things. 5—7. In consideration therefore of what ye have already received, ye ought, with the utmost care and diligence, to increase more and more in every grace and duty in their due order; particularly in active faith,—Christian courage in your holy profession and practice,—spiritual knowledge, wisdom, and prudence;—the due regulation and government of your passions and appetites, and weanedness of heart from the alluring objects of sense;—patience under tribulations, in a calm resignation to the will of your heavenly Father;—holy reverence of God, and conscientious attention to every ordinance of his worship, from a principle of love to him, in obedience to his command, and for his glory;—an affectionate love, tenderness, sympathy, and compassion, with all proper expressions thereof towards your fellow-christians, as brethren in Christ;—and a universal benevolence to all mankind, as partakers of the same human nature with yourselves, endeavouring to promote their temporal and spiritual welfare, whether they be friends or enemies: 8. For if these excellent graces be found in you, and be lively and enlarged in their exercise, they will render you thriving, active, and useful Christians; vigorous, diligent, and abounding in every good word and work relating to God, yourselves, and others, answerably to your fiducial knowledge and acknowledgment of Christ as our only Lord and Saviour. 9. Whereas those professors, who are destitute of the fore-mentioned graces, or have no sensible experience of the exercise of them, are, amidst all their pretences to knowledge, in spiritual darkness; their eyes being shut against the light, or having only a glimmering, confused, and short sight, which cannot penetrate into the beauty and glory of Christ, his truths and ways;—and they have practically renounced their baptismal blessings and obligations, and remain unconcerned about the pardon and destruction of their natural corruptions and early wickedness. 10. Since the difference between real and nominal Christians is so great, and since so many take up with a profession, without the experience of true grace, do you, my beloved brethren, exert yourselves to the utmost in the use of all the appointed means of grace, to make sure your effectual calling to Christ, and renovation of your nature, as the infallible proof of your having been chosen in him before the foundation of the world to everlasting life; for, if it be manifested by the habitual exercises of the above-mentioned graces, whatever trials, failings, and infirmities may attend you, ye shall never finally apostatize from Christ, or fall into everlasting ruin; 11. But instead thereof, shall have an abundant measure of hope and joy in your way to the full enjoyment of God; and at last have, in death, a triumphant entrance into all the sublime dignity, affluence, and delights of that eternal kingdom of glory, which Christ has purchased and taken possession of for his people, and in which he will for ever dwell with them. 12—15. As these things are of so much importance, and yet so much opposed, I cannot but remind you of them, and urge them upon your consciences,—that, as ye have already known and firmly believed them, ye may be more and more affected with them and practise them:—nay, while I continue living in this mortal body, and sojourning in this world, I must, in justice to these truths, and to your souls, repeatedly remind you of them, and earnestly urge you to practise them, lest, through the treachery of your memories or hearts, ye should forget and neglect them.—And I am the more solicitous to do this now, as I know that I must quickly leave this mortal state, and seal my testimony with my blood and death, as our dear Lord and Saviour long ago intimated to me.—And I am deeply concerned to leave behind me this, as well as my former epistle, in order to establish you in these truths, and stir you up to the practice of them, after I shall, by death, have departed from this state of sin, sorrow, and mortality, into a perfectly holy and blessed state of everlasting life with Christ. 16. For in making known to you the divine authority, power, and glory in which our Lord Jesus will come to judge the world at the last day, we have not craftily framed, nor artfully related to you, sophistical and idle stories, like many of the Jewish rabbins, or like the heathen romancers,—but that of which we had an emblem and earnest presented to our eyes and ears on the mount of transfiguration. 17, 18. Where we distinctly heard God the Father, who is infinitely glorious in himself, and dwells in the inaccessible light and glory of heavenly mansions, expressly attest our Redeemer as his dearly beloved and eternal Son; in whose person, offices, undertakings, and performances, he was exceedingly delighted; as he also is with all those who are united to him by faith, and clothed with his righteousness. 19. But beside this emblematical and presumptive proof of Christ's future appearance in divine power and majesty to judge the world, we have many more plain declarations of it in the scripture, to which ye ought carefully to attend, as to a light to guide and direct you amidst the remaining darkness of judaism, heathenism, and carnal ignorance of heart,—till at last the glorious appearance of Christ himself dissipate all obscurity or doubt about what was intimated by the vision on the mount, and is thus further confirmed by the predictions of scripture. 20, 21. Meanwhile, ye may confidently depend on the prophetic attestation of Christ's glorious appearance,—being, first of all, fully satisfied that no prophecy of scripture is the product of human invention, the ancient prophets themselves often not thoroughly understanding the meaning of their predictions;—for none of these ancient prophecies were either delivered or written according to the contrivance, will, and pleasure of the prophets themselves:—but those holy men, whom God set apart and sanctified for his service, spake and wrote only those things which were suggested to them by the Holy Ghost, whose immediate influence excited them to utter the ideas which he had raised in their minds, and to express them in words which exactly conveyed the true sense of them.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—It is a high honour to be instrumental in the conversion and sanctification of God's elect. What precious faith, and multiplied grace and peace, come to them through Jesus' righteousness and the powerful operations of his Spirit! Effectually he calls his people to a most glorious inheritance in heaven, and to a holy profession and practice in the way to it. Rich is that fulness of salvation which is given to them in the gospel promises: and great the deliverance from sin, and transformation into the likeness of God, thereby effected. Spiritual sloth indulged is as inconsistent with the gospel as the belief of man's merit of eternal happiness. Grace must be added unto grace, and we must grow in each. Nothing less will prove our election, manifest our title to heaven, or make us meet for it. So apt are professors to mistake or apostatize from the truth, that these things cannot be too often considered and inculcated; and the apprehended approaches of death ought to render both ministers and people the more active in their proper work. The truths of the gospel are too important to be dallied with, too certain to be discredited. And the more experience we have had of divine things ourselves, the more are we qualified to teach and recommend them to others. But it is on no human testimony, but on the infallible oracles of God, that our faith must be founded or practice regulated.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1. But as there were false prophets among your Jewish ancestors, who laboured to seduce them from the Lord into idolatry and other wickedness, so there will be, especially among your Jewish nation, false teachers, who, under various pretences, will covertly and craftily introduce the most pernicious errors, tending to the sudden, unexpected, and eternal destruction of both teachers and receivers, as they will both doctrinally and practically deny the glory, and renounce the wisdom, authority, grace, and holiness of their Lord and Master, discovered in the gospel revelation of him,—whom they boast of as their ancient deliverer from Egypt, and marvellous preserver for many ages afterward; and who is the acknowledged Saviour and Redeemer of his professed people. 2. And through the natural depravity and enmity of their hearts against God and his ways, many nominal professors of Christ's name shall be seduced into their licentious and destructive principles and practices; on account of which the truths of the gospel, and the way of holiness and happiness therein prescribed, will be blasphemously reproached by its enemies; 3. And by flattering speeches shall these seducers, influenced by their covetous inclinations, labour to deceive you, in order to promote their own secular advantages. But, from the examples of others, it is manifest that the terrible judgments of God, long ago determined and threatened, hasten apace towards them, and shall in due season be executed upon them. 4. For if God did not show favour to, nor abate the punishment of, those angels that are of a far higher rank, who, through pride and envy, transgressed that law which he had given them for the rule and trial of their obedience,—but, for their first offence, hurled them down, with righteous indignation, from their holy, happy, and honourable habitation in heaven, and confined them in a state and region of horror and despair, till, at the general judgment, they shall receive their public condemnation, and have their full torment begun;—5. And if he had no pity on the inhabitants of the old world, who had despised all his solemn and gracious warnings by Noe, that faithful preacher of righteousness, repentance, and reformation, and of the righteous judgments of God against the impenitent, who, with seven only of his family, was saved, when God, by a universal flood of waters, drowned the rest of the inhabitants of the world for their obstinate wickedness.—6. And if, by fire and brimstone from heaven, he utterly destroyed Sodom, Gomorrha, Admah, and Zeboiim, on account of their horrid profligacy and unnatural lewdness, and set them up as a type or pattern of that final conflagration and eternal fire, which shall consume all the wicked of the earth,—that obstinate sinners of succeeding ages might see what they had to expect from his hand; 7, 8. While in distinguished kindness he plucked his righteous servant Lot as a brand out of the burning,—who had been sorely grieved, fatigued, and oppressed in his own soul at the sight and report of the vile, dissolute, lascivious, obscene, and unnatural behaviour of that perverse and wicked people among whom he dwelt:—9. These undoubted facts invincibly prove, that the almighty and infinitely wise Sovereign of the world perfectly knows at what time, and in what manner, and by what means, to extricate his faithful servants and worshippers out of all snares, troubles, and dangers, in the very worst of periods; and how to confine the wicked, though most powerful and crafty, under his supreme dominion, till he bring them forth, as condemned criminals, in the last judgment, to be punished for the iniquity of their hearts and lives.—10. And according to his infinite wisdom and power, he will peculiarly reserve and punish those impious seducers, who, answerably to their corrupt principles, live according to the carnal dictates and desires of their sensual minds, unrestrainedly gratifying their impure and lascivious inclinations, and insolently pouring contempt upon all regular government and authority over them that could put a check upon their vices. Daring, refractory, and headstrong, they seek only to please themselves; and make their own will their sole law, and fearfully and impudently reproach and rail at the apostles, and other ministers of Christ, and at the civil magistrates, whom God hath set over them, to regulate and control their exorbitant passions, appetites, and manners; 11. While angels, who are far superior in dignity to these proud boasters, or any earthly magistrates, are so far from contemning or reviling these deputies of God, that they never use any opprobrious bitter language against the devils themselves. 12. But these presumptuous despisers of government, instead of imitating good angels, like furious beasts of prey, reproach, rage, and rail against persons and things, civil or religious, whose excellence they neither know nor approve; and therefore shall, by means of their own indulged corruption and wickedness, be utterly and eternally destroyed; 13. Yea, shall be fearfully, but justly, punished for their complicated crimes, as persons who glory and delight in the most shameless intemperance and unchastity, and are a reproach to the Christian name, gratifying their luxurious inclina-

THIS [*]second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your [b]pure[†] minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye [c]may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

3 [d]Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts,

4 And saying, [e]Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

5 For this they willingly are ignorant of,[‡] that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water:

6 Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:[§]

tions, with their own deceived or deceiving devices, and cheating and imposing upon you, while, under pretences of love and friendship, they partake with you in your ordinary or religious feasts. 14. Their eyes are continually and insatiably employed in wanton and adulterous looks, to discover their own lewd inclinations, and to excite the like in others, or to find out proper objects for inflaming and gratifying the vilest affections. They cannot refrain from contriving or committing sin, or endeavouring to draw others into it; and so, by their enticements in word and deed, they insnare such unguarded persons as are not established in the truth and holiness of the gospel, nor fortified with grace against their guileful arts. As children of wrath devoted to destruction under the curse of God's righteous law, their hearts are entirely engaged in contriving how to fulfil their covetous desires after the riches and honours of this world. 15, 16. They have renounced the only true way of salvation through Jesus Christ, and of walking before God in faith and holy obedience; and have wandered into the ways of sin and error which lead to eternal misery, treading in the paths and copying the example of Balaam, who, amidst all his fair pretences, laboured to curse God's Israel, and directed how to seduce them into uncleanness and idolatry, in order that he might obtain worldly riches and honour; and was, by his own ass, when miraculously enabled to speak, sharply reproved for his infatuation and wickedness. 17. Amidst great pretences to, and appearances of knowledge, they are really void of true wisdom and grace; and, instead of being truly useful, for the refreshment and fructifying of the church or their followers, they are carried about by the violence of their corruptions from one error and sin to another, till at last they shall be shut up in that infernal darkness, misery, and despair, appointed to them for their everlasting portion: 18. For by their high pretences to holiness and wisdom, they only vent the pride and vanity of their own hearts, and accommodating themselves to the sensual and lascivious inclinations of depraved nature, they insnare such as had been once brought off from the errors of judaism or heathenism, and had for a time shunned the conversation and practices of such as lead wicked lives according to their erroneous principles. 19. And while they promise their followers full liberty in indulging their vicious inclinations, they themselves are the worst of slaves to their own corrupt lusts, being entirely overcome and conquered by them. 20—22. For if, after they have been externally reformed from the gross and scandalous practices of the men of this world which lieth in wickedness, through the notions which they had received concerning Jesus Christ as a Saviour and Sovereign, they are again insnared and involved in these abominations, and yield up themselves to the practice of them, their case is more aggravated, guilty, dangerous, and hopeless, than it was before they knew anything of Christ and the gospel, and especially than it was when they had the first conceptions of these things;—for their sin and punishment would really have been less, had they never heard nor known anything of him, and his righteousness or law, than when, after acquaintance with his law, they revolt from that pure and holy doctrine, which had been preached to them with a divine authority to bind it upon their consciences.—But, agreeably to a well-known proverb, as dogs lick up their own vomit; and swine, after being washed, return to wallow in the mire;—so, their natures never being changed, they, after conviction of, and reformation from, their wicked practices, return to them with as much pleasure and eagerness as ever.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—We must never expect a perfect church on earth. Deceivers, for the sake of worldly advantages, will always creep into the ministry, and always find followers. And often they fearfully pervert the gospel, and constructively deny that God who has wrought so great providential deliverances for themselves and others. Yea, notwithstanding repeated and tremendous warnings of providence in the destruction of their patterns in guilt under the most specious pretences of wisdom and piety, they entice, insnare, defile, enslave, and ruin unstable professors, and carry on the vilest covetousness, pride, luxury, and unchastity. Dreadfully criminal and dangerous is it to return to that wickedness which the knowledge of divine truth had rendered detestable; and fearful damnation in hell, if not also misery on earth, awaits, and unceasingly hastens forward to, such, while God will certainly, seasonably, and marvellously deliver his saints from their seduction, example, and punishment.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1, 2. In this, as well as my former epistle, I chiefly aim at awakening and warning you, who are still sincere in the faith, to be on your guard against false teachers, and their destructive schemes and attempts to overthrow your faith and hope, holiness and comfort,—and to excite you seriously to remember and reflect on the predictions and doctrines which have been delivered to you by the prophets, and more lately by us apostles, whom Christ the Saviour and King of his church, appointed for that effect; particularly what relates to his second coming to judgment, that ye may be fortified against the pernicious influence of secret and open seducers; 3, 4. Especially as ye have been fully warned, that, in this last stage of God's dispensations towards his church, there would arise profane despisers and deriders of the most important points of revelation;—abandoning themselves to their own carnal devices and corrupt inclinations,—and pretending, in a taunting manner, that the continuance of the world, in the same form as when those ancient predictions were given out, effectually proves that no such thing as a general resurrection or final judgment need be expected; 5—7. For they 9 The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; [g] but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.*

10 But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt† up.

wilfully shut their eyes against the Scripture account of the alterations which the power of God has already made in the creation of this world, in the drowning of the old world by means of those waters which he had created in connexion with the earth: and that the aërial heavens and this earth, as subsisting in their present forms, are, by the same almighty influence of God's will, upheld, and, as it were, treasured up, to be, at the end of the world, dissolved, not by water, as formerly, but by a dreadful fire, to the torment and terror of all the wicked who have ever lived. 8. To fortify your minds against their cavils, drawn from the apparent delay of Christ's second coming, consider this, that one day and a thousand years are equally before God as any individual point of time; and that, in his reckoning, the longest space is infinitely less than a single day in ours. 9. Nor is the seeming delay of the promised coming of Christ to judgment any evidence of God's dilatoriness, or that it shall never happen; but it is intended as an exercise of his long-suffering towards us, who are the objects of his special love; that all of us, in our several generations, may be delivered from eternal destruction, and brought to a true and evangelical repentance of, and turning from, our iniquities. 10. But how long soever God may delay this great day of the last judgment, in which Christ shall appear in all his glory, it will certainly come, in its appointed season, in a most sudden, unexpected, and, to the wicked, in a most terribly ruinous manner. And on it the whole frame of this lower world shall be amazingly altered, and purged from all the effects of sin and the curse; and the earth, that so much beloved portion of carnal men, shall be utterly burnt to ashes. 11—14. Since then we have sufficient reason to look for this great alteration of nature, and for the formation of new heavens and a new earth, out of the ashes of the former, into which nothing but what is righteous and holy can enter, it becomes us, with the utmost watchfulness, care, and circumspection, to study the most perfect holiness and righteousness in heart and life, expecting, looking, longing, and preparing for that great event, and labouring that we may then be found united to, and accepted in, his person, washed in his blood, and sanctified and comforted by his Spirit.—15, 16. And to encourage you to this study of the most perfect holiness, fix it in your minds, that the great patience and forbearance of our Lord, towards a sinful world, is intended to promote your salvation, and that of other elect persons; even as Paul, that divinely inspired apostle, has hinted in his epistle to you; as he has also, in his other epistles, warned both Jews and Gentiles of this second coming of Christ, and its momentous consequences, and that believers should patiently wait for it:—among which things there are some doctrines so sublime and spiritual in their nature, that weak and prejudiced persons cannot easily apprehend or receive them; and which, through their ignorance, pride, and other inward corruptions, they who are never taught of God, or are sceptical and unsettled in their principles, rack and torture to a wrong meaning, perverting the sense and use of them, as they do many other passages of the Old and New Testaments, to their own everlasting and aggravated destruction. 17. Since then you, my dear Christian brethren, are forewarned of these things, and assuredly know and believe that Christ will certainly come to judgment, and take vengeance upon all the ungodly, take the most earnest heed, lest any of you should, along with other apostates, be drawn aside from him, and his ways of truth and holiness, by the false notions, deceitful insinuations, and vile practices of impious, immoral, lawless men; and fall from that stability in the doctrines, purity, and profession of the gospel, in which ye have hitherto persisted. 18. But to prevent all declensions and revolts, let it be your earnest prayer and endeavour, in the use of all proper means, to obtain a growing persuasion and sense of God's free favour, to wax stronger and stronger in the habits of grace, and more and more to abound in the exercise thereof; and in a clear, fiducial, practical, and experimental acquaintance with the person, offices, relations, doctrines, promises, and commandments of our divine Lord and all-sufficient Saviour Jesus Christ, and with your own personal interest in him.

Reflections upon Chap. III.—The very best of Christian professors have need to be repeatedly stirred up to their duties, to be reminded of all the doctrines and commandments of Jesus Christ, and cautioned against the errors and evil practices of wicked and designing men. And the purer men's minds are, it is the more wicked to corrupt them.—How precisely the Scripture foretells the conduct of its adversaries, our own deists not excepted, and thereby renders their wicked opposition a proof of its own divine inspiration! But notwithstanding all the scoffs of his adversaries, with amazing patience does God delay the seasons of his wrath, particularly the last judgment, that sinners may have full space to repent and embrace his salvation. And delay of years is quite insignificant, when compared with his absolute eternity.—In the most tremendous manner will Jesus come at last.—The heavens shall perish before him; the elements melt away; and the earth with all that is therein, be burnt up! How terrible for carnal men to have that world, which they had chosen for their portion, universally kindled into flames, to give them a final adieu, and fearful introduction into hell! But blessed is the change which shall then be made in the purification of our lower world, and in forming out of its ashes new heavens and a new earth, for the everlasting happiness of ransomed men. In the faith and contemplation of these great events, how circumspect, holy, and religious ought we to be! Fully should we be weaned from the world; be steadfast in our profession and practice; fervent in prayer for necessary supplies; and earnest to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ our Lord.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST AND SECOND EPISTLES OF PETER.

The principal object of Peter's first epistle was, to shield the hearts of Christian converts against the arrows of persecution;—and that of the second, to shut their ears against the delusions of heresy. It is important, therefore, to observe how the apostle deals, first, with persecutors; and secondly, with false teachers. In the case of persecution, he finds the believers rejoicing "that they are counted worthy to suffer," (1 Pet. 1. 6). (1) He then teaches them submission to authorities, so as to put evil speakers to silence, (1 Pet. 2. 15). (2) To stand by conscience, and suffer without threatening or reviling, (1 Pet. 2. 19, 23. & 3. 9). (3) Not to be afraid while the Lord is their trust, (1 Pet. 3. 14). (4) To take Christ, in his sufferings, as their example and support, (1 Pet. 3. 18. & 4. 1, 12—14). In all this, the chief practical duties he inculcates and enforces are submission and patience. But, in the case of "false teachers" and their "destructive heresies" introduced in his second epistle, does he enjoin silence or submission? No;—he teaches to "give place by subjection, no, not for an hour;" but in the same decisive tone in which our Lord denounced his woes against the Scribes and Pharisees, does he denounce "their pernicious ways," (2 Pet. 2. 2), pronounce them "spots and blemishes" on the fair garment of Christianity; and declare that "their judgment lingereth not, their condemnation slumbereth not." And although this language of our Lord and his apostle will by no means authorize any one to adopt the language of passion, or self-will, or reviling against the adversaries of the truth, yet it equally forbids him who is "thoroughly persuaded in his own mind" to adopt the language of indifference, or of spurious charity, either towards false teachers themselves, or their destructive doctrines.—Ed.

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL

J O H N

WAS probably written about twenty years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and chiefly to the Jewish Christians. The scope of it is to establish their faith in Christ, as the eternal Son of God, and promised Messiah; to lead them into affecting views of his and his Father's love in the work of our redemption, and thereby engage their love to God and to one another, and sweetly constrain them to depart from all iniquity, and yield a cheerful obedience to all his commandments, answerably to their high privileges, hopes, and obligations;—and, in fine, to exhibit, a system of infallible marks for trying the reality of our grace.

[Although the name of the writer is not found in this epistle, yet, by the consent of all ecclesiastical history, it has been uniformly ascribed to John, the author of the gospel; and the similarity of thought and expression between the epistle and gospel, especially in the inculcation of love, points to "the disciple whom Jesus loved," and affords an ample confirmation of the acknowledged authorship. The date of the epistle is uncertain, and conjecture is useless. From chap. ii. 14, however, it would appear that there were, when the apostle wrote, several "fathers" still alive who had "known Him that was from the beginning," and that, consequently, the epistle was written previous to the destruction of Jerusalem.

It is worthy of special and constant remark, that, besides its community of subject with the other books, every book of Scripture has its own peculiar subject and object. This epistle, accordingly, while it opens with the fundamental topics of the divine perfections, man's depravity, and Christ's propitiation; and while it interweaves throughout its whole texture many other great truths of the gospel, yet steadily keeps in view one special object—the evidences of a personal and saving interest in the Lord Jesus Christ, whereby believers may judge, and are enabled to "know that they have eternal life, and that they may (should) believe on the name of the Son of God," (chap. v. 13). These evidences, originating as from a fountain, in "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," (chap. i. 3, 7), run continuously throughout the whole epistle, so that it forms a personal test by which every sincere inquirer may be able "to examine himself whether he be in the faith, prove his own self, and know (if a believer, however weak and fearful,) that Christ is in him"—"the hope of glory." The following Scriptures are more or less directly referred to throughout the epistle:—Gen. iv. 4—8; Deut. xiii. 13; 1 Kin. viii. 46; Job xix. 26; xlii. 8; Ps. xvi. 11; xli. 9; Eccl. vii. 20; Is. ix. 6; liii; liv. 5; lv. 7; lxi. 1; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Mic. vi. 8; Rom. iii. 24.—ED.]

THAT which was from [a] the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the Word of life;

2 (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;)

3 That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

[a] The difference between ἐν ἀρχῇ (John i. 1, "in the beginning" of creation, and consequently, before creation—from eternity) and ἀπ' ἀρχῆς (1 John i. 1.) is obvious. And though some eminent expositors would render ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, "from eternity," yet as it is connected, not with Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς, but with ὃ ἦν ("what occurred"), that interpretation is inadmissible, and the meaning must be, "from the beginning" (of the preaching of the gospel). See John 15. 27. 1 John 2. 7, 24. & 3. 11. 2 John 5, where this view is rendered certain by analogy. —ED.

4 And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

5 This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, That God is light,[b] and in him is no darkness at all.

6 If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness,[c] we lie, and do not the truth:

7 But if we walk in the light,[d] as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with [e] another, and [f] the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

8 If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

[b] God is light, not to the bodily, but to the intellectual eye (2 Cor. 4. 6)—the spirit. Now light is defined by Paul, "whatsoever maketh manifest" (Eph. 5.13). "Light" is, therefore, a just definition of "God," inasmuch as both good and evil, even all things within these limits of human knowledge, are "made (more or less) manifest" just in proportion as men see more or less of God. —ED.

[c] Darkness.—Theoretical or practical ignorance of the real difference between good and evil. Mic. 6. 8.—ED.

[d] "If we (on earth) walk in the light" (of Jesus the incarnate WORD, John i. 7—9) as he (our Father in heaven) is (dwelling and manifested) in the light."—ED.

[e] One with another. —God with us in giving the light of his Son; we with God, as walking and rejoicing in that light. —ED.

[f] 1 Cor. 6. 11. Heb. 9. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 18. ch. 2. 1, 2, 12, 28. Rev. 1. 5. & 7. 14.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 1—3. It is not upon slender and doubtful grounds, but on the most full assurance from hearing, seeing, and handling him, both before his death and after his resurrection, and upon the most remarkable spiritual experience of his power, glory, and grace; as well as by the infallible inspiration of the Holy Ghost; that we have preached unto you Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God, who has all life originally in himself, and has, when manifested in our nature, purchased life for us, and for ever bestows it upon us: —in order that ye might have partnership and communion with us, as one spiritual and holy body, in all the gracious promises, ordinances, influences, blessings, and privileges which belong to the gospel state: in which we have communion with the Father in all the blessings of his love, communicated to us through and with Christ, his eternal and dear Son, in all his righteousness and all the blessings of his purchase, and so also with the Holy Ghost in all his graces and comforts, as the earnest of our eternal and immediate fellowship with God in heaven. 4. And these great things I write unto you, that ye may have a fulness of solid satisfaction and joy in this delightful and holy fellowship with God. 5. Now, as the knowledge of what God is, and who shall inherit this grand promise of eternal life, is necessary to your having comfortable fellowship with him, know that Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit have taught us, that we might publish it unto you, that God is an absolutely perfect Spirit, infinite in wisdom, purity, blessedness, and glory, without the least mixture of anything defective or sinful. 6. It is therefore plain, that all pretences to hold comfortable fellowship with him, or hopes of the eternal enjoyment of him, while we indulge ourselves in ignorance, error, or any sinful practices, are but an evidence of our hypocrisy, give the lie to our Christian profession, and are a practical contradiction to the nature and will of God, and to the whole tenor and design of the gospel, and even to the very nature and truth of things. 7. But if, as children of the light, we, according to our profession, habitually, delightfully, and progressively think, speak, and act under the direction and influence of his Spirit, in the ways of truth and holiness, according to the rule of gospel revelation, and after the pattern of God himself, in knowledge, wisdom, holiness, and comfort, then we, as well as our fellow-Christians, share in a joint interest, communication, intimacy, and intercourse with him: and the foundation of this fellowship is, that the infinitely precious atoning blood of Jesus Christ, our anointed Saviour, his eternal and eminently beloved Son, is continually efficacious for cleansing us from the guilt, condemnation, and power of all our sins, and at last from all the inbeing and effects of it. 8. If any of us, who pretend to be cleansed by the blood of Christ, are so ignorant, proud, and vain, as to imagine that, in this present state of weakness and mortality, we are perfectly purified from all the inclinations and workings of sin, we certainly deceive our own souls; and neither the truth of God's word, which declares the contrary, nor any true light of knowledge, grace, or holiness, is found in us. 9. But if, under an humbling sense of our sinful imperfections and works, we sincerely confess them to the Lord, with faith in Christ's propitiatory sacrifice, for the forgiveness of them, and with penitential shame, contrition, and abhorrence of them, and full purpose of heart by his grace to forsake them, he, in the faithful accomplishment of his promises, and in justice to the merit of his Son, will, for his sake, freely and fully forgive us all our sins, original and actual, and cleanse us from all the reigning power and defilement thereof, that we may be fitted for communion with him in this world and in that which is to come. 10. If we pretend that we have not transgressed the law of God, so as to need pardon by the blood, and sanctification by the Spirit of Christ, we deny the truth of what he has testified concerning every man in his word; and thereby show that the truth of MY [a]little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate* with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

2 And he is the propitiation† for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.‡

3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6 He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7 Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you; because [b]the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.

9 He [c]that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

10 [d]He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none *occasion of stumbling in him:

11 [e]But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

12 I write unto you, little children, because [f]your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, [g]fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, [h]young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I [i]write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because [k]ye are strong, and the word of God [l]abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15 [m]Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 [n]For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the

* We have (not "he has") an advocate.—For while it is a Christian duty to exhort a sinner to repent and pray that his sin may be forgiven (Acts 8. 22), the object of the apostle here, as in ch. 5. 16) is to encourage believers who have not sinned after the similitude of others, to intercede for them at the throne of grace, even as Christ prayed for Peter in the prospect of Satanic temptation. Luke 22. 31, 32.—Ed.

† Propitiation.—Atoning sacrifice;—not to dispose God to become merciful;—"for God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son"—but so to "put away sin" that "God might be just, while the justifier of him (the sinner) that believeth in Jesus."—Ed.

‡ "And (but) not for our sins only (who are Jews), but also for (the sins of) the whole world" of the Gentiles likewise, "who have received like precious faith with us" (2 Pet. 1. 1), and, with us, "walk in the light as he is in the light,"—"have fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," whose "blood cleanseth (both) us (and them) from all sin." ch. 1. 3, 7.—Ed.

the gospel, which supposes us sinners, and leads us to Christ for salvation from sin, has no place in us.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—It is delightful when ministers preach Christ from experimental knowledge of him. But incontestible is the evidence we have of the gospel revelation concerning him and his benefits: and glorious is the fellowship which believers are thereby led into with him and his Father.—There is an absolute necessity of justification through his blood, and of holiness in heart and life, in order to have delightful fellowship with an infinitely high and holy JEHOVAH. And absurd is it to pretend that we either are, or have been, without sin in this world, or that we have fellowship with God, while we indulge ourselves in any sin. It is a great comfort, under all our felt and detested pollutions, that Jesus' blood is sufficient to cleanse us; and God, as faithful to his promise and just to his Son, must pardon and sanctify us. What an encouragement is this to gospel repentance, cordial confession, and earnest reformation!
